Black Weekend to Study Barriers to "Liberation"

by Neal Novack
Staff Reporter

"Liberation Through Awareness" is the theme of a 30-hour black marathon this weekend. The project is under the co-sponsorhip of the Afro-American Organization and Fine Arts Council.

Events to be held will include films, poetry reading, seminars, discussions, theatre, and a jazz concert-13 separate events in all.

Friday's program will begin with a speech by Steve Moore, chairman of the Black Awareness Coordinating Committee, in Thompson Tower Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. The program will continue at 8:00 with Leroy Richardson, a graduate student in the UMass School of Education, making a presentation of black images through music.

A documentary film, "Phyllis and Terry", which deals with the life of two adolescent black girls living in Manhattan's lower east side, will be shown at 9:30.

The program will resume at noon, Saturday, in SBA, Room 116, with a seminar conducted by William Wilkinson, of the Holyoke Community College faculty. A film entitled "Black Mood" made by Steve Bowden of CCENS will also be shown at this time. "Phyllis and Terry" will be repeated at 2 p.m.

Mahar will be the scene of a "Black-White Student Power" discussion at 2:30. Participating on the panel will be Gil Salk of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council; Robert Henderson, spokesman for the Afro-American Organization; John Wilson, chairman of Afro-Am at Holyoke Community College; and Paul Silverman, President of the Student Senate.

"Black Identity---Then What?", a forum conducted by moderator William Smith, co-chairman of the UMass Afro-Am group, will host Sylvester, a Muslim from New York City; Frank Hughes of the Black Panther Party, Boston; Mc Kinley Moore, former director of Black House, Springfield; Steve Moore of the Black Awareness Committee; and Mike Theiwell, UMASS graduate student.

The play, "New Haven Riots" will be performed by the Black Reality, a theatre group from New Haven, at Bowker at 7:30 p.m. The play will be followed by a Boston Contemporary Jazz Quartet concert at 9 p.m.

All events are open to the public without charge, except for the "New Haven Riots" play and the concert by the Contemporary Jazz Quartet. A limited number of tickets will be available to the public and may be purchased at the Student Union Ticket Office.

The final black awareness event will be poetry reading, at 10:30 p.m., Saturday, at Mahar.

Curriculum Problems Discussed In Second King Council Forum

by Richard W. Story
Education Editor

The King Social Action Council sponsored a second session of open public discussion on the problem of the curriculum at a panel presentation in Mahar Auditorim last evening. Associate Provost Allen, Dean I. M. Hunsberger (CAS), Rev. David Purdy, Gil Salk and Richard Story arrayed themselves on the dias to assist with the effort at shedding some light on where we're at, how we got here, and where we might go from here.

The effort was not wholly an unqualified success. The complexities of the issues became lost, sadly, amidst a great deal of heated rhetoric. Probably the single issue to emerge most clearly from the evening's talk was that of the necessity for exorcising demons from contemporary analyses of the academic predicament.

Dave Purdy opened the session by speaking of some recent actions, as with the Metropolitan Action Seminar, that have shown promise of suggesting new directions for education in general, and education regarding urban problems in particular. His points were well made; but became garbled in subsequent handling. Marshall Mc Luhan suggest, and possibly with some accuracy, that electronic technology is rendering present education rapidly obsolete. If this is so, what can be done about this situation?The answer was not made clear.

A further problem broached was that of a university's goals. The fact that a university does have goals - explicit, and clearly stated - wasn't completely clear to the audience. Ryan Drum suggested that pleasure is the ultimate goal of every activity. True or not, this fails to affix a manageable handle to university business and proceedings. The overwhelming bulk of what a university does today is a function of the three commonly-stated goals that adorn the lobby of Whitmore - teaching, research and service (but not necessarily in that order).

Dean Hunsberger spoke briefly of some current planning in his office for revision of the Arts and Sciences curriculum. One particular direction that he sees as crucial is to loosen the presently strangling hold of the departments on areas of specialization. As things stand today, if a department won't offer it, it can't be had as a major. This has got to change - this much seemed clear to panelists and audience alike. Just how this will be effected remains to be worked out.

RFK's Last Girl Born

WASHINGTON (AP) - Her 11th child, an eight-pound, four-ounce daughter was born to Ethel Kennedy, at Georgetown University Hospital Thursday.

She has three other daughters and seven sons, ranging in age from 18 months to 17 years. Her husband was assassinated in June in Los Angeles shortly after winning the California Democratic presidential primary.

The new daughter was the fifth child delivered by Caesarean section to Mrs. Kennedy. Both she and the girl were reported by the family as doing well.

Attorney vs. Crime

NEW YORK (AP) - A former Wyoming city attorney who says his house was blown up after he exposed a narcotics ring has joined Citizens for Justice with Order, a new group which hopes to involve millions of Americans in the war on crime.

Samuel T. Ishmael, 36, former city attorney of Rawlins, Wyo., will be a full-time aide to the citizens' group, which has received about 10,000 letters in the week since comedian Bob Hope kicked off its campaign.

Businessman H. Bruce Palmer, founder of the movement, said Ishmael, who now lives in Phoenix, Ariz., will be a fulltime aide and spend most of his time traveling the country helping individuals and groups with anit-crime projects.

Uncle Sam Dies

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C. (AP) - When Arthur St. Clair Davis retired from his job as a parcel post delivery man for the Post Office 30 years ago, he began looking for something to add a dash of excitement to his life.

So he grew a goatee, bought a red, white and blue suit of clothes and began leading parades as a living replica of Uncle Sam.

So striking was the resemblance between the symbol and the man that Davis suddenly found himself in demand for parades and various patriotic functions across the land. He led parades in Chicago and New York as his reputation grew. He was an arresting figure in his costume - a tall, ruddy-faced man with white hair.

But other Uncle Sams will now have to lead the parades. Davis, 89, died Wednesday after suffering a heart attack.

The SUG Board voted last night to keep in effect their policy of no picketing in the Student Union.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A Harvard faculty committee meeting on the future of Reserve Officer Training at Harvard was called off Thursday night when 115 students, many of them members of Students for a Democratic Society, refused to leave the faculty meeting hall.

More than 200 students gathered at Paine Hall where the faculty meeting was to be held behind closed doors.

Fred L. Glimp, dean of the college, told the students that if they remained in the hall it would be regarded as the "most serious breach of discipline" in his tenure at the college.

The students then voted on remaining, and 115 elected to stay.

They were there when the faculty committee entered.

The community immediately postponed action to Jan. 7 and adjourned without any other action.

Deans of the college went through the student group in the balcony picking up Bursar's cards, which are identification cards students are required to show to take part in all college activities.

When the cards are picked up it is the first step in disciplinary action.

An MDC Review

A Different Look at Life

"A Man and a Woman", a French film of a chance encounter between two people that eventually leads to a different more realistic look at love than their previous lives had allowed. The woman, a young widow, lived in her past life of idealized love with a man who in her words was just wonderfully "unusual" and in the uppermost crest of life.

The man, a racing-driver entered in the Monte Carlo Rally, remembered his dead wife with less happiness and perhaps a bit of regret. Thus the two met while on a Sunday outing at their children's school. Both enmeshed in their own personal need to restructure their present lives, they reached out to one another, warily but with unconscious determination.

Seen on two levels, one can find much to dissect from this movie. The subtle and sometimes obvious interplay of radio announcements, music, and photography toss reality and past fantasies into the total experience of this man and woman.

The children and a dog running on the beach with the pulsing waves, innocently realized life and living and helped expose the encompassing beauty it can contain. The man and woman chose life and relinquished the past to memory.

James Hall Arrested By University Police Wednesday

James Hall, the "black guest" whose alleged beating sparked the November confrontation between the Administration and the Afro-Am Society was arrested for trespassing on University property Wednesday night by Campus Police.

Hall, who was barred from the Campus after the beating incident was proved a hoax, was seen in the Hill area by a security guard who notified University Police. A hearing has been set for Jan. 3, and Hall was released on personal recognizance. He was supposedly on campus to visit a friend.

Richard Nixon's selection of cabinet members, announced yesterday, included only "business-like" Republicans. The absent of women and Negro members may cause the new administration several problems with these groups.

Mansfield Comments On Nixon's Cabinet

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said Thursday President-elect Richard M. Nixon has informed him he intends to be flexible, not rigid, in dealing with foreign policy.

Nixon told this to him in a telephone call after the election, said Mansfield who then went on to praise the selection of William P. Rogers as secretary of state as one who would fit in with this approach.

"The fact that he is not a foreign affairs expert is in his favor," Mansfield said of the attorney general in the Eisenhower administration.

The Montana senator, an early advocate of the de-escalation of the Vietnam war, told newsmen he hasn't the slightest idea how Rogers stands on the war.

But he said Rogers has impressed him as a man who is "open-minded and flexible, one who is willing to look at all sides and arrive at independent judgments."

Mansfield said he is not familiar with all the men Nixon chose for his Cabinet but added it appears to be "a pretty well balanced, middle-of-the-road group."

He said he does not think the fact that no Democrats were included would hurt Nixon's relations with the Senate or the House, in which the Democrats will continue to have majorities.

As for the lack of women or Negroes in the Cabinet, Mansfield said that "no Cabinet should be selected on the basis of race, creed, color, or sex."

"These things are immaterial," he said, adding that appointments should be made on the basis of qualifications.

With respect to the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, on which Senate action was delayed at the last session of Congress, Mansfield said he doubts if it will be brought up in the new Senate before Jan. 20, the date of Nixon's inauguration.

Mansfield said he hopes to make the treaty the first order of business in the Senate, but he said the Foreign Relations Committee may want to hold brief, additional hearings on it.

While reiterating that he still favors a resolution calling for a reduction of U.S. troops in Europe, Mansfield said nothing can be done about it now because of the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Dump Johnson Leader Seen Key Figure of Democratic Unity

The successful bid for a Nassau County Congressional seat signalled the surfacing of underground politician Allard K. Lowenstein who, many believe, may be instrumental in the future reshaping of the divided Democratic party.

An occasional lawyer, sometimes college teacher, and full-time liberal, Lowenstein succeeded in organizing the Dump Johnson movement, tried to convince Robert Kennedy to run, and fought to get the nomination for McCarthy.

In the December issue of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, Pulitzer Prize winner David Halberstam traces Lowenstein's progress from 1967 when he first formed plans to oust LBJ, through his role in the Chicago Convention.

During this period Lowenstein travelled 288,021 miles, including a trip to Vietnam, made 2,367 speeches in 1,392 cities, and accomplished what the pros believed was impossible.

Now in public office for the first time, Lowenstein is simultaneously trying to acquire respectability and establish his own power base, reports Mr. Halberstam.

Despite Lowenstein's success in dislodging Johnson, many have considered him a gadfly, and a perennial student leader because of his lack of official status and the multitude of causes which have engaged his interest.

He has also been the target of the New Left, which charges that he has exploited youth on behalf of the system.

One of the few remaining liberals who exerts strong appeal on college campuses, Lowenstein is ironically separated from the radical left because of his respectability, says Mr. Halberstam.

"The radical left has turned completely on the system; it does not respect the way the system operates, its structure of power, and feels free to violate any of the country's rules. Lowenstein is more middle - class, more responsible, still believing in the system, and its limits on dissent," he writes.

Convinced that any movement to rid the country of Johnson must come from within the system and inside the framework of the Democratic party, Lowenstein first made early, unsuccessful attempts to entice Robert Kennedy and later George McGovern into the race for the Presidential nomination, reports Mr. Halberstam.

Later, as a member of the McCarthy team, Lowenstein's position was, "curiously ambivalent. Lowenstein is in the McCarthy camp, but not of it, probably if anything he is simply too much of a politican for McCarthy who wants as few politicians around him as possible. Possibly when Lowenstein is around, McCarthy senses he is listening to a voice of the Kennedy's," he writes.

Government Research Bureau Releases New Publications

The University of Massachusetts Bureau of Government Research has added two new publications to its series on governmental issues in the state, region and nation.

The first, "Rivers and Regionalism in New England" by Edwin Andrus Gere, Jr., assistant director of the bureau and assistant professor of government, is a study of regional water resources cooperation in New England. It seeks an identification, observation and analysis of actual functional patterns of federal-interstate cooperation.

The pamphlet considers early attempts at regional flood control unity and views those early regional efforts in retrospect. Gere analyzes post-World War II progress in flood and water pollution control, studies various water resources plans, and concludes with an assessment of joint regional cooperation.

The second publication is "Urbanizing the Bureau Philosophy: Papers and Commentaries," edited by associate professor of government Dr. David A. Booth, research coordinator of the Bureau of Government Research.

This pamphlet reflects a fresh evaluation of research and public affairs programs and a re-examination of the function of university-sponsored government research bureaus. The papers were originally prepared for presentation at the annual meeting of the American Society for Public Administration at Boston in March, 1968.

One of the major proposals set forth in the collection of articles is that universities must respond to the challenge of the cities, and that within the universities, Bureaus of Government Research, institutes of Public Administration and related programs must reorganize to assume these new urban responsibilities.

Collectively, the authors see a need to restructure the land grant philosophy, designed to contribute to the improvement of small town and rural life, to enable universities to respond now to urban needs.

English Council Aids In Policy Control

The English Department this fall instituted the English Undergraduate Council (EDUC). The purpose of the council, consisting of 40 elected majors from eight areas on campus, is to aid in determining Department policy. Areas of concern to the council include reviewing curriculum, scouting of new faculty candidates, acting in an advisory capacity on departmental committees, evaluating teaching methods, etc.

The Council represents some 1250 English majors on campus, and has been in effect for approximately one month. Members have been meeting regularly with their respective faculty committees.

Michael Quinlan, president, says of EDUC: "Thus far the successes of the Council have resulted from the willingness of the faculty to support student participation; the failures of the Council have resulted from the failure of the students to participate."

Non-council majors are greatly encouraged to come to meetings and possibly participate on various committees (a few of which are in need of more personnel). The next meeting will be Tuesday, January 28, at 7:00 PM in Room 301 Bartlett Hall. Professor Paul Sanders is the Council's elected advisor.

The annual Hatch pre-holiday Roast Turkey dinner will be served Sunday, Dec. 15 at these times:

11:00 AM - 2:30 PM
4:30 PM - 7:00 PM

Recordings of Christmas music will be provided between 11:30 AM and 2 PM.

University Begins Pollution Project

The University of Massachusetts Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology has begun a federally-funded project designed to help high school students learn more about water pollution.

Supported by a Federal Water Pollution Control Administration grant of $41,969, the microbiology institute will give a six-week institute in water pollution control for 20 high school teachers this summer.

"The unique thing about this summer institute is the follow-up program designed to find out how much of what we teach is getting to the students," said institute director Warren Litsky.

The follow-up, under the direction of Dr. L.J. Thelen of the School of Education, will be a survey during the academic year following the institute of science classes taught by participating teachers. The survey will try to measure the water pollution control information possessed by these students as compared to a control group of science class students whose teachers have not attended the institute.

Also part of the follow-up program will be a series of Saturday conferences at UMass in Amherst in the academic year following the summer institute. The four sessions will include lectures and workshop activities on water pollution topics plus discussions of teaching problems and progress.

The summer course work will focus on the application of engineering, chemistry, microbiology and aquatic biology to water pollution problems, and will study the legal, institutional and social setting in which water pollution problems are worked out.

Such courses as water pollution law, economics of water pollution control, political science and social institutions, sanitary engineering, microbiology, chemistry, aquatic biology and curriculum materials workshop will be taught.

The interdisciplinary faculty directed by Dr. Litsky will include such UMass specialists as sanitary engineering Professor Tsuan Hua Feng, Water Resources Research Center director Bernard B. Berger, wildlife biologist Charles F. Cole, professor of government Irving Howards, environmental engineer Rolf T. Skrinde and others.

Stipends will be paid participants and six graduate credits will be awarded on completion. Applicants must be teachers from New England in Grades 9 through 12 with a bachelor's degree, some concentration in the biological sciences and chemistry and at least two years of high school science teaching experience.

Further information on the summer institute is available from Dr. Litsky, Marshall Hall, or Dr. Thelen, School of Education, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002.

Editor Hodding Carter Predicts Rightist Turn in Southern Politicts

NORTHAMPTON- The editor of a Democratic Mississippi newspaper predicted a "turn to the right" in Southern politics during the next four years in a speech here Wednesday evening.

Thirty-three-year-old Hodding Carter III, editor of the Greenville Delta-Democrat Times and co-chairman of the Loyal Democrats of Mississippi delegation seated in place of regular party members at the Chicago Democratic Convention, saw the future as gloomy for the party in the South.

Speaking at Smith College in its annual Billings Lecture series, Carter urged the Democratic Party to "recognize itself as the minority party in the South," noting the failure of the party to carry any Southern state but Texas. He urged the party to appeal to the white liberal and black minorities in an effort to rebuild itself. He also believes that the party should purge itself of its Southern Congressmen who supported former Alabama Governor George Wallace's candidacy in the presidential race.

Carter believes that Wallace's and the extreme-right Democrats' views will gain strength in the region. He noted that in some Southern states, Democratic Congressmen now "can't even be New Dealers, even if they did their thing"-took a Wallace line on civil rights-"on the races."

The newspaperman, co-chairman of the Young Democrats of Mississippi and a Democratic National Committeewoman in the 1964 presidential campaign, predicted only limited success for the Republican Party in the South.

"The white South in general," he said, "has caught on with this whole business of 'making it.' There is the new suburbia, the new industrialism, the new affluence, with a demand that the new status quo must be held so that the other guy can't get what some Southerners have gained for the first time."

The Neiman Fellow from Harvard University from 1965 to 1966 forecast however, that, if these Southerners could be convinced that the Republican Party was "speaking their own language," the Party "could become the new country club party across the South." Outside this stratum of voters, however, he saw "little future for President-elect Nixon's New Republicanism in the South."

Conceding that "there would be losses" for the Democratic Party in the South, Carter urged its Democratic organization to turn to leaders like Georgia's State Representative Julian Bond and Charles Evers in Mississippi.

"Experimental" Story In D. U. P. Lecture

The Distinguished Visitor's Program presented John Barth Wednesday evening to a standing-room only crowd in Mahar Auditorium.

Barth read his experimental work "MENELAIAD".

"MENELAIAD" is composed of short stories following a mythical theme, specially prepared for its adaptability and flexibility in the different media. It is divided into fourteen parts, moving from beginning to maximum completion and back to beginning again. The work was intended primarily for live-and-voice-print, however tape and graphic materials may be employed.

At his presentation last night Barth used live-voice and such graphic materials as numbers denoting which section of the work he was reading and posters held for audience viewing during the reading (with question marks, etc.) as they supported an idea or special point.

Questions raised of the mind and of reality, the nature of the story, and voice techniques contributed to the work's exploratory character. The results, deliverately aimed at, illustrate the non-experimental nature of the work.

The myths employed come mainly from the Fourth Book of the "Odyssey", where Odysseus' son is entertained in the Court of King Menelaus. While telling the boy of the fate of his father, Menelaus relates stories of the Trojan War.

Barth is also the author of the Books: 'THE FLOATING OPERA', 'THE END OF THE ROAD', THE SOT-WEED FACTORY', and 'GILES GOAT-BOY'.

U.S., Siagon Set New Plans For Peace Talk Resumption

PARIS (AP) - U. S. and South Vietnamese envoys agreed Thursday on new plans for settling the procedural dispute blocking the start of expanded Vietnamese peace talks.

The new allied proposals are likely to be submitted to Col. Ha Van Lau of North Vietnam in a day or so by Ambassador Cyrus R. Vance, Harriman's deputy.

Informants said the revised plans are based firmly on the principle set forth in the Nov. 27 agreemen between Presidents Johnson and Nguyen Van Thieu: That the peace conference be run as a two-sided affair with the Viet Cong delegates sitting as part of North Vietnam's delegation.

However, a high Viet Cong source said it is essential for his Communist - led group to be treated an an equal and independent delegation, at the conference. Otherwise, the informant implied, there would be no negotiations.

The allied move was announced after Harriman, Vance and advisor Philip Habib conferred for 1-1/2 hours with Ky, Ambassador Pham Dang Lam, the delegation leader, and Bui Diem, ambassador to Washington.

"We are going to present the other side with some new proposals," Ky said.

Harriman remarked to newsmen he had found Ky "very flexible" on the matters so long as they conformed with "the principles both of us are committed to."

This was a reference to the Johnson-Thieu accord that enabled the Saigon government to end its boycott of the expanded peace talks held up since last Nov. 6.

In a meeting with Vance, Wednesday, Lam invoked that agreement.

"Sissies! Where's Your Anti-School Spirit?"

INSIDE REPORT:

The Good, Gray Cabinet

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON-President-elect Nixon's surprise choice of William Pierce Rogers as Secretary of State, the supreme Cabinet job, exactly fits the qualifications Mr. Nixon has established for the top officials in his Administration-proficient men conspicuously lacking in the kind of glamor that marked the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations.

Moreover, the selection of non-diplomat, non-foreign affairs expert Rogers is the most positive sign yet that Mr. Nixon is going to run the government not through glittering experts with high reputations in their fields but through trusted old friends, some of them long-time cronies, whose loyalties to him are beyond question.

With Rogers at the helm of the State Department, for example, there is no question about who will run the nation's foreign policy. Mr. Nixon himself will be in charge, far more so than if he had tapped a celebrated member of the Eastern Republican foreign policy establishment, such as Douglas Dillon or New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

The same yardstick can be equally applied to Mr. Nixon's Secretary of Defense, Rep. Melvin Laird. Laird has no constituency outside his own Congressional bailiwick in Wisconsin and his highly respectful colleagues in the House. As boss of the Pentagon, Laird is peculiarly Nixon's man, and that is precisely the way the President-elect wants it.

That is not to say that Laird at Defense and Rogers at State are not good choices. As we reported earlier in breaking the news of his appointment, Laird is totally inexperienced in large managerial jobs but he has major assets: a deep knowledge of the economics of the Defense Department, including a detailed understanding of competing weapons systems; plus a calculated strategy on cold war geopolitical issues, which, as a shrewd politican, he will never exempt from domestic politics.

As for Rogers, his public exposure to foreign policy is limited to a brief stint as one of 10 U.S. Representatives to the 1965 UN General Assembly and a specialized job there in 1967 as a temporary Presidential envoy. But he goes to the State Department with two advantages: an intimacy with the President that no Secretary of State has had in at least half a century; and a lawyer's approach to foreign policy("lawyers are problem-solvers," a top State Department official told us, "and Rogers is a helluva lawyer").

Moreover, Rogers's appointment is being received in the elegant circles of Manhattan's Republican establishment with a profound sigh of relief. Although Dillon was the preferred choice, Rogers is well-known from his days as President Eisenhower's Attorney General and highly regarded.

Beyond that, Mr. Nixon's major Cabinet choices reflect another common theme--they are not tied to policies of the past.

For Rogers, this is vitally important. There is reason to believe, for example, that a major easing of Red China's approach to the U.S. is now in the offing. Nixon men feel that Rogers will have far more flexibility to exploit potential breakthroughs like that than foreign affairs experts wrapped up in past policies.

There is, finally, one other Nixon characteristic that his choice of top Cabinet aides illuminates like a hot floodlight: his refusal to take chances with outsiders he doesn't know well or who might have the slightest taint of divided loyalty.

With Rogers and Laird at the top, and old friend Robert Finch nailing down the key domestic affairs Cabinet post, Nixon will be surrounded by loyal intimates. Thus, Nixon promises to bring the most personalized Administration to Washington that the town has seen since Franklin Roosevelt's second Administration.

The Daily Collegian would like anyone who had had any difficulties in regard to towing on campus to call 253-3527 (Amherst) and ask for Joe. This request is in regard to an upcoming report in the Daily Collegian.

What Does Chicago Mean?

Many people who were shocked by police behavior in Chicago last August were not the least bit surprised when the Walker report called the violence in that city a police riot. Certainly the report that the police were severely provoked was not unexpected, but in light of the staunch defense accorded the police by Mayor Daley and many Democratic officials, the report that the police acted unrestrained, with out discipline. and in gang-like fashion has left these people red-faced. Is this a reflection on Chicago or is this a reflection on the corrupt, inferior lot of the local policemen in the big cities of our country today?

What IS the lot of a police officer in a big city such as Chicago today? As has been pointed out often in recent studies on law-enforcement, including the Kerner Commission Report, the average education of a policeman in a big city is often not good. Therefore, they generally start off under-educated and because of the low entrance requirements for police training can gain admission into this underpaid, often unrespected, profession. What does this mean to residents of the city in which this police officer patrols his beat? He is insensitive and has little understanding of many of the problems he confronts in the cities today. With his low pay and already low/r respected position he is highly susceptible to the enticements of the "Mob" and instead of enforcing the law, he solidifies that which he is sworn to break down. This point is emphasized in the current edition of LIFE.

What did all this mean in Chicago? Fearful that these demonstrators who were attacking the Establishment were, in effect, attacking their cherished position as upholders of the Establishment, these same policemen who have been on the take for so long and have been ignoring authority revert to form and viciously attack their foes where restraint and order could have eliminated almost all violence.

The problems of our cities today are deep and certainly one of the worst problems is corruption and lack of order within the police departments. One part to the solution to this major problem is better training, better pay, and an overall cleanup in the law enforcement departments of our cities. If this is not done, more Chicagos will occur in which the corruption of the city will manifest itself in the form of the unprovoked and senseless violence.

Our Common Burden

Members of the so called "academic community" of the University of Massachusetts have become quite aware of a need for far-reaching reforms in their "communal" environment. In Amherst, as well as in the rest of the United States and the world, individuals are feeling that the universities are out of touch with society at large, and that our society itself is badly in need of repair, or perhaps of overhaul.

The question has become: How do we change?, and in particular: "How do we change the University of Massachusetts? It is often said that "Change is in the process. Reform must be through channels." Channels and red tape are set up by administrators: and for what purpose--to stifle change? It is not the administrators role to stifle. It is the administrators role to innovate.

A recent study at UMass has shown that around half of the power to change is in the hands of the administration. Others, including administrators themselves, feel that they have an even greater voice than that. The question becomes: Does the administration have a will to change? What stimulus for reform has the administration provided? I personally see no stimulus or urge to innovate, on the part of administrators.

If administrators have the necessary position to innovate reforms, why all of the red tape of committees, sub-committees, and sub-sub-committees. Is it because the administrators are afraidof our puritanical Massachusetts citizenship. A President of the University of Colorado recently lost his job because he was an innovator. Would our President Lederle, or any of the administrators under him. be willing to make an honest attempt at a real reform? I sincerely doubt it; but I am still a bit hopeful.

What is necessary to get innovative administrators? It takes an effort on the part of students to make administrators aware. The generally conservative. "Joe College", committeeman, Student Senator, Parliamentarian type of person will ot stimulate an administrator to activity. It is going take the voices of the many people who feel a need for real change and reform in this University, it will take the voices of students talking with administrators, and administrators with students. And the administrators must hear and feel the spoken words not only listen to them.

UMass is not an "academic community", unless it is one of three very distinct parts - faculty, students, and administration. Let's change that- before we too, are a Columbia or a San Francisco State. To change that we need communication, and with communication will come reform.

Phys. Ed. Paper

To the editor:

I am not by nature a rebellious individual. As a freshman, I am perfectly willing to accept three hours of Physical Education weekly on faith (for no academic credit). I t is really a small inconvenience to run from Boyden Gymnasium to Orchard Hill in 15 minutes. (It does keep me in trim, which my trampoline class fails to accomplish.)

I must confess, however, that while the act of bounding on a trampoline is an exhilarating experience, the prospect of a written term paper is not. Admittedly the choice of topics presents a challenge. I am somewhat partial to a "Discussion of Physchological Principles of Motor Learning and Their Relation to Gymnastics," although a "Discussion of the Values of Gymnastics" does have it humanistic charm. Since the length of these subject s would permit an extensive study, I was relieved that my graduate instructor did not specify a particular length. It is sufficient that "the subject is thoroughly covered".

To require a paper of this nature seems extreme. Occupied with my academic courses, I was tempted to disregard the assignment, (I don't need the "credits"). I don't want trouble though, so I'll write the paper, and dutifully pass it in. All I want is an explanation.

Collegian: Quality

To the editor:

Last night, as you well know, the Student Senate defeated a motion to return all unencumbered funds in the Daily Collegian 'Specials" account to the general fund. In this action, as in others, I supported the Daily Collegian, believing that the campus newspaper should be given as much freedom to innovate as possible.

On any campus of this size, communications are a real problem. Student Government, Academic Departments, the administration, all depend upon the Collegian (and to a lesse r extent WMUA) to let students and faculty know what they are doing or have done. For these reasons, I have always favored giving the Daily Collegian "all they want". However, some responsibility is attached to your side of the deal; that is, to provide accurate, extensive, campus coverage, of a quality appropriate to a newspaper with a circulation of over 10,000 and a budget of $144,000.

In this regard, it is somewhat annoying to read that "Dwight Hsez" was enjoined on the petition of Vice President "Hatwell". More serious is such drivel as the so-called Music "Reviews" which consist simply of a string of glowing and irrelevant adjectives, or the sophomoric article castigating Geology 101. Also, while I'm getting this all off my chest, there is an all too prevalent tendency, as press time approaches, to reach for the AP wire and its ever-ready supply of filler, with the result that campus news coverage is relegated to inside pages if it is present at all.

Let me make myself clear. I am not saying that the Daily Collegian budget should be cut, or that it should return to a tri-weekly, or that it should give up the AP wire. I am quite prepared to support additional issues, expanded wire services, and even incentives for staffers, if the result is a QUALITY NEWSPAPER WITH BROAD CAMPUS COVERAGE!

Maryjane and the Law

To the editor:

The Student Senate this week touched peripherally on one of the underlying weaknesses of the American political-legal situation when it was presented a proposal concerning the legalization of marijuana. The philosophical question posed by laws such as those which currently prohibit the use of marijuana is threefold; does the state have the duty to protect its citizens from themselves, does the state have the right to attempt to protect citizens from themselves, who will be responsible for defining what a citizen need be protected against?

The ramifications of these questions touch on such areas as laws against certain sexual acts between married couples, between consenting adults. These laws deal with pronography, birth control, abortion, drug use, gambling, homosexuality, sale of alcohol to minors or on Sundays. They deal with the vast and confusing area of 'victimless crimes'. Regardless of ones attitude toward a specific law, the same ethical premises can be shown as the cause for the enactment of all of these laws. What must be examined, then, is the necessity of these premises.

It is perhaps a cliche to say that the state is the servant of the people and oversteps its bounds when it begins to subject the people to its will. However, laws against victimless crimes are a prime example of the state assuming the role of superior. Of course laws are necessary, and the traditional defense of law is that it serves to protect the citizens from criminals and the disruptive. While some individuals suffer as a result of the law, the great majority benefit from the protection and security which law and its enforcement provide.

Not so with victimless crimes. Punishment of the 'offender' in these cases does absolutely nothing for the protection and security of the majority of citizens, but supposedly protects the 'criminal' from himself. As an example, I was once fined $50 for drinking under age. I had offended no one while drinking and was in fact being very quiet at the time. I had been drinking for some years prior to my arrest with no ill effects, and have continued to drink to the present. Somehow the state felt that I needed to be protected from myself. I often thought about this law while in Europe, giving money to the landlady's ten year old daughter to bicycle to the grocery store to get me some beer.

Recall if you will the blackmailed homosexual, the police-extorted prostitute, the secretive grass smoker, the woman ruined by the illegal abortionist, the nervous unmarried lovers at the motel, the kids drinking beer in the car. Your state protects them all...from themselves. Censorship laws protected our parents from reading "Ulysses," protected a generation from Oscar Wilde's fairy tales. Laws kept our parents from drinking alcohol for years. These particular laws do not exist any longer, but the philosophy which enacted them is still strong. It is the duty of the citizen to consider this philosophy, and having done so, to attempt to end its sway on the lawmakers and law enforcers of America.

Yuletide and Love

To the editor:

Christmas means decorated trees, Santa, and carolers. But even more, it means loving and living, for Christmas is the celebration of the birth of the most known person and religious leader in history, Christ. His physical life was short, but the impact he had on the world, keeps him still very alive. He knew how to live intensely --total involvement and love.

Ask yourself if you are really living? I did, and I'll honestly admit I didn't like the answer. Are you becoming involved with people and, therefore, with life? Have you asked questions, searched for answers, and loved? Most important have you learned how to love another person? And I'm not only talking about sex: I mean can you extend yourself to another person and under - stand and help him? Or are you considering how to get the most and give the least? You will think and do what you like, but please first consider this:

Thing you do
Now or Never -
Which do you?

Cum Represents...

To the editor:

Although " 'tis the season to be jolly" I'm sure there are many students presently concerned with such trivia as borderline grades, oscillating cums, flunking - out and the Dean's List. Many are acclimated to being described as a two-digit neuter decimal and feel that this two-dimensional description is congruent with the form of their academic endeavors. As some sit on Santa's reMARKable lap this year and he asks, "Have you been good my child?", they will probably answer, "2.0 Sir" or "3.5, Mr. Claus" . They will feel satisfied that they will be justly rewarded because that number says so much.

I don't think the cume sings "Jingle Bells" on key. I don't think you can roll a student's academic record, hours of productive learning, into a number and expect to really evaluate a student.

I' m also certain that the present grading system is not a successful servant to the student in that it does not provide accurate evaluation and induces a pressure to obtain a grade instead of learning. The present grading system replaces real initiative in learning with a desire to acquire some quantitative recognition of his activity. The student studies not to satiate his innate desire for knowledge but to get a grade on an exam. The present system destroys natural motivation for knowledge.

I believe in a more extensive pass - fail system in required courses and in a finer grading system in major courses. I believe such alterations in the system will alleviate pressure for grades. It would set the student mind at ease because of its fairness and thus increase overall learning.

If you have any opinion to offer on this proposal or have a better one yourself or just want to contribute some time to changing the academic climate of this campus, there will be an organizational meeting on the main floor of John Adams Sunday at 7 o'clock. Yes I think things really can happen if you're really interested.

Smith Aids Biafrans

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - Some $1667 has been raised in a Smith College effort to aid starving Biafrans.

The money was collected by a student-faculty committee. Members of the college community and Northampton residents contributed to the fund.

The money was sent through two non-political organizations, Church World Service and Catholic Relief Services.

In a letter sent to the Smith College Student-Faculty Committee on Nigeria-Biafra Relief James MacCracken, executive director of Church World Service, thanked its members for their "spontaneous and outstanding response to agonized starvation in Nigeria and Biafra."

MacCracken wrote, "Already, I have been able to utilize your contributions in declaring availability for immediate shipment of 150 tons of desperately needed foods as well as several hundred pounds of specifically designated medicines."

Discussion On New Grading Policy

The Grading Policy Task Force, a unit of the Academic Affairs Committee, will meet this Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Committee's office, ground floor, John Adams Tower. The group is one of several mission-oriented units of the Academic Affairs Committee; and has been formed to bring together students interested in the creation of a wholly new grading policy for the University.

Charlotte Curci is heading the task force - she promises all actual or prospective members that the group intends to make a serious reappraisal of present grading practices, with an eye to proposing a wholly new system for University adoption. The present practice is most unsatisfactory, she feels; and finds this borne out by a recent survey of attitudes concerning grading.

Campus opinion - both that of students and faculty - shows strong feeling for a new system. Just what this system might be is not made completely clear by the survey - feelings were split between more precise and less precise systems. Students concerned about the question of course grading - and who isn't affected by grades! - are urged to come out to help this task force with its work. All interested are invited to attend the meeting.

Squaw Talk

Women Don't Always Talk Too Much

Women are by their nature more conservative, is the finding of a recent "Squaw Talk" survey regarding women senators. Conservative in the sense that they tend to debate less frequently and they they represent "softer" opinions on particular issues.

As a new senator, Janis Kurkjian, representing John Quincy Adams Lower, finds that women senators represent a different point of view than men senators. For example, she is against a bill that proposes disarming campus police because, she says, as a woman on campus she wants to feel protected. This protection is especially important to her after the recent attacks on women on Orchard Hill. While many men senators believe that a gun wouldn't do any good in that kind of situation, Janis said, she maintains that the security in feeling protected is important.

Janis is also against the ROTC Bill. She believes that the men involved in the ROTC program work hard and deserve the credits for their effort. A Senate bill proposes eliminating academic credit for ROTC.

"The women represent a more conservative side of the senate," Janis said.

In that sense, women are less active, in the view of Dev Cochrane, a male senator from Hills North. He said the Senate "has trouble finding energetic females who can contribute more than the 'Wednesday Night Senator' who vanishes from one Wednesday meeting to the next." He feels that the men debate more often and speak more authoritatively, but he considers this to be natural because men tend to be more aggressive.

Cindi Olken, the secretary of the Senate, agrees that women senators are less than energetic debators; however, "when they do speak what they say has more relevance". The long debates, according to Cindi, usually consist of the "stupid, irrelevant talk" of loquacious men senators.

She believes that "you don't have to speak on the floor to be an effective senator. " In fact, she says, there are many people who speak too much and say nothing.

On the other hand, Paul Papalucs, a commuter senator, considers the women senators' questions mostly irrelevant because the women usually don't listen to what's going on and consequently are not prepared to debate. The most common question asked by women senators is "What's going on?", according to Paul.

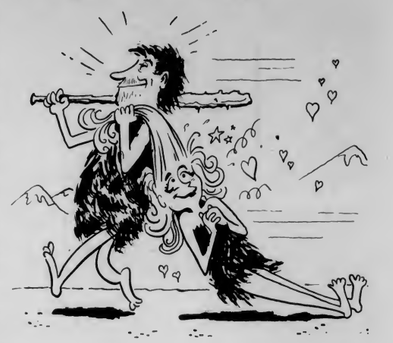
Like Janis, he believes women represent a different point of view. "The emotional issues appeal to them more than anything else," he asserted.

They do work well in committees where they are told what to do and how to do it, Paul continues. This success, he says is only because this kind of work doesn't take much intellectual thought.

Women senators, he says, are fairly efficient in keeping such things as minutes "from five years back" neatly filed. Paul agrees with Cindi that men rarely do this but "that's because they have better things to do."

"Squaw Talk" found a happy medium in Rick Staples, the senator from Washington Middle. Rick doesn't believe a distinction in governing ability should be made on the basis of sex. He says the conservatism of women senators is due to their natural shyness or that they may not be sufficiently informed. "The same thing applies to conservative male senators, however," he stated.



DAMAGING DOWRIES

Girls, if you have noticed a lack of interested males, you must realize that there is something wrong with our marriage customs. This lack might possibly be due to the fact there there is no marriage bait, meaning, of course, a dowry.

There are still some countries where the dowry is still considered to be tradition. The general opinion is that a girl cannot get a decent husband without a substantial amount put away. The larger the dowry, the wealthier the husband. At least there is one way of assuring oneself a rich husband!

We might not have any assurance of "trapping" a rich husband but take heart, girls. At least we have our matured life insurance policies to fall back on.

Suave, Smooth Men Down Through The Ages

MEN--ever puzzled by what you do--or don't do--that seems to make a smash hit with the women?

You may already realize that it's some unique combination of the burly and the suave, but the exact source of the appeal has varied from century to century...from maiden to maiden. A girl today might be impressed by '007", but if he showed up in the late Middle Ages--when long hose and flowing capes were all the thing--she might just have thought that he was absolute zero.

Throughout history the question of whether or not a guy is more attractive when he's well-groomed has been settled in various ways at various times. From the back alley wineshops of ancient Rome, the taverns of the Middle Ages and 20th - century boardrooms, researchers have collected some of the secrets of sex appeal that men have passed around.

The ancient Romans used to perfume themselves before battle, and so did Napoleon. But it wasn't until the Danes settled in England around the 11th century that the Saturday night bath washed over the Western world.

The Englishmen laughed at the fierce invaders who bathed and combed their beards before a date. But when word began to filter back that their ancient enemies were becoming just as successful in the bedrooms as they had been on the battlefield, the Britons adopted the same tactics themselves.

But centuries still had to pass before a 20th century German scientist, Professor Zwaardenmaker, put the suave approach on a practical basis for millions of men: this forgotten genius discovered the principle of deodorants.

Is long hair sexy? Sampson did all right. For the ladies of his day, long hair connoted strength--the essence of all sex appeal. But more primitive women, using the same idea, went for a man who had an arm or leg out of commission, or who had been wounded in battle. They reasoned that the strength of the limb hadn't left him, it had just reasserted itself elsewhere.

The jet set of the Middle Ages sometimes made a hit with the ladies by shaving the hair off the back of their necks and leaving it long on the sides.

One of the principle obstacles to conquest in the Middle Ages was the Church which, at the time raised objections to trends which made ladies and men dress differently, instead of alike. It wasn't until the late Middle Ages that clothing began to be designed to show off "that little difference" instead of concealing it.

Perhaps one of the biggest unplanned commotions raised by the ladies occurred when a young man named Mr. James Heatherington stepped upon the streets of London on January 15th, 1797.

To all extents and purposes he was impeccably dressed, but nevertheless a crowd of screaming, fainting women surrounded him, and in the crush a small boy managed to get his arm broken.

Mr. Heatherington was duly arrested, arraigned before the Lord Mayor, and fined 50 pounds for "having appeared on a public highway wearing upon his head a tall structure having a shining lustre and calculated to frighten timid people."

Students Guide to Dining Out

Ripples

The first mini-restaurant with maxi food values has opened across from the Zayre's shopping center on Route. 9. Ever get the craving for Southern fried chicken, served with whipped potatoes, Nellies gravy, homemade cole slaw, and baking powder biscuits?

A meal from Ripples is like bringing a little bit of the warm Southern congeniality into the cold UMass life of books and classes. Ripples offers a variety of chicken meals from a box for the Youngins to a Keg of chicken for the crowd.

If chicken isn't written on your taste buds, then you might peer into Davy's Seafood Treasure Box and fish around for fillet of sole, fried clams, scallops, shrimp and deep fried chips.

Ever try a roast beef sandwich on a hot Kummelwick roll? Once you savor these hard rolls coated with pretzel salt and onion seed, you'll wonder where hot Kummelwick rolls have been all your life.

Ripples also offers a smoked Ripplewurst sandwich with Kraut. Side orders of homemade cole slaw, baking powder biscuits, French fries, Nellies gravy, and whipped potatoes are available. There's nothing fancy about Ripples, Everything is self-service. All food is prepared to take-out or to eat at one of the 13 available seats.

If your're planning a party, sorority, fraternity or dormitory function, Ripples offers a fantastic catering service menu-very, very reasonably priced! Open 7 days, from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., Manager Timothy Crowley expects to stay open 'til 1 a.m. on weekends. For information call 253-9251.

Personal Perspective

FUTURE PROSPECTS

It's hard to believe, girls, but that leaping, screaming date you had last Saturday night may very well turn out to be your future stable and refined husband. Watch for these signs of obnoxiousness now to guarantee that he'll be all worn out by the time he reaches the alter. Encourage wildness- Be elated when he pours beer over your head! Just think, it will be the same hand that brings you a glass of warm milk before bed in the future.

Introduce him to all your friends and non-friends and be really glad when he tells you he's having an affair with your roommate. He'll run around and get it all out of his system while you, the patient, understanding spectator watch for signs of fatigue.

You will seem like an island of sanity in a sea of confusion. Sympathize with his exhaustion and relieve him of his misery. Be practical, realistic-eager for settling down to a home, husband and family. Take up domestic interests such as knitting, sewing and cooking. So what if you can only cook canned soup and grilled cheese sandwiches. He probably has lost any sense o f taste he ever had from eating dining commons for so long.

Remember girls-Let him laugh it up! We'll see who gets the LAST laugh.....

"War Toys" Sales Fall As U.S. Violence Grows

NEW YORK (AP) - American parents are rejecting toy guns and war toys as Christmas presents for their children in a reaction against violence in the country.

The shooting deaths this year of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the continuing war in Vietnam, and violence in the streets are cited as reasons for the absence of toy weapons from some stores.

A survey of 60 stores in 13 states showed sharp declines in the sale of toy guns. In Columbus, Ohio, Helena, Mont. and Dallas, Tex., decreases of up to 25 per cent have been reported. Many stores have also stopped promoting and advertising war toys.

At E. J. Korvettes on New York's Fifth Avenue, for example, the plastic M16 marauder-"50 shots without caps"-and the shorty machine guns are shunted off to a corner of the sales floor.

"We don't encourage people to buy weapons," said Joseph Feldman executive director of Pittsburgh's Golden Triangle Association, with a membership of more than 200 stores. "The idea is to learn to live together."

We have felt a reaction against toys of violence from parents and have directed our buying away from this area," said a spokesman for Dayton's, a Minneapolis department store.

Stores that have stopped selling or promoting war toys report favorable public reaction.

"There's been so much in the papers about guns and violence that we're just as happy-and the customers are happy-that we don't carry them," said Ray Hough, vice president and general manager of Mass Bros. stores on Florida's west coast.

"We were concerned that selling guns for Christmas doesn't seem in the right spirit-it seems the opposite of what Christmas means," said James Posner, president of Dey Bros. in Syracuse, N. Y.

"We're very heartened by the tremendous accolades we've received since we stopped selling guns," he added.

Several Sears Roebuck stores received letters of commendation from parents since the chain stopped advertising war toys in its catalogue.

War toys that continue to sell well tend to have some historical feature that gives them the connotation of education rather than violence.

Apollo Christmas Flight Labled Riskiest Space Mission to Date

SPACECENTER, HOUSTON (AP) - Apollo 8's Christmas time flight around the moon will be among the riskiest missions ever attempted by man.

During the seven-day flight, Apollo 8 will streak 250,000 miles to the lunar vicinity, orbit the moon for 20 hours like a moth around a flame and then return to earth.

The Apollo 8 crew, Air Force Col. Frank Borman, Navy Capt. James A. Lovell Jr. and Air Force Maj. William A. Anders, will become the first humans to be captured by the gravitational pull of another celestial body.

Their lives will depend on the performance of a single 20,500 pound thrust rocket engine. If that engine fails, they will orbit the moon long after their oxygen supply fails, beyond help, beyond rescue, beyond hope.

Even if that rocket engine performs perfectly and Apollo 8 starts for home, the re-entry poses hazards never faced before.

The spacecraft will come flashing back from the moon at about 24,000 miles an hour. The onboard computers must guide it across a quarter million miles of space into a 32-mile wide "window" or corridor through the earth's atmosphere.

Just before re-entry, the command module, containing the crew, is separated from the service module, which contains most of the oxygen supplies. This leaves about seven hours of oxygen on board for the crew.

If the spacecraft overshoots the corridor, it could hit the atmosphere and skip, like a pebble across a pond, back into space. This skip trajectory, space officials believe, would most likely be fatal to the crew because their oxygen would run out before the spacecraft's new orbit returns it to earth.

Even after the crew hits the corridor, their problems are far from over. The automatic re-entry system must roll the spacecraft's angle of attack on the atmosphere precisely correct or the spacecraft could still skip out into space again.

After the spacecraft is launched toward the moon from earth orbit, Apollo 8 will dare distance and time as no other manned spacecraft. This distance alone adds risk to the mission.

Earth orbit flights are, at the very most, three hours from safety. In extreme emergencies, a spacecraft in earth orbit could return to earth somewhere in 30 minutes.

As Apollo 8 glides toward the moon, however, its ladder to safety gets longer and longer, until, in the lunar vicinity, the spacecraft is up to three days away from home.

To offset these risks, the astronauts have several factors going for them.

First is the proven reliability of the flight machinery. After boost into orbit, their lives will depend on a spacecraft which has proven its excellence in extensive ground testing, unmanned flights and the perfect flight of Apollo 7.

Redundancy of systems is another big safety factor. Most systems and subsystems on the complex Command and Service Module have at least one backup, or alternate. Some systems have several back-ups. Only the Service Propulsion Rocket Engine is without a back-up system. But even this rocket engine has high redundancy of design. Only the engine's thrust chamber, fuel injector and nozzle are without backup parts. These, however, have been designed with extra strength.

Another big safety factor is the open-ended approach to the mission.

Apollo 8 will be flown on plateaus of decisions. This can be compared to a swimmer who charges up his confidence by walking slowly down stair steps into deep water. On any step of the stairway, the swimmer may decide to stop and retreat to safety.

So it is with the Apollo 8 flight. There are go-no-go decisions which would allow a safe retreat at more than a dozen points along the path to the moon and around it. The major points are at translunar injection planned during earth orbit about three hours after launch; lunar orbit insertion, the point 69 hours after launch when the spacecraft is fired into an orbit of the moon; and lunar orbit circularization when the lunar orbit is changed from 69 by 195 miles to 69 by 69.

If the ground controllers or the crew are not satisfied with the condition of the spacecraft at any of these points, the mission can retreat to a position of greater safety.

These retreats, however, would not mean that the mission is a total failure.

The crew and the ground controllers are prepared immediately to shift to alternate flight plans which take advantage of the altitude achieved by the spacecraft. These flight plans include a 10-day earth orbit flight; a flight carrying the spacecraft 4,000 miles above the earth or a loop around the moon. Each is regarded as safer than the actual orbit of the moon.

The Third Annual Maroon and White Invitational Track and Field Championship will open at Boyden today at 4 p.m. This meet is the only chance to see the UMass Indoor team in action and will feature all of the Redman veterans and freshmen. Competition is expected to be fierce from the first event to the last as the Maroons clash with Whites.

This afternoon, the long jump, thirty-five pound weight throw, pole vault, and shot put will be contested. The jump events, to be held at Amherst College Cage will feature Maroon long jumpers, Canterbury, Burns and Shaugnessy against Whites Dyer and Nyman. Soph Hiller and team-mate Duffield will pole-vault against White adversary Dumont.

The weight events at Boyden Field will be pitting White throwers Arcaro, Schlatka, and Baker against Maroon's Menagle, Wilen, and Parezo in the 35-pound weight. In the shot-put, the Maroon's will field Schwartz, Wilen and Monagle opposing the same White putters.

Ten o'clock tomorrow morning will see these same stars compete in the discus-and hammer event in Boyden Field below the gum. The meet will resume at noon with the ever exciting high-hurdles and 50 yard dash events in the main gymnasium at Boyden. The track will burn as Spellman of the White faces Maroon's Le Fever. In the dash Marble and Guarente of the Whites will spell trouble for the Maroon duo of Mayo and Chase.

Following the finals in these events, the scene will shift to Curry Hicks cage for the high jump and last years champ, Carpenter will have to face the White challenger, Nyman and his freshman cohort, Bradlee.

Running events will begin while the jump is in progress with the mile leading off the program at 1:15. Wayne, Blackburn and Brigham of the Maroons will square off against a powerful White field of Mangan, Lang, Duart, Derderian, Meixner and Dunsky. The 600 yard run will follow, featuring Maroon senior, Hasselbaum and White's Spellman.

A lot of freshman talent will be displayed in the 300 yard event as Hatch of the Whites will battle for place against Maroon's Cantelli and Choinlere. In the same event, a contest will be waged between juniors Chase (Maroon) and Marble (White).

A large field of runners will compete in the two-mile run. Among those entered are: Marc Gellinas, recent Lewellyn Derby Award recipient; Dale Toohey, faculty road racer; Rich Tashjian, former runner with the CFCAA; Tom Derderian, champion in the Brockton Marathon, Charlie Lang; Leo Duart, pending eastern Marathon record holder; Wayne Lucas, 11th in N.E. Championships and a Stockbridge student, Segersten.

A new event, the 880 yard run will have a Maroon trio of Paulson, Swasey, and Arnie Morse against a really strong White team of Bill Donaldson and Don Dunsky. In the final run, thousand yarders Evans and Scagnelli of the Whites do combat with Wayne and Gonzalez.

Awards will be given to the outstanding performers of the meet, one to a runner and another for the corresponding field event athlete. A consolation prize will go to the best dressed competitor of the meet. Coaches O'Brien and Schwartz have predicted one of the best meets of Track and Field to be held on this campus in many years.

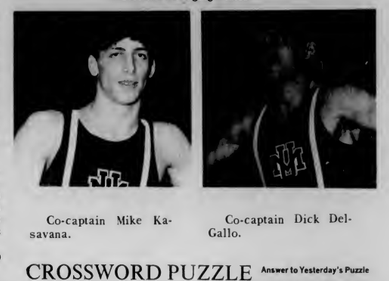
Varsity and Frosh GymnastsBattle With Long Island University Team

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor



Sporting a 0-2 report card, the varsity gymnastics team will take on the Long Island University team at 2 p.m. in the Auxiliary Gym in Boyden. The freshman meet will start about 4:30 p.m.

Coach Erik Kjeldsen had hoped to have the Long Island meet scheduled before the Temple meet, but things did not work out quite that way.

Norm Vexler, an outstanding all around man, will probably see limited action tomorrow due toa a shoulder injury sustained in the meet against Temple.

Kjeldsen is also planning two additions to the regular lineup. Dana Hastings will be competing on the side horse and Ed Jones on the rings. It is the first time this season that either one of them has seen any action.

Basically, the rest of the line up will be the same.

Co-captain Mike Kasavana.

Co-captain Dick DelGallo.

Margie Sims, sophomore history major and ace of the UMass woman's gymnastics team, will be featured in the gymnastic meet against Springfield College and Towson College tomorrow night at 7 p.m. in the small gymnasium in Boyden.

Historical Precedent Haunts Cagers Against UNH

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Five years ago, in December of 1963, a talented Redman basketball team was the talk of New England hoop circles. First year Coach Johnny Orr was blessed with some great personnel.

There was Rodges Twitchell, on the verge of breaking numerous UMass scoring records, Pete Bernard, a deadly outside shooter, Tim Edwards, Charlie O'Rourke and Paul Gullicksen, all solid rebounders, and guards Jim Painten, Tom Ryan, Charlie Kingston and Steve Bonds to name a few others.

The Curry Hicks fans went wild as their heroes dumped Boston University, Rutgers, Connecticut and Boston College in succession. With a 4-0 record, they travelled confidently, or rather overconfidently, up to Durham, N.H., where they took a severe pounding from a hot-shooting New Hampshire team.

Coach Jack Leaman is well aware of that little bit of history. He may also see some similarities in the present situation.

His UMass squad has talent and depth. They've reeled off four straight wins. They will face a hot shooting New Hampshire team Saturday night at the Cage, just as their predecessors did five years ago.

The Redmen should not be overconfident if they have been reading the sports pages lately. UNH, 1-22 last season, has surprised the experts with easy victories over Maine and Connecticut enroute to a 3-1 record.

Saturday night's contest will, therefore, be a battle for the Yankee Conference lead. Both clubs have 2-0 marks in league play.

New Hampshire's strength lies in its shooting and hustle. The Wildcats have shown a knack for pressuring their opponents into numerous mistakes by employing a full court press throughout most of the game.

On defense UNH likes to have its guards, 6'2 Doug Shepard and 6'3 Scott Sargent, a transfer from Old Dominion who is a former Newbury port schoolboy flash. Sargent canned 33 points against the Redmen at Durham last year and is a gunner with up to a 30-foot range.

Bob Glover, 6'5, Tom Cushman, 6'3, Brian Horan, 6'2, and Doug Wilson, 6'5, give Coach Bill Haubrick some flexibility in personnel substitution which is necessary to any pressing team.

UMass will have to handle these hot shots without the services of Co-captain Joey DiSarcina, whose father passed away earlier this week. Coach Leaman will probably start Billy Greeley in the backcourt vacancy.

Pete Gayeska is the leading scorer through four games for the Redmen averaging 17.8 followed by Ray Ellerbrook at 15.8. Ken Mathias and Jack Gallagher will again be the forwards at the tap.

Dennis Chapman, whom fans are already calling the best small man in the league, will be poised on the bench along with John Shockro, Dick Samuelson and Bob Dempsey.

The Redmen will probably stick with their zone which has been so effective thus far in the campaign. If UNH starts to riddle the nets from outside, UMass may switch to a man-to-man or combination.

BY PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

Despite three overwhelming wins, despite a team scoring average of almost 87 points a game, UMass freshman basketball coach Peter Broaca, does not believe his Little Redman team has performed as well as they can. The UMass mentor gets another chance to see his charges in action when the frosh meet Chamberlayne Junior College tomorrow night, at 5:30 in the Cage.

The Little Redmen have looked overpowering in their first encounters, but Broaca states, "I don't think we're playing that well, and in addition I have been disappointed in the teams that we have played. We expected a lot more from A.I.C. and Rhode Island."

Broaca is not sure what to expect from Chamberlayne. The Boston junior college traditionally draws its talent from the Boston schools, and this year is no exception.

The leading scorer for them has been former Boston English guard Lester Bingham. Also from English is Rufus Jackson. Supporting Bingham in scoring has been former Salem High School star Rich Tibadeau. Another key performer is former Dorchester High School star Charlie McAfee.

Broaca says of Chamberlayne, "We never really know how good they are, but they always come down here with a team that runs and shoots well. So I really don't know what to say about them."

The UMass coach also is hesitant in judging how good his team is. Broaca said, "I don't think I can answer how good this team is until second semester."

This would seem to be the right thinking. Besides the obvious fact that the Little Redmen play their toughest opposition in the second half of the schedule, there is always the problem of academics when dealing with a freshman team. Two many times freshman teams have been decimated by poor grades.

So far this year's frosh hoopsters seem to be doing all right. But Broaca says wistfully, "I hope to get the chance of seeing this team going against the best."

Mermen Dunked By Wesleyan, 58-37

Coach Joe Rogers' swimming team lost their second meet in a row Wednesday when a Wesleyan team bested them, 58-37, in a meet held at Wesleyan. The Redmen will get a chance at a team from Bowdoin College tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m. in the Boyden Pool.

BOB ASQUITH

UMass lost the first relay of the meet. In the 200-yard freestyle event, Mark Miller placed third, but the event was won by Wesleyan's Ketcham in a good time of 1:56.4

Co-captain Philip Morton placed third in the 50-yard freestyle and Co-captain Bob Asquith placed second in the individual medley followed by Pat McCarthy in third place.

Dave Larson made a good showing in the diving event placing second. This was his first meet of the season after recovering from a punctured eardrum which has kept him out of the water for the last three weeks.

Wesleyan's Galley won the 200-yard butterfly followed by UMass' Dick Donohue, second. Donohue is the younger brother of the New England record holder for the 200-yard butterfly.

Miller and Asquith were UMass' only winners as Miller won the 100-yard freestyle in a slow time of 53.1. Morton came in third in the same event. Asquith touched the edge of the pool first in the 200-yard backstroke with McCarthy in his wake.

Other point-getters for the Redmen were Maurice Lynch, second in the 200-yard freestyle; Al Northup, third in the 200-yard breaststroke. Miller, Morton, Ed Jazab, and Asquith formed the relay team which Wesleyan was disqualified from.

Coach Rogers was rather displeased with most of the times which his swimmers posted. On the optimistic side, he is expecting better performances from his team tomorrow against Bowdoin, but Charlie Butt, the Bowdoin coach, usually manages to put together a good team. The freshmen, who also lost to Wesleyan, will have the weekend off.

THINK SNOW! - Someone was thinking snow this weekend as nearly six inches fell in the Amherst area. Cold temperatures and high winds are predicted for tomorrow by the weather man. Amherst residents were not the only ones digging out, for story, see below. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom).

Heavy Snows Blanket New England

BOSTON (AP) - High winds and bitter cold followed a severe snowstorm into New England yesterday making it even harder to travel in snowbound areas of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Gale warnings were up along the coast, which escaped the snow that mounted past 12 inches in some inland mountainous regions.

The storm trapped 22 hikers from Elmora, N.Y., in an open lean-to near Manchester, Vt., Saturday night. Rescuers brought the hikers, 20 high school students and two teachers to safety yesterday fighting their way through zero cold, heavy snow, and winds that whipped past 40 miles an hour.

Travelers warnings were kept up for the second night in a row. Heavy snow warnings went to upland regions. A cold wave warning was posted for Rhode Island, most of Massachusetts, and New Hampshire and western Maine, where a day-long rain was expected to run to snow during the night.

Power Talks Highlight Black Awareness Weekend

SUSAN SPATRICK

Thirteen events centering on the theme of "Liberation Through Awareness" were held this weekend. One part of the Black Awareness Weekend was a panel discussion Saturday on the subject of Black-White Student Power. The panelists were Paul Silverman, president of the Student Senate; Gil Salk of the MLK Social Action Council; Robert Henderson, Afro-American leader, and John Wilson, chairman of the Holyoke Community College Afro-American Organization.

The topic was considered in three parts, Black Power, White Power, and Student Power. Salk said that there could never be a black-white coalition on this campus because even a white-white coalition is impossible. Paul Silverman agreed, claiming that whites have no unique problems. Robert Henderson, disagreeing, remarked that whites do have many unique problems, including racism and apathy.

The audience was small, numbering less than fifty. The discussion was open to comments and questions from the audience, but participation was slight.

The panel was followed by a forum moderated by Afro-American co-chairman William Smith, on the topic "Black Identity -- Then What?" Other participants were Boston Black Panther leader Frank Hughes; McKinley Moore, former director of Black House in Springfield; a New York City Muslim, Sylvester; Steve Moore of the Black Awareness Committee; and UMass graduate student Mike Thelwell.

Steve Moore, chairman of the Black Awareness Committee opened the marathon Friday evening in Thompson Hall Auditorium. Moore was followed by a presentation of black images through music by Leroy Richardson, UMass graduate student in the School of Education.

Campus Chest Drive Nets Record Amount For Charity

After covering the campus for a week of solicitation the Sophomore class reached its projected goal for the campus chest drive.

The Campus chest drive is a traditional charity drive with the receipts going to a different charity every year. This year the bulk of the $3,000 will go to the Belchertown State Hospital, an institution for the care of the mentally retarded.

The $3,000 level was the highest amount ever obtained, exceeding last year's Class of 1970 record effort by over $1,350.

The Campus Chest drive was tied into Sendoff 1968 but the bulk of the profit raising effort came from the dormitory collections. The stores set up in the New Hatch as part of a project of the Theme and Atmosphere Committee, a spaghetti dinner held on the final day of Sendoff and the free will offering taken at the Messiah concert presented by the Amherst-Vassar College choirs were included in the week.

Cagers Conquer Catamounts, 89-57

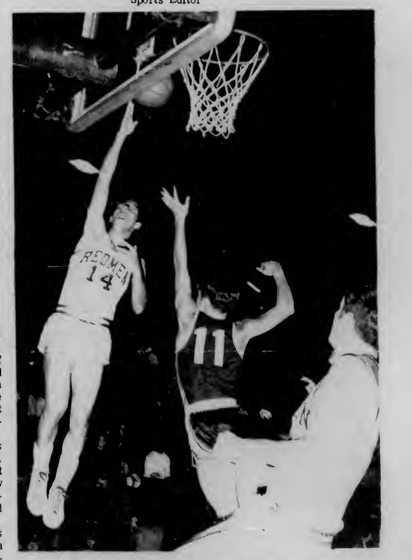
BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

UMass spott3d New Hampshire a two point lead, then fired off 17 markers in a row and went on to an 89-57 conquest of the Wildcats before 3300 fans at the Cage Saturday night.

For Coach Jack Leaman, it was the fifth straight victory without a loss this season. UNH suffered its second defeat to go along with three victories.

A 15 footer by Paul "Sheep Dog" Shepard gave New Hampshire a 2-0 lead at the 18:22 mark after both teams had blown several scoring opportunities. Exactly five minutes later UMass was up 17-2 and the issue never was in doubt thereafter.

The 17 point splurge, the biggest in recent years by a Redman basketball team, featured three hoops each by Jack Gallagher and Ray Ellerbrook, a three point play by Ken Mathias and a hook by Peter Gayeska.



UNH during this five minute explosion was its worst enemy, throwing the ball away six times and picking off only one rebound.

Layups by Brian Horan and Jeff Bannister, on assists from Shepard narrowed UMass' margin to eleven points, but that was as close as the visitors ever came as a five point burst by Ellerbrook got the Redmen off and running again.

Except for Shepard the Wildcats showed little in the early going. At one point the 6'2 Newburyport native scored nine straight New Hampshire markers to offset baskets by Mathias, Ellerbrook and Gayeska.

Two free throws by Frank Davis again moved UNH to within eleven at 28-17, but the Redmen took complete control of both backboards and rattled off eight straight points

Foreign Students Live With Amherst Families

ternational Host program, attempted to define the functions and clarify the misconceptions of the program in a "aily Collegian interview."

"The primary function of the program," explained Mrs. Van Peski, "is to find a host family for each foreign student who desires one. This arrangement can only be made on request from the foreign students themselves. They must first fill out a data sheet, which can be picked up at the Foreign Student Office and submit it to me. The students may take advantage of this program at any time during their stay at the University and may even arrange to have a host family before they leave their homes in the fall. One of our problems, however, is informing the foreign students of the benefits of this program."

The New Friends and International Host Program has been under Mrs. Van Peski's guidance since September. It involves approximately 80 families from Amherst, North Amherst, Holyoke, Easthampton and Leverett and 100 foreign students from around the world. In the past, the comparatively small number of foreign students were cared for by professors and friends who were aware of the problem.

The program is now trying to reach those families who are not as busy as the faculty families. Since there will be between 100-150 new foreign students to the University, all interested families are asked to contact the Foreign Student Office and obtain a data sheet.

The biggest problem that the program has encountered is in the area of communication between the host family, the student body and the foreign student. It seems that the general student body is not aware of the foreign student's need for practical information. Many of the foreign students feel a high level of frustration in dealing with everyday living problems and dealing, in particular, with the problems met with on registration day.

The host families are expected to contact the foreign student assigned to them at least once a month but a more spontaneous contact is desireable. The host family can be most helpful by involving the foreign student in personnal family life and acquainting them with practical procedures such as operating a laundromat and grocery shopping.

"There is a need for the foreign student to have a break in his routine," Mrs. Van Peski explained, "thus a personal relationship is emphasized. For example, the University Women arranged a pot luck dinner for the international Families. The invitations were formal and the turnout was poor. They then tried personal invitations and arranged for transportation. The response was excellent. It was the personal contact that seemed to overcome the cultural difference."

NPA Proposes Planning Agency

WASHINGTON (AP) - Creation of a White House staff group to help draft programs and priorities to meet long-range national goals was proposed yesterday by the National Planning Association.

The new staff should be headed by a "person who is very close to the president's view of the national aspirations and priorities," said NPA, a non-profit planning and research organization made up of leaders in business, labor and the professions.

The NPA report adds a third chapter to a long-range planning effort launched by former President Dwight D. Eisenhower when he created a bipartisan commission to identify national goals.

UMass Student Injured In Weekend Accident

HINGHAM, MASS. (AP) - Three youths were killed early yesterday when they were struck from the rear by a second car as they pushed a small car that had stalled on Broad Cove Rd.

Three other persons were injured, one critically.

Injured were Stephen Young, 19, of Amherst, 65 Salem St., UMass sophomore who was steering the stalled car; Edith Beatty, 17, of Weymouth and Daniel F. Hayes, Jr., 30 of Dorchester, identified by police as the driver of the second car.

Police identified the dead as Ernest Santore, Jr., 17 and Michael Beatty, 16, both of South Boston and John W. Walker, 19 of East Boston.

All were taken to South Shore Hospital where Hayes' name was placed on the danger list. Young and Miss Beatty, no relation to the dead youth, were treated and released.

Police said Young, whose car had stalled, had asked the three youths who were hitchhiking, if they would give him a push in return for a ride and that they had agreed moments before they were killed.

Protestants, Catholics Hold Ecumenical Advent Worship

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Williamson, Professor of Ethics at Andover Newton Theological Seminary, will be the speaker tonight at the ecumenical Advent worship to be held in Newman Chapel at 7:30.

Dr. Williamson recently completed his Ph. D. at Harvard and is currently with the Department of Church and Ministry at Andover Newton. He has for several years been concerned with the meaning and relevance of the Church in the great social issues of our time. In his homily he will relate the meaning of Christmas to our contemporary situation.

"God With Us" is the theme of this special worship service jointly sponsored by the Newman Club and Students for Ecumenical Action (SEA). The service will be divided into three sections dealing with the Prophecy, the Birth, and the Meaning of Christ for our everyday lives. Singing, scripture reading, and community participation in the prayers will provide the format for each of the three sections.

Besides the preaching of Dr. Williamson, another feature of the program will be a musical meditation with the Newman Choir under the direction of Gilles Herbert. The worship service will be lead by students and has been put together by the joint efforts of Roman Catholic and Protestant students.

Dodd To Run Again in 1970

HARTFORD, CONN. (AP) - Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, whose political future has been under a cloud since his censure by the Senate last year, reiterated yesterday his intention to seek re-election in 1970.

Dodd was asked on a televised interview whether he still intended to run again.

Asked whether he expected any opposition within the party to his renomination, Dodd said: "Well, I wouldn't be surprised if there is. There usually is, and I think that's a healthy thing."

Dodd was roundly booed when he was introduced at the Democratic State Convention last June.

He was censured by the Senate for using campaign contributions for personal expenses.

Economist to Lecture on Welfare

Mr. Herbert Gintis, a teaching fellow in economics at Harvard will lecture on "Radical critique of Welfare Economics" tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in room 106, Thompson Hall.

The topic of Gintis' talk is taken from his dissertation-in-progress at Harvard, where he is completing the Ph.D program, and a paper which he is preparing for presentation at the Philadelphia meetings of the Union for Radical Political Economy over the Christmas holidays. The URPE meetings were organized in response to the decision of the American Economic Association not to move its Christmas meetings from Chicago this year.

Gintis will treat such topics as: Is there a case against the neoclassical welfare economics? How do the facts of income distribution check against the consequences of the logic of welfare economics? Is mankind in an industrial society fairly represented by the assumptions and the mechanisms of welfare economics? H i s talk will be followed by a period for questions from the floor and for discussion.

Directly before Gintis' talk there will be an informational meeting of the graduate students in economics at 7 p.m. The graduate student-faculty liason group for the department will give a progress report, and the graduate student senators will give a brief report on the Graduate Student Senate.

The public is invited to attend both the meeting and the talk.

INSIDE REPORT:

Nixon and The Governors

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

PALM SPRINGS, Calif.--As President-elect Nixon met privately with Republican Governors last Friday afternoon during their winter meeting here, outspoken Gov. Norbert Tiemann of Nebraska brought into the open what was foremost in their minds.

It is essential, Tiemann politely told Nixon, for the new President to communicate effectively with the people. Consequently, Tiemann contined, wouldn't it be a good idea if he worked through the 31 Republican Governors to reach the people?

Without making commitments, Nixon nodded agreement. But Tiemann's question reflected apprehension about the President-elect on two levels which was informally but widely discussed among the Governors here.

On one level, the Governors recognize that Nixon received little pre-convention support from them, never had been close to them, and might well ignore them from the White House. But on a deeper level, the Governors were worried that Nixon's personal isolation from everybody but his intimates during both the campaign and the transition period might continue during his Presidency, to his great disadvantage.

Actually, Nixon did much to still those fears Friday when he met with Governors in small groups at the Palm Springs home of Walter Annenberg, publisher of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Nixon promised the Governors they would have control of Federal patronage in their states. He pledged that the often slip-shod liaison between statehouses and the White House during the Johnson administration would be improved with Vice President-elect Spiro T. Agnew as the go-between. To the puzzlement of some Governors, Nixon told them he planned to keep them abreast of foreign affairs developments.

Most important was the image of quiet confidence he gave. In private conversation over cocktails here some Governors had expressed fear that Nixon was afraid of the burdens of the Presidency. His performance Friday dispelled such worries.

After those meetings Nixon aides slipped out the reassuring word that Governors will play a big role in the Administration. Apart from the appointment of Governors to the Cabinet, they were informed a high post will be found for the defeated Gov. John Chaffee of Rhode Island, immensely popular with his colleagues--perhaps as director of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO). In addition, they were told that outgoing Gov. Nils Boe of South Dakota probably will be named a special liaison officer with the Governors to supplement Agnew's efforts.

While leaving Palm Springs less apprehensive than when they arrived, however, the Governors were not fully satisfied. They complained that the President-elect--for all his reassurances--gave precious little hard information in the meetings at the Annenberg home. "He talked indirectly--in parables, you might say," one Governor told us.

Moreover, some Governors are still muttering about the Nixon campaign which, in many states, drained almost all Republican campaign money. When Governors seeking election pleaded for funds, they were told that they could ride home on Nixon's coattails. Thus, those who in fact ran ahead of Nixon are now self-righteous about it.

Such aggravation has been compounded in the transition period when Governors, including the few who backed Nixon for the nomination, had almost no contact with the President-elect until the Palm Springs meeting. That gave rise to their fear that he will be isolated by his buttoned-down young aides in the White House.

With this backdrop, the Governors here were surprisingly querulous on relatively minor matters. Western Governors grumbled about a possible non-Westerner as Secretary of the Interior; farm Governors grumbled about a possible non-farmer as Secretary of Agriculture; most Governors grumbled about Nixon's long-range intention to purge Ray Bliss as Republican National Chairman.

Besides, all did not go as well here between Nixon and the Governors as was advertised. An imaginative plan by the Governors to place their representatives in all departments of the Federal government to facilitate state-Federal relations was eviscerated by Agnew's staff, apparently acting under the Nixon staff's direction.

Congratulations

The Honorable John A. Volpe revealed the fact that he is abdicating his gubernatorial throne to accept the all-powerful federal position of Secretary of Transportation. We heartily congratulate the governor on his appointment. But this resident of the Commonwealth openly criticizes his bubbling willingness to abandon state politics for a seemingly titular position on the national level. His campaign for vice-president was well-organized and highly systematic. Maybe it should not even be mentioned that he is the only STATE official within my memory to actively campaign for this prestigious, if not popular, office. But, when failing to procure this nomination, the governor puts forth all his efforts--efforts that could have gone into solving some of our many state-wide problems--into getting something, anything out of the Republican presidential victory, I personally feel he is open to public criticism.

The Honorable John A. Volpe has just been appointed Secretary of Transportation. But in so doing, he has turned his post as governor over to Francis Sargent, a Massachusetts political "veteran". We should all ask ourselves if this move is in the best interests of Massachusetts--the state which gave Governor Volpe a start and a state where there are more problems--one being the touchy stadium issue--than there are both politicians and pseudo-politicians.

Student Press Panel Raps Censors

By JOHN ZEH
College Press Service

ATLANTA (CPS)--Freedom of the four-letter word and other rights of campus journalists were defended last week in a discussion of the student press at the annual Conference of Sigma Delta Chi, national journalsim fraternity.

College students "are confronted with the paradox of seeking effective answers to enormous new questions while being expected to conduct themselves within the mores and social concepts of traditional society," said Bill Preston, SDX President at the University of Tennessee.

The public should be educated that the changing times have lifted taboos on certain words, Doug Stone, managing editor of the University of Minnesota Daily, said. "When these words become essential as quotes in news stories, they should be used. Anything else would be incomplete reporting."

What a paper prints, he added, should be determined by contemporary standars of students, not of secondary audiences, politicians, or local crusaders.

When a paper stirs controversy over use of such words, or for other reasons, due process should be followed by the publications board after the storm has died, Stone argued. "We have seen all too frequently this fall the hostility and turmoil caused by intemperate and unilateral action by a college president, board of regents, or state legislature with an axe to grind."

There should be "no meddling" in the student press by outside forces, Stone said. "The first, most important thing an administrator owes college editors is to leave us alone." He also said student papers ought not to be "PR sheets" nor spokesmen for the university, and that access to administrators and that faculty should be easier and more complete.

John Durbin, a senior at Southern Illinois University, suggested that student papers cover news of the surrounding city, especially those municipal affairs that affect students. Such coverage would also provide learning journalists good experience and could influence city affairs, he added.

Student protesters confront editors with a serious problem in news judgment, according to Frank Malouff, SDX President at the University of Colorado. Editors should weigh the significance and seriousness of the demonstrators carefully before devoting a lot of space to them, he said.

Malouff also noted the dangers for student papers that get involved in the protest movement themselves. He said many papers favor the broad ideals but not the tactics of "hard core" protesters. "The student press is filled with people with a social conscience. The greatest danger to the student press is not that it will choose the anti-establishment side, but that the administration will insist it choose its side."

The panel was moderated by H.G. Davis of the University of Florida, who noted the "rather startling, even rolutionary developments" in the student press over the past few years. He listed a new concern with major social problems, a plunge into personal journalism, stress on "I," deemphasis on eye, "a fresh vitalization of the editorial pages and proliferation of "autonomous, independent, irreverent, muckraking, destitute" underground newspapers.

"The student press," Davis said, "is no longer a mere sandbox for student journalists. It's being used to shape minds, perhaps with more impact than the classroom."

Pianist-Composer To Perform Contemporary Protest Works

Ran Blake, a young protest composer and pianist, whose contemporary impressions blend the rare combination of pop, blues-oriented, and classical music will be performing tomorrow night.

RAN BLAKE

His performance consists of original compositions, "Police State' and "Birmingham U.S.A.," and of interpretations of other works such as Jerome Kern's "Old Man River.'

A student at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, Blake has been playing conscientous, intellectually-impressionistic music since the mid-fifties. He is known throughout Europe. His instructor Gunther Schuller, said, "Blake is one of the few successful impressionists and painters left in music.

His is an improvised music, deeply felt and newly re-interpreted in each performance, but it works because it has its own disciplines of thematic organization, of formal cohesion and of stylistic consciousness."

Blake will be presenting his musical collage in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m., as a guest of the University Music Committee. There will be no charge.

Chorus, Chorale, and Choir Shine In Annual Joint Winter Concert

By GALE SAKARIS
Fine Arts Staff

The annual winter concert of the chorus, chorale and the women's choir was performed Sunday afternoon at Bowker Auditorium. In general the concert was of a very high caliber and the program was very interesting.

First to appear on the program was the women's choir. The choir shows a great deal of control and they have a fine tone, especially for the English Carol, "Lullay, My Child" with which they opened. They then performed a 14th-century Alleluia which was accompanied by three recorders. In this performance the choir often overshadowed the recorders which unfortunately were quite out of tune.

The choir concluded with a Mass by Britten, originally written for a women's choir. This was very well sung and the musical interpretation of the piece was very fine. The soprano solos were abit out of tune and lacked projection.

Next on the program was the Chorale. They first sang "O Magnum Mysterium" by Victoria. The Chorale demonstrated its usual high caliber, lines and words being clear and in tune. Also the Chorale in all of its performance exhibits a great deal of intensity and sensitivity to lines and meaning.

The Chorale sang "A spotless Rose" by Howells in which there is a solo for the Baritone section. The section was exceptionally well blended , a characteristic which is common to all the sections in the Chorale.

"The Gaudate Omnes" by Sweelinck began rather shakily but the chorale quickly pulled itself together to perform it with its usual high standards.

UMT Stages "The Changeling"

BY SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff Play Review

"The Changeling", considered to be one of the great tragedies of Elizabethan drama by many critics, was presented this past week by the University of Massachusetts Theatre group.

The costumes provided one of the highlights for the performance. Richly elegant in fabric and design, they added to the overall effect of the rather stark set of the gray stone castle. The pageantry was skilfully executed within the one set and it was evident that much time and labor was utilized for this theatre presentation.

I feel that one would be able to appreciate this drama more with some additional background knowledge of this tragedy and its particular form. Like many productions of this type, previous reading and study of it can give it more impact and significance to the audience.

Symphony Orchestra To Open Fifth Steele Under Founder-Conductor Ronald Season

The University Symphony Orchestra will present its first concert of the fall season Dec. 18 at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, conducted by Professor Ronald Steele of the Music Department.

This concert will open the Symphony Orchestra's fifth season. Founded by Professor Steele, the orchestra is composed of 90 musicians from the UMass, Amherst College and Mt. Holyoke faculties and student bodies. Musicians from the area communities are also members.

In a DAILY COLLEGIAN interview, Professor Steele commented that he would like to include "pops" music in the orchestra's concert repertoire. He thinks this will be impossible, however, because of limited rehearsal time. Rehearsals for performances average only two hours weekly because of the difficulty of finding a convenient time for members to practice together. However, this does not reduce the quality of performances, according to Professor Steele, who describes the performances as "outstanding". He said that the University Orchestra is often better known for its talent in communities outside Amherst and the UMass campus. In fact, he commented, he has conducted professional musicians who did not perform as well as the University Symphony Orchestra.

Professor Steele, who received his Master's Degree in music from the University of Michigan, said he is looking forward to the completion of the new University Fine Arts Center. Present facilities in Bowker Auditorium, he said, are inadequate for both the size of the orchestra and for acoustical and conducting reasons. "Many famous musicians have come to play and have refused to come again," he said, because of the conditions in Bowker Auditorium.

Acoustical difficulties have been slightly alleviated by the construction of an orchestral shell at Bowker. This was one of the first projects Prof. Steele undertook when he came to UMass five years ago.

New Federal Laws Govern Gun, Ammunition Sales

Sales of guns and ammunition will be controlled under the new Federal gun law which takes effect today.

William E. Williams, District Director of Internal Revenue for Massachusetts, said IRS is preparing material to help gun dealers, gun buyers and collectors comply with the new Gun Control Act of 1968 which was enacted by Congress in October.

Williams said the new law should not place any unreasonable restrictions on the purchase or ownership of ordinary guns used for hunting, target shooting or other lawful purposes.

Persons under 21 will be prohibited from purchasing pistols, revolvers, and ammunition for such weapons and persons under 18 will not be permitted to purchase any firearms or ammunition.

Sales will generally not be permitted to out-of-state residents, Williams said, although a person from an adjoining state can buy a rifle or shotgun by complying with certain provisions of the new Act. Sales to residents of a state will be prohibited if possession of the firearm is not allowed by local ordinance.

Summaries of pertinent local laws are being compiled in a booklet to be mailed by IRS to Federally licensed gun dealers. The booklet, Publication 603, "Published Ordinances-Fire - arms," should have been in the hands of dealers before today, to enable them to check on the gun laws of a locality before selling a gun.

Matmen Bomb URI For 3rd Straight

The Redmen got off to a good start when Nick DiDomenico moved up to the 123 pound class, as UMass did not have a 123 pounder and URI did not have a 115 pounder, and after a scoreless first period the points really started to fly as Nick scored two reversals, two predicaments, a takedown, and over three minutes riding time to walk away with a proud 13-4 decision. At 130 pounds Phil Davis picked up his third straight victory and his first pin of the year when he pressed George Bockstaels shoulders to the mat in just 1:23 of the first period.

John Paltrineri notified Coach Barr Friday night that he could not wrestle and UMass gave up five of its ten points by forfeiting the 137 pound class.

At 145 pounds Brian Urquhart never looked better as he remained undefeated by pinning Michael Spino in 5:25. At the time of the pin Brian enjoyed a 9-0 lead and had over 3 minutes riding time. At 152 pounds Mike Brauner really bombed Manuel Camacho, the Rams strongman, after a scoreless first period. Mike had Camacho fighting off his back most of the time as he walked away a happy 13-0 winner.

Wrestling at 160 pounds Parker Simonds dropped the only points actually earned against the Redmen as the Rams best wrestler Mike Thomas was just too skilled for Parker. Parker gave his best but was eventually pinned in 6:25 for the only cheering the R fans had all day.

At 167 Tom Andrewes remained undefeated scoring a good 7-3 decision over a strong James Knapp. Tom scored two opening period takedowns and a predicament in the second period to Knapps escape and takedown. Knapp finished strong by riding Andrewes for the last two minutes.

On Friday, December 20, UMass will host a quadrangular wrestling meet in Boyden Gym. Visiting schools will be Shippensburg State, and Kutztown State, both Pennsylvania schools, and Rhode Island College. Varsity action will take place in the Auxiliary Gym starting at 1:00 p.m., and the frosh teams will compete in the wrestling practice room. Four mats, and 132 bouts are scheduled for the day.

on baskets by Gayeska, Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman and Billy Greeley.

Scott Sargent threw in three outside shots to spark the Wildcats in the remainder of the period while the shooting of John Shockro and Chapman and the rebounding of Gallagher and Gayeska had UMass safely on top, 44-27 at intermission.

Continued domination of the boards in the second half, kept New Hampshire out of the ball game. The visitors were never able to get second shots off as Mathias and Chapman gathered in numerous rebounds.

The Wildcats tried to press their opponents into mistakes, but Greeley, Ellerbrook and Gallagher had little problem bringing the ball up. Fast breaks by the Redman caught UNH offguard and produced hoops by Chapman and Ellerbrook.

With 13 minutes to go sophmore guard Bob Dempsey came off the bench to take over leadership of the Redmen rout. His steal and layin put UMass ahead 65-41 at the 12 minute mark.

Coach Leaman was able to get a good look at his bench in the last ten minutes. Working substitutes in with regulars UMass still managed to outplay its opponent.

Ahead 75-52, a ten point string with Chapman, Dick Starsiak Dempsey and Frank Schaffeld doing the scoring made it 85-52, which was UMass' biggest lead of the game.

By that time the Red RAIDERS were in control. Free throws from John Dreyer and another Schaffeld hoop closed out the Redman scoring. UNH substitutes hit several outside shots to make the final tally, UMass 89, New Hampshire 57.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - The Redmen had to do without the services of playmaker Joey Disarcina for the second straight game.... Increased playing time seems to have given reserve guards Greeley, Dempsey and Starsiak confidence in running the ballclub.... Statistical story, UMass 63 rebounds, UNH 32.... Five Redmen in double figures, Ellerbrook led the way with 22, followed by Chapman with 14, Gayeska with 13 and Gallagher and Mathias ten apiece.... Mathias also had 17 rebounds, many of them coming when he played the pivot in the second half.... Shepard led the cold-shooting well defensed Wildcats with 16 markers.

BY STEVE SHAMBAN Staff Reporter

Excellent two-way play, coupled with the superb goal-tending of South Boston's P.J. Flaherty paved the way for the UMass frosh pucksters to a convincing 3-0 victory over the BC Eaglets Saturday night at McHugh Forum. This win, by no means an upset, gives warning to future opponents that this band of Little Redmen should not be taken lightly.

Flaherty is somewhat of an Eaglet killer. Last year at New Prep, along with Bob Bartholomew, Jack Byrne and Charlie Donovan, he twice beat BC on their own ice. So, for Flaherty, Saturday's affair was nothing new. He played a great game and was particularly outstanding mid-way through the third period with BC forcing play and UMass with a two goal lead. On the night, he had 25 saves.

As far as team performance goes, UMass finally put it all together. Their passes were pinpoint and their checks were solid. Executing to perfection the strategy they've attempted all year, the Little Redmen constantly kept the puck in the BC zone and on occasion, trapped the inexperienced Eaglet defenseman out of position. UMass had 40 shots on net.

Bob Whelden started the festivities at 7:39 of the first period. With UMass pressuring BC goalie John Smollens with a barrage of shots, Whelden alertly banged in a rebound off the stick of Jack Edwards. The Little Redmen were clearly on their way.

Eric Scrafield made it 2-0 on the power play at 11:07 of the second period. His was a picture play. Bryan Sullivann passed the puck up ice to Dennis Grabowski who promptly flicked it to Scrafield in front of the net where the blonde winger from Toronto banged it home. UMass dominated this period, outshooting the Eaglets 18-11.

Donovan's goal at 11:37 of the third took the life out of the Eaglets. Glen Hale passed the puck out to Bruce Winter who fired a slap shot goalwards. Donovan, standing right by the crease, stuck the blade of his stick out in such a way as to have Winter's shot deflect off it and into the goal.

Needless to say, this was a big win and should add impetus to the burgeoning UMass hockey program. "It's great to beat BC", said frosh coach Ben Smith. "I told the players that these are the guys you'll have to talk to over Christmas vacation. Now they've got something to talk about."

"A lot of credit has to go to Coach Canniff. He's doing a fine job with his team and there is no question about the recruiting job he has done and is doing."

Next game will be Tuesday night at Orr Rink versus AIC. It is the first of a twin bill with the varsity also facing the Aces. Face off is at 6:15 p.m.

Little Redmen Stay Perfect, 86-71

BY PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

Breaking open a close game midway in the first half, the UMass freshman basketball team behind a superb effort by Julius Erving, remained undefeated by downing Chamberlayne Junior College, 86-71, Saturday night at the Cage. The win ups the Little Redman record to 4-0, while dropping Chamberlayne to 5-4.

The early going was close until a five minute stretch in the half, when UMass outscored Chamberlayne 16-7 to gain an eleven point cushion. Erving and Chris Coffin led this surge. Erving hit two 20 foot jumpers, while Coffin canned a pair of rebounds and added a pair of free throws.

Charlie McAfee kept the visitors with some fine shooting, but UMass at halftime maintained a 47-32 lead. Erving, in addition to having 16 points in the half, blocked a couple of shots and dominated the boards. Tom Austin also was defensively great as he blocked at least three shots and deflected others.

The Little Redmen came out in the second half and began to up its lead in the early moments of the half. Rich Vogeley and Mike Pagliara were the sparks. Pagliara hit consistently short range jumpers as the Chamberlayne defenders fell back to help inside, while Vogeley picked up valuable rebounds.

Erving added a new feature to his game as he set up, with brilliant passing, back to back hoops by Vogeley and John Bettancourt.

The Little Redmen led by 18, 73-55 with only eight minutes remaining and seemingly were home free. They, however, had to withstand a last minute comeback by Chamberlayne that if not successful, at least made it interesting.

The visitors, behind McAfee and Alton Jackson, fought back to within nine, 74-65, with four and a half minutes remaining, but this was the closest they would get.

UMass responded to its first pressure of any kind this year, and in the face of an all court press, put the game out of reach. An astounding tip in by Erving and two free throws by the Roosevelt, N.Y. native, plus a Bettancourt jumper and it was all over.

Tony Williams, handled the frosh in the absence of Peter Brosca, who was in Storrs scouting UConn. Williams is now 2-0 in coaching this season.

Chamberlayne in the first half, showed a new dimension to basketball by substituting a whole team. The visitors had arrived only ten minute s befor e gametime.

Leading all scorers was Erving, who scored 31 points and added 18 big rebounds. The backcourt pair of Bettancourt and Pagliara each scored 13 while Austin added 11 and also ten rebounds.

McAfee led the visitors with 14 points, with Jackson scoring 13 and Rich Thibbodeau adding ten.

The Little Redmen play their final game of the semester and their last game until January 29 Tuesday when UMass travels to Storrs to meet the UConn frosh.

Pucksters Upset Strong Bowdoin 3-2 On Last Second Goal

BY KEN SCHWARTZ Staff Reporter

Co-captain Jim O'Brien's third goal of the game coming with only 8 seconds left gave the UMass varsity hockey team their biggest win in the last 2 years as they upset a previously once-beaten Bowdoin team, 4-3, Friday at Orr rink.

The play which sent the Bears packing was started by junior center John Hartnett with just 32 seconds remaining when he stole the puck in his own end after Bowdoin had won the face off and came up ice on a partial 3 on 2 break, with O'Brien on his right wing and co-captain Jeff Sanborn behind him on his left. Hartnett then drew the Bowdoin goalie, John Krol, over to the right before passing to O'Brien who fired the puck into the far corner.

At this point, the fans, who had been conspicuously boisterous throughout, really went berserk.

The Redmen, just as they had done all year, came on strong in the last ten minutes of the period. The goal was a long time coming, but it was more than worth the wait.

UMass had the edge in shots on net 39-36, with UMass sophomore goalie Larry Walsh kicking out 33 Bowdoin attempts. Walsh has given up only 11 goals in four games this year for a fine 2.75 average.

The win boosted the Redmen's record to 3-2, and showed the calibre of hockey UMass is capable of playing. The Bears had lost only to Northeastern in overtime so far this year.

Coach Jack Canniff's first line proved to be more than adequate in offsetting Bowdoin's high-scoring line, led by senior captain Ken Martin, as they were held scoreless. In fact, Charlie Hanifan, Paul Riley, and Mike Murray have had only one goal scored on them all year

The third line played what could have been their best game of the year. It was the line of Hartnett, Sanborn, and O'Brien however, that did the trick for the Redmen. Hartnett, although not scoring, played another outstanding game.

There will be no rest for the varsity as they play a tough AIC sextet tomorrow night at Orr rink in an 8:00 game.

Maroon Key Eleventh Hour Presents Putnam Barber

BY ROSE MILLER Staff Reporter

Putnam Barber of UMass' Sociology department speaking to a small audience in the Maroon Key Eleventh Hour Series last night said, "death in general is a circumstance where one avoids scenes and giving an academic lecture would be an affirmation of things I believe in and a gesture of defiance, one I would cherish."

Explaining his unwillingness to share what his inner thoughts in his final hours would be, he posed three means of leaving this world. The individual who, just before he dies, goes carte blanche, only points out the trivia of his live, while the individual who feels the need to pour forth all his deep secrets accumulated in his lifetime fails to realize that he is only espousing the mysterious position a man holds in society. This would make dreary commentary, concludes Barber. The next question is why not make it melodramatic, and Prof. Barber answered this query with "the being about dying is not melodramatic, but rather an embarassing business."

Barber contined with his thesis that dying is embarassing to oneself and to others by pointing out people in the American society hide dying in hospitals. The reason for the hiding and the embarassment, Barber cited, "that there is no way to make death comprehensible." Besides, "man is the only animal that knows it is going to die," thus Prof. Barber says, "both parties want to be done with the business of dying as quickly as possible."

Relating his job of teaching to the subject of death, Prof. Barber called teaching sociology at a university "trying to do the best of a bad job."

Police-Student Scuffles Rock French Universities

PARIS (AP) - Tough, new government campus control measures brought police-student fist fights and demonstrations to French universities Monday. The nation's biggest student organization then called for a national boycott of classes.

The fighting broke out at Nanterre University where about 1,500 students marched through the campus shouting, "Down with police repression!" after they found riot shock troops surrounding the university.

Faure said Sunday that "all necessary measures" to block chaos would be taken, including barring students from exams, checks on student identity cards at the entrance to campuses and stationing of police "to guarantee free access."

In a television address to the nation, Premier Maurice Couve de Murville Monday night demanded an end to student agitation. He also called for a hold down on prices so that France can fully recover from last spring's explosion of strikes and violence.

But as he looked forward to 1969, Couve de Murville said in his brief address that French industrial production is at record levels and that dire warnings of growing unemployment were not justified.

The nationwide strike call came from the National Students Union in connection with a "day of action" planned for later in the week.

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - Dissident students picketed two classroom buildings at the University of Connecticut Monday. But inside classrooms they made little headway in their campaign to discuss the suspension of a student for his role in another demonstration.

The so-called "strike" is aimed at making the university lift the suspension of Richard Savage, a 22-year-old senior and leader of Students for a Democratic Society, SDS.

Of particular note for this Marathon are the many outside individuals who have been invited to contribute-school superintendents, a sheriff, and high school students will be participating, adding further breadth to the scope of activities over the two days. A complete schedule of the more than 100 events to comprise this Marathon will be available at an information booth inside the front entrance to the School of Education building. The following list is a selection of highlights of Tuesday's session only.

Supreme Court Reduces Power of Draft Boards

WASHINGTON AP - The Supreme Court Monday reduced the power of draft boards to punish Vietnam war protesters by mustering them into the Army.

Draft boards cannot operate as "free-wheeling agencies meeting out their brand of justice in a vindictive manner," the court declared as it ruled in favor of a Wyoming divinity student.

When a man is exempted from the draft by federal law-a minister or reservist, for example-his draft board cannot take away the exemption because of his political, racial, or religious views, Justice William O. Douglas said in the 6-3 decision.

The Cheyenne draft board which reclassified student James J. Oestereich 1A after he turned in his draft card to protest U.S. war policy operated in "a blatantly lawless manner," Douglas said.

The justice said the court could find no authorization for use of delinquency regulations to strip a congressionally exempted man of his protection from induction.

The ruling is a blow at Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, who had advised draft boards to put "misguided registrants" at the top of the list of draft eligibles.

However, the decision shields immediately only men who are exempt from the draft through federal law. These include divinity students, veterans, national guardsmen, reservists, sole surviving sons and youths under 19.

Meanwhile, in a companion ruling, the justices upheld a law which forbids most draftees to go to court to challenge their classifications.

The 8-1 decision took the position that the "litigous interruptions" should not be allowed to stand in way of providing the military with manpower.

This means the only way a draftee can take his classification case to court is by refusing induction and facing prosecution as a draft evader or by going into the Army and applying for release by court order. This is a route most young men are reluctant to take. For, if they refuse induction, they can wind up in prison.

Practice Teaching To Offer Several Intern Programs

Next semester student teaching will consist of several alternative programs. Thursday, December 19 at 8 p.m. representatives from each plan will present the structure and purpose of their programs to elementary education majors, who intend to practice teach spring term.

Representing the Hartford plan are Jack Woodbury and Bob Mackin. Sally Van Camp will discuss the Springfield internship. In charge of the Supervisor-Team approach are Jack Ahern and Marsha Rudman. This program, as well as the Workshop Approach conducted by Joe Sabula, will cover the Amherst area.

Seniors will have a chance to talk with the coordinators and sign for the intern programs at the meeting. Printed material on the programs will be available Tuesday and Wednesday at the Education Club Booth of the Marathon.

Tonight at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, James Scannell and Frank Dubreil of Boston College will debate with UMass on the topic, Resolved: That a violent revolution in the United States is inevitable. Representing UMass will be Tim Hynes, a sophomore math major, and Neal Whitman, a senior majoring in history. Both Mr. Whitman and Mr. Hynes have done extensive high school and collegiate debating, and each has participated in previous UMass public debates.

Mr. Scannell and Mr. Dubreil are arts and sciences majors at BC. Both are members of the Alternative Program, a project which concerns itself with the racial crisis situation, and they have had much experience speaking before public audiences. Mr. Scannell recently appeared on the Today show representing the Alternative Program.

The debate is open to the public and questions from the audience are encouraged. Chairman for the event will be John Hogan, a UMass freshman from Granby and a member of the Forensic Society.

Draft Ruling Pleases Student

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - The ministerial student whose draft exemption was upheld Monday by the Supreme Court said he was "very pleased because it leaves the doors open for us to work in this country to change foreign policy."

James J. Oesterich, 24, of Cheyenne, Wyo., said he and friends in similar circumstances were "very relieved."

Undergrad. Economics Committee Is Hopeful Sign of Future Efforts

Provost Tippo seems to have created a sorcerer's apprentice of a monster with his August memorandum on joint student-faculty committees. His efforts have spawned several efficient-looking departmental committees-'committee' now seems in danger of becoming a dirty word at UMass.

Most of these new groups are made up of enthusiastic juniors and seniors, who have risen from the campus catacombs (such as Hills, Mary Lyon) per order of their departments. The effervescent George Sulzner, who presides over Government in Thompson Tower, is symptomatic of their leaders.

So far, the best organized are the 190 marching majors of Prof. James ("Paper Power") Kindahl (Economics). There they've got an Undergraduate Economics Liaison Committee which is all business. ('Liaison' is the new orderly version of what used to be called fraternization, in the academic circles where it happened.)

The Economics people have defined, and then divided themselves into, three and a half basic areas: the evaluation of specific courses, their curriculum in general, their faculty, and the Economics 125-126 sequence, which everybody knows is one of those Requirements. This last is the half committee.

The faculty is the stickiest problem; although Economics does have a lot more Goodies than Baddies. Father Tippo may not realize that his job is being made easier; but the department now officially warns its prospective faculty members that they may be subject to an informal grilling by a band of pestilential students. This happens in what are called "Seminars," a catchall term to describe a great deal that people do at UMass.

These Economics kids are real businessmen. Their group is no bull session of 50 inarticulate and ungrammatical English majors. There are only sixteen or twelve or nine of them; and they are unencumbered by an equal number of much-coached faculty with no provisions for discussing Those Required Things. Consider the lilies of the History department, who neither sow nor reap-and they have 4500 students in History 100-101 and 150-151.

The Economics people have discovered both main types of questionnaire-the specific (answers 1 to 5), and the jelly (what do you want out of UMass?). They are trying as hard as anyone else to determine what makes a good teacher. Most important, they are thinking of good ways to perpetuate their little committee.

We hope Dr. Tippo will be an (academic) grandfather a few years from now; but if some of these committees don't do some good THIS YEAR, he won't.

Dynamite Discovered in Brandeis Sanctuary

WALTHAM, MASS. (CPS) --- Enough dynamite to blow up several buildings was found Sunday scattered around a Brandeis University building where students have been giving sanctuary to an AWOL soldier.

Two Waltham high school students (who are called "townies" on the campus) were discovered with two sticks of dynamite in another building adjacent to the campus early in the evening. Mailman's Hall, where a "community" of more than 400 students has been assembled since last Wednesday, Dec. 4, was cleared for a search. According to one source, 16 sticks of dynamite were found within several hundred feet of the building.

Shortly after Spec. 4 John Rollins and the students began their vigil in the hall, a meeting of "townies" (who according to students are hostile to the campus as a rule) voted to invade the sanctuary. They advanced and several fist fights broke out, but order was maintained when the university students gave the high schoolers a microphone and the right to say whatever they wished to the gathering.

The vigil is continuing; more than 400 students are reportedly in the sanctuary building at all times. They have formed a community which meets daily to decide on group actions and which holds continual discussion groups on university and social issues.

The Brandeis student council has endorsed the sanctuary, and urged professors to conduct classes there for the vigilers. Some faculty members have done so.

The school's president, Morris B. Abram, who spoke to the sanctuary Sunday, said he was pleased with the students' non-violent reaction to the "townies," but has refused to take a stand on the sanctuary itself.

Smith College Professor Receives Literary Award

A Smith College professor has been awarded the 1968 Abington Award for his forthcoming book, "Sense and Nonsense in Religion."

The $5000 prize was awarded to Dr. Sten H. Stenson, a Smith faculty member since 1958 and, effective in January, chairman of the department of religion. He was given the award Tuesday by Abington Press in Nashville, Tenn., expected to publish the book in April, 1969.

The book defends religious beliefs against the most telling and broadly held criticism of our day and attempts to demonstrate the relevance of theology and worship in the modern world. Opening with a summary of the most serious intellectual objections to believing in God, the author, by using fresh arguments and illuminating what he sees as old truths with contemporary illustrations, develops an examination and refutation of these.

Dr. Stenson began his teaching career at Middlebury College, where he was an instructor from 1949-52 as an instructor and assistant professor.

A 1942 graduate of Columbia College, Dr. Stenson received his Ph. D. degree from Columbia University in 1951. His field of research is the philosophy of religion.

He is the author of articles which have appeared in various journals and anthologies.

Dr. Stenson spent the 1960-61 academic year on leave from Smith, studying at Harvard University on a fellowship. During the summer of 1963 he directed the Faculty Conference on Religion and Related Fields, held for five weeks at Kenyon College in Ohio.

Talent Show Highlights Frosh "Christmas Song"

A talent show, featuring several good acts, was the highlight of the freshman class' "Christmas Sing", held Sunday evening in the Student Union ballroom. About 300 people attended the holiday event.

As the audience arrived, members of the Statesmen and the Musigals, UMass singing groups, led carols. People were still helping themselves to the free hot chocolate and cookies, when Santa Claus, wearing sun glasses, made his grand entrance, accompanied by his helpers. Then the talent show started, with Dick Mourey and Linda Gerlitz acting as MC's.

The first group, the Grocery Store, did a song, lamenting the fact that "my eggs don't taste the same without you." The next group, Polish-American-Italian Style, was introduced as a novelty act doing their best to live up to that description by appearing on stage in pajamas.

They were followed by several folk singers. Julie Manella, who won third prize, sang "Urge for Going". Karen Silverman did a war protest song, "Little Boy Blue" and Buffy Sainte-Marie's "Codeine". Ron Blenkhorn did Simon and Garfunkel's "America" and "Suzanne". Linda Brown and Charlie Ranke did a few numbers, with "Pleasant Street" the standout.

There were several groups. Alex and the 4 Nudges featured Alex singing "The Story of Adam and Eve. The Brillig, a rock group, did "Hold On" and "Light My Fire". The Gravy, another folk group, used kazoos, tambourine, washboard, harmonica, washtub base, jug, and guitar accompaniment. They did "The Story of LSD", a war protest song, "I Don't Give a Damn about Vietnam", and "I Am a Woman", performed enthusiastically by the lone girl in the group. They won second prize.

Fran Botella won first prize with her rendition of several show tunes. Her "Second-Hand Rose" was a good imitation of the Streisand style.

Atransistor radio was given as the door prize. The MC's had a little trouble giving it away - no one had the first six numbers drawn.

Committee chairman for the freshman program were Fred Chanowski, Keith Mason, Sue Kray, Steve Horowitz, Dave Riemba and Rocky Hodgson.

"To Start With, The Top Drawer Contains The Aspirin"

INSIDE REPORT:

Hubert Eyes

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - Vice President Humphrey, now virtually certain to run for the Senate in 1970, is being strongly urged to set up a Democratic Advisory Committee to control top-priority party policy during the Nixon administration.

If the narrowly-defeated Democratic presidential nominee agrees, the committee could become a powerful instrument for making Humphrey more than just the titular leader of his party. As some Humphrey friends envisage it, in fact, the Advisory Committee could be the vehicle for another Humphrey-Nixon presidential contest in 1972.

At this early date, that is only speculation. What is sure is that Humphrey has decided to run for the Senate seat now held by Sen. Eugene McCarthy, the maverick who has said he will not run for reelection as a Democrat.

Humphrey intimates hope that McCarthy really meant what he said about not running himself, because Humphrey has no lust for a primary battle against McCarthy in their native state of Minnesota.

At the same time, these Humphrey men have no doubt that if it came to that Humphrey would take on McCarthy in the primary, thrash him at the polls, and go on to overwhelming election to the Senate (where he held a seat from 1949 to December, 1964).

The matter of the Advisory Committee is more complicated. During the long Democratic hiatus of the Eisenhower era, the late Paul Butler, then party chairman, was the sparkplug of an advisory council set up in December, 1957, mainly as an issue-oriented platform for the national wing of the party (as opposed to the more conservative Congressional wing, then headed by Sen. Lyndon Johnson and Speaker Sam Rayburn). As a publicity machine, it was extraordinarily successful, but it infuriated Johnson and Rayburn.

Humphrey is now being advised by old pro James H. Rowe, Minnesota National Committeewoman Geri Joseph, and other party leaders to establish a similar instrument to propound and propagate party policy during the Nixon administration.

The need now is not so much to compete with conservative Democratic leaders in Congress as to fill the vacuum that exists with the Congressional wing of the party in the hands of aging non-activists like Speaker John McCormack and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield.

If Humphrey could dominate such a panel (which would include a few governors, a few Congressional leaders, and such glamorous party figures as Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy--along with non-elective issue experts), it could give him a long leg up for 1972.

But Humphrey men are assuming that Humphrey himself would be chairman of the panel. In fact, a Humphrey chairmanship would start immediate backfires among partisans of Kennedy and Muskie, who are highly skeptical about another Humphrey Presidential nomination.

Thus the chairmanship might go to the national chairman of the Democratic party, as it went to Butler in the 1950s, greatly enhancing the power of that job (now held in Lawrence F. O'Brien).

Chotiner in Washington

Despite high political cost, President-elect Nixon will demonstrate the high value he places on loyalty by naming the controversial Murray Chotiner to an important post in Washington.

Chotiner, Nixon's principal campaign manager before Congressional charges of influence peddling forced him out in 1956, played an unobtrusive but important role at Nixon's New York headquarters during the past Presidential campaign. Now he is disposing of his law practice in Los Angeles and moving to Washington.

There has been some talk of the post of Solicitor General for Chotiner, who has a shrewd legal mind. That post requires Senate confirmation, however, and Senate hearings would dredge up the 1956 influence-peddling charges. It is at least an even bet that Chotiner would be denied confirmation.

Consequently, Nixon is now examining high legal jobs in the government that do not require Senate confirmation.

A footnote: The best bet for a Johnson administration official to be reappointed by Nixon to the job he now holds is Small Business Administrator Howard Samuels. Nixon talent scouts are impressed by Samuels's efforts to attract private enterprise to the black ghettoes. Further, Samuels, Democratic nominee for Lt. Governor of New York in 1966, would add another bi-partisan touch to the Nixon administration.

The Washington Report

Crime'n the Streets A Liberal Catharthsis

WASHINGTON - Crime-in-the-Streets is one of those issues which separates the liberal from the half-liberal, to the point of polarization.

A reporter for the Washington Post described to me the occasion of his mugging and robbery one night at Resurrection City. A young black, successful reporter, he was a strong sympathizer of the Poor Peoples Campaign. "I'll tell you, though," he said, "when that happened, I was ready to say 'to hell with the poor people'."

It was a familiar response that the liberal might catch himself thinking when his car is stoned or his house burglarized. And it does happen to the liberal more so than to the suburban Wallace man. I felt the same response only two weeks later when I myself was nearly mugged and pulled from my car while covering the same campaign. I remember what my mother said when I told her of the incident. "So what do you think of the poor people now," she asked.

Wallace's jungle is here. As a liberal I admit it. As a liberal I drive everywhere - with doors locked. I sleep uneasily, for last summer I was awakened by a burglar. This summer the Mayor of Washington himself was awakened by a burglar in his bedroom.

Last week, youths went on a window smashing and looting spree for four nights along a commercial strip with no racial motivation except their black, youthful lawlessness. Black merchants and white were hit indiscriminately.

On a radio talk-show a white man laments that he must break the law to protect himself. Since his business takes him into the ghetto, he carries a shoulder pistol; he has needed to draw it on occasion when assaulted.

Teenagers within the city are getting "mouthy" as one corner grocer called it. One 62 year old woman who runs a store near Western High School locks up at recesses and at the end of school. This week one student broke in, robbed her and hit her on the head with his pistol.

Washington buses no longer carry change since the fatal shooting of one driver and a series of other robberies this spring. Even the Macke Vending trucks remind one of a summer robbery. They too carry signs telling potential robbers now that the men are carrying food, not money.

Within my own precinct, the number of crimes per month has jumped from the mid-300's last year to the mid-500's this year, mostly in robberies and car thefts. The local banks have pooled some funds and started running half-page advertisements this week offering $2000 rewards in any of 74 bank robberies this year. (There were 29 all last year.)

The D.C. Stadium and Armory also are within this precinct. Last month several men and women were accosted and several stabbed following a Redskins game. Friends of mine describe a more subtle and frequent "assault" in the parking lots. "Watch your car for a dollar, Mister" men will be asked. And they better pay them a dollar.

The Liberal can respond two ways, but the first way belies his liberalism as described above. But the people who react in this way are usually those who vote liberal as opposed to labelling themselves liberals. Typically, these are the blue collar democrats who "go along" with a Humphrey or a Kennedy because they can afford what they are "giving". When these people then sense either ingratitude or the economic pinch of their generosity, their "liberalism" fades. They take the dialectical leap to Wallace, but for them it is not really a leap.

The real liberals, those who adopt the title, not only are those who can afford more "pinch"(as they can) but are those who can afford the extra COMPASSION demanded by a robbery, a car theft, or an assault. The liberal recognizes himself as an anonymous symbol - a white face among blacks. His acceptance of beatings and robberies because of this recognition serves to reinforce his awareness of the symbol and is the genuine Christian act of "turning the other cheek." He looks at the Bible-toting George Wallace with scorn.

Crime-in-the-streets is a good issue for the liberal. It poses the ultimate challenge to his political dedication. As with the reported for the Washington Post, it awakens him to his own reactions: the sense that everyone is a product of his environment and that lawlessness on the part of the blacks incriminates the environment they are subject to, that their actions are symptoms of more than an inborn savagery.

A black friend of mine runs a laundromat in Southeast Washington. He put it best: "here they have been telling us for decades that we are animals and now they get up tight when we start shitting in the barnyard."

As fellow undergraduates we sympathize with and support the current drive to evaluate the Relevance of Undergraduate Requirements. However, we believe that unwarranted personal attacks on faculty members are in extremely poor taste. The editorial that appeared in the Collegian last Monday exemplifies this lack of good taste.

Mr. Rice, the instructor who was attacked, is regarded by us as an extremely competent man. His competence comes not from a piece of paper; it comes from his post-graduate knowledge concerning the science of Geology. We, the undersigned, cheerfully testify to his extraordinary efforts to offer a truly comprehensive introductory course in Geology and his time-consuming and sympathetic efforts within the Department as the Primary Student Advisor.

Help Orphanage

To the editor:

The Christmas season has now arrived. This is the time for giving and helping others who are not as fortunate as ourselves. With this in mind the Class of 1972 is sponsoring a Christmas party for the children of the Children's Study Home, an orphanage in Springfield. It will be held at the Home on Wednesday, December 18, at 7 p.m. Twenty-five members of the Freshman Executive Council will be the hosts. There will be refreshments served to the children and, of course, Santa will be there. Each child will be given a gift from the Freshman class, with his own name on it. This way the child will know that it is his alone. By giving this party we hope that we can bring a little more fun and happiness into each child's Christmas.

We hope that everyone will support this worthy project. If you have any questions, ideas, or suggestions to make this party a greater success, please feel free to contact any Freshman class officer or member of the Freshman Executive Council.

Driver Education

Driver Education is a suppressed, but much needed course. According to the sign in Boyden there is such a course, but according to the Head of the Men's Physical Education department the course does not exist. Why isn't there a course in Driver Education when so many people want it?

Recently a group of students formed a Driver Education Committee on Orchard Hill. Our group is small and we would appreciate the support of the rest of the campus. A petition is being drawn up and hopefully next week there will be a table set up in the union with the petition. Please come out and give us your support.

If anyone is interested in participating in the course call Honey Schiffman, 546-6764.

Olevsky To Be Soloist For Symphony Concert

The first combined concert by UMass and Mt. Holyoke College Symphony Orchestra will be held this Wednesday evening at 8:15 in Bowker Auditorium at the UMass campus in Amherst. The concert will be under the direction of Ronald Steele and will feature the well known violinist, Julian Olevsky as soloist.

Mr. Olevsky is currently a resident artist at UMass and has an exciting professional background. He has appeared as soloist and as a recitalist throughout the world. His press reviews are impressive as has been response from the public. In writing of Mr. Olevsky's appearance as soloist with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, the News-Call Bulletin critic said, "Julian Olevsky, is a brilliant and warm-toned violinist and is one of those truly outstanding artists who are individual without being eccentric." Reviews from the New York Times to the Tokyo Shimbun has been equally lavish of their praise of this artist. Mr. Olevsky has made concert tours throughout the world and leaves in April for a three week series in various cities in New Zealand. Mr. Olevsky's appearance as soloist with the UMass and Mt. Holyoke College Symphony Orchestra promises to be one of the most exciting musical experiences for both orchestra players and music lovers in this area, for it is a rare opportunity when an artist of his stature is a permanent resident and is able to devote the great amount of time it requires to work with orchestra and conductor.

Julian Olevsky will be featured as soloist for the UMass-Mt. Holyoke combined symphony orchestras.

The program on Wednesday evening is open to the public without charge and will include Franz Schubert's Rosamunde Overture; New England Triptych by the contemporary American, William Schuman and Tschaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D.

BY MARGI O'NEILL

"The University of Massachusetts is quite exciting - it moves quickly with you."

So says Walker Gibson, and so he does. The Director of Freshman English spoke while leaning back casually in a brown leather chair at his Bartlett office. "I've accomplished so much in my two years here at the University - let's hope it's an indication of things to come."

Dr. Gibson spoke nonchalantly about his diverse duties as director of Freshman English - yet he couldn't conceal the overwhelming enthusiasm about his progress in the department.

"We're trying to make it possible for the student to focus on a personal interest and through this develop a responsibility for self-creation," he explained.

Since he became director, in the fall of 1967, Dr. Gibson has given the entire freshman English course a face-lifting - and more plans lie in the future.

"We're incorporating a system by which students take on various roles and voices in their writing. I'm looking forward to providing a series of options to expand the opportunities available to the college freshman," he said.

Gibson is also chairman of a committee which is focusing on "a complete scrutinization of the English course and its goals".

"Exciting" was his word - and "exciting" is the man.

Dressed in tweedy Yale fashion, Gibson spoke modestly of his book "Tough, Sweet and Stuffy", an essay on American prose style. "It's a very good book in its field, but then it doesn't appeal to everyone," he commented.

Gibson has degrees from Yale and the University of Iowa and taught 11 years at Amherst College before earning his first directorship at Washington Square College in New York City.

With a staff of 70 at UMass, including 56 graduate students, it is obvious that he spends a majority of his working time with young people. "I like it this way," he commented. "Teaching the young, enthusiastic teachers is a gratifying experience." Even with his classes, Gibson gets as much out of it as he gives: "I like to feel that I'm learning as much as my students do."

BY RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The letters NCO stand for three very important words in the United States Army, Non-Commissioned Officer, traditionally known to all as the sergeant.

According to one Army manual used in officer's training the NCO is "the backbone of the Army. It falls his lot to do much of the actual day-to-day close supervision of the men in the platoon."

And because such emphasis is placed on having good NCO's in the U.S. Army, the Army ROTC Cadet Brigade at UMass has its own program to develop good NCO's among the cadets.

The ROTC unit runs what is known as an "NCO Academy" in either the first or second semester and which is open to any interested sophomore cadet in the brigade. This fall the academy has been expanded to include any interested juniors also.

The academy itself is run by senior cadet officers and a number of junior cadet NCO's - all of them former graduates of the academy.

This year the program is being run by Cadet Captain Steve Thorp ('69) and Cadet Captain Robert Singleton ('69). Cadet First Sergeant Philip Rosen is the junior NCO in charge. There are in addition three junior squad leaders and four assistant instructors.

Twelve sophomore and four junior cadets are currently candidates for graduation from the academy.

Program of instruction for the candidates runs this year for seven weeks (Nov. 3-Dec. 16). The academy meets every Monday night at Dickenson Hall, 7-9 p.m.

Each candidate is instructed in proper wearing of the uniform, command voice, individual drill with and without the M-1 rifle, squad, platoon and company drill and methods of instruction. Above all confidence and leadership ability is stressed.

Candidates receive instruction first from the academy staff and then are left to drill themselves under supervision of the staff.

Weekly inspections are conducted and each candidate takes a practical and written examination at the end of his seven weeks of training, in addition to going before a review board of the academy staff.

UConn Lacks Ballhandler Sam, Joey Questionable

BY MIKE CURRAN Sports Editor

As if the University of Connecticut doesn't have enough trouble already, what with general student unrest and arrests, and an 0-4 Huskies hoop team, a band of scalp-hunting, 5-0, Redmen invade Storrs tonight for an 8 p.m. contest.

Second-year coach, Burr Carlson, has watched painfully as the one time power of the conference dropped its first four games to Yale, B.C., UNH, and Fordham, by an average margin of 18 points.

Still UConn has the great hoop tradition and looking beyond them would be a costly mistake for the Redmen. After all, last year was the first season in 32 years that a UMass basketball team beat the Huskies in the torture chamber at Storrs.

Carlson has yet to find a satisfactory lineup. Only sure starters tonight are 6'8 center, Steve Koski, a transfer from Leicester JC, and 6'7 forward Tony Budzinsky, a much improved junior.

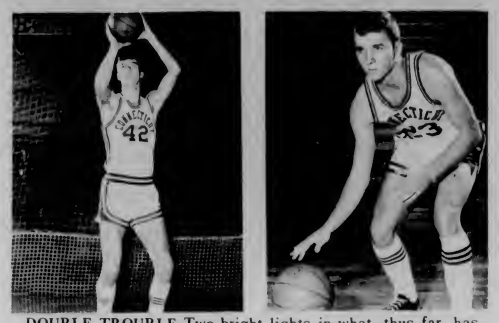
Koski, brother of former Providence star Tony Koski, has taken his lumps underneath from stronger big men, but did manage to haul down 20 rebounds against Fordham.

Budzinsky has been the surprise of the team, averaging 14 points and 11.7 rebounds per contest, He was strictly a reserve last season.

Other possibilities up front are 6'5 soph Ron Hrubala, who led the Huskies in scoring with a 17.3 average throughout the first three games, but has been sidetracked with a touch of the flu recently, and co-captain Jack Melen, a 6'3 swing man nursing an ankle injury, a 6'1 jumping jack, Lou Glayer, who sports a 10.2 average.

In the backcourt UConn is blessed with a wealth of shooters, but a dearth of playmakers. Any of five guards may get the call.

Most likely to start will be sophomores Tom McCrocklin, a 6'2 gunner who can also play in the forecourt and Freddie Staak, a transfer from St. John's with "Bialosuknia" shooting range.



Both these boys are poor ballhandlers, however, and pressure would force Carlson to go to his bench for smaller men like co-captain Fred Malan and sophomores Dave Yaker and Bob Boyd, who starred at St. Peter's Central Catholic of Worcester.

Coach Jack Leaman will counter with the starting lineup that has been so successful thus far. Peter Gayeska will open in the pivot, flanked by Ken Mathias and Jack Gallagher. Ray Ellerbrook will be at one guard spot. Joey DiSarcina was not at practice yesterday and is a doubtful participant. Billy Greely will probably start.

Reserves Dennis Chapman, John Shockre, Bob Dempsey, and Dick Starsiak, have given Leaman confidence that he can go to his bench. Dick Samuelson missed yesterday's practice with the flu and is doubtful. Dempsey will be hobbled by a charley-horse in his right leg.

The game will be televised by Channel 8 of New Haven for those not able to solve the maze of backroads between Amherst and Storrs.

DOUBLE TROUBLE-Two bright lights in what, thus far, has been a dismal season for Connecticut are forward Tony Budzinsky (left) and Co-Captain guard Fred Malan. Both will see action in tonight's game at Storrs.

Frosh Matmen Win Handily

The freshmen wrestling team is continuing right where last year's frosh team left off. Sporting a 3-0 record in this young season, the frosh team has completely dominated its three opponents thus far. Their opener was a perfect 55-0 win over Tufts, which was followed with a convincing 43-8 victory over what Amherst College called their best frosh team in five years. Saturday at URI ten weights were wrestled and UMass dominated every weight except one.

A no contest at 115 pounds had Barry Godowsky moving up to the 123 pound bracket, just to find some competition, and Barry pinned Ron Cascione in 1:59. In the 130 pound class Shelly Goldberg got warmed up after being taken down to start the match and pinned Vince Marseglia. Steve Jones wrestling at 137 pounds had little trouble controlling Rick Fournier before pinning him at 4:01. Clay Jester is the UMass Mighty Mite at 145 pounds, and Clay crawled all over John Dahon with 5:30 riding time for a solid 12-2 decision.

Jim Godkin took a little while at 152 pounds to pin Steve Sullivan, but there was little doubt the job would get done. Jim had Sullivan in constant trouble before the pin occured at 6:42.

Icemen Meet Strong AIC Six Tonight

Coming off a well earned, 4-3, win over Bowdoin Friday, the UMass varsity hockey team will face a tough AIC sextet tonight at Orr Rink.

The Yellow Jackets are currently 3-2 in ECAC competition: beating Middlebury, Salem State, and Williams while losing to RPI, who defeated Cornell last week, and Army.

The AIC team will feature two high flying forwards tonight in Gary Socha and Yves DeRome. Socha is a Senior from Westfield Mass. and has scored 55 goals and 48 assists in his first two years of varsity play.

DeRome, from Sillery, Quebec, was elected captain this year while just a junior. Although he's only 5' 9", 165 pounds he's very aggressive and will play one wing on a line with Socha. Another player to watch will be junior wing Bob Findlater from Springfield....

ICE CHIPS-After the Redmen's first 5 games Jeff Sanborn leads all UMass scorers with 11 points followed by linemates Jim O'Brien and John Hartnett with 7 each. The leading goal scorer thus far has been Charlie Hanifan at 7. It seems as though MIT has their replica of our now famous Curry Hick Cage. Saturday's game at MIT Saturday was cancelled because of rain. The Redmen are in the middle of an important 3 game series. Having won the first game against Bowdoin they now must face AIC tonight before concluding against Middlebury here Saturday. Before the Collegian goes to print again the Redmen will have competed in the Codfish Bowl and the Yankee Conference tournaments.

Gymnasts Impressive In Notching First Win Against Long Island U

BY JAN CURLEY Assistant Managing Editor

In a great display of class and performance, the UMass gymnastics team defeated Long Island University 147.00 to 96.15 at the Auxilary Gymnasium in Boyden Saturday.

The Redmen were ahead from the very first event and in no serious danger of losing at any time. In the floor exercises, Dick DelGallo and Bill MacAuley turned in impressive performance s with 9.0 and 8.45 scores respectively. Mike Kasavana posted a 7.5 average and Norm Vexler a 7.4. Long Island made a poor showing, with two men scoring under 6.0 and one getting a 7.0.

Rick Reilly made a strong show for the Redmen in the sidehorse event, displaying good height and an impressive finish. He posted an 8.05 followed by Frank Dean, 7.35, Joe Reed, 6.0, and Dana Hastings, 5.4. Long Island seemed to be having trouble hanging onto the handles and two men had to call time for more chalk for their hands. In the totals for that event, UMass had a 23.10 score card to LIU's 16.95.

DelGallo turned in a very strong individual performance on the still rings, his specialty, with a 9.15 score, the highest score on any single event in the meet. Reed turned in another good show on the rings for the Redmen with an 8.45 score. Mike Peloquin posted a 7.35 and Ed Jones a 5.75. Long Island scratched one of their men, and of the other two competing they managed to scrounge up 12.55 points to the Redmen's 24.95.

At the halftime, the score stood UMass 73.00 to 47.60 for Long Island, and the Redmen were way out of sight. The warm up was highlighted by DelGallo's emergence without his moustache. More people probably noticed this than anything else at the meet.

Collectively, the Redmen had an outstanding performance on the side horse vault. Steve Cary was high with 8.625 for his average on two vaults. Mike Kasavana had an 8.25, Vexler, 8.525 and Jones, 8.1.

Gary moved from the long horse vault to the parallel bars and moved his score for that event up to 8.75. Reed posted an 8.1, Peloquin 5.6 and Vexler a 7.35.

Stars for the Redmen on the horizontal bars were Don Bradbury, 7.3, and Reed at a high score of 8.6.

Frosh Five Seek Fifth Win

BY PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

This is getting kind of monotonous, writing all the time that the next UMass freshman game is going to be a tough one for the Little Redmen. These frosh just don't listen. They've won four in a row, all by ridiculous margins.

Well, anyway, here we go again. The UMass frosh face a tough battle tonight, as they travel to the old torture chamber at Storrs to meet the Connecticut yearlings, a team that started off by losing two straight and then has come back to win two in a row.

UConn is not overpoweringly big as teams go this year, but the Huskies have good depth at the forward positions. The home team lost in its opener to Yale, right after Thanksgiving, and lost to the Boston College frosh at Boston.

However, the Huskies have come back in the last two encounters. They defeated Leicester Junior College, 93-78. The victory broke 50 straight game home winning streak for Leicesier. This past Saturday the UConn defeated an alumni team from the Huskies that included Wes Bailosuknia, Tom Penders, Tim Smith, and P. J. Curran.

The two starting guards for the Huskies are Paul Zorsky, 6'0 from Waterbury, Conn., and Doug Melody 6'0 from East Hartford.

Frosh Gymnasts Triumphant

Paced by all-around man Tony Vacca, the UMass freshmen gymnastic team won its second meet of the season by a lopsided 119.33-100.23 margin over the LIU frosh last Saturday.

Vacca was the winner in two events, floor exercises and the long horse. He tallied 40.62 points all together, 3.5 more than the other Little Redmen all-around performer, Doug Salsbury.

Tom Carroll was the winner on the rings, while Dave Genest took the parallel bars. In general, it was a good showing for the Little Redmen.

Coach Julius Gundefsheim remarked, "I was real happy about our performance except for the side horse and the high bar. In those two events we were sub par."

The Little Redmen are still undefeated. They are idle until February 1 when they meet the Plebes of West Point in a home meet. The Little Redmen also meet another one of the "iron" teams when they meet Springfield on February 26.

If the Little Redmen can prove to be a strong team, with a few performers scoring in the varsity range, the Redmen varsity should be greatly improved. SR

Flu Is Now Declining On Campus

BY SUE GERSON
Wednesday Issue Editor

"There is no Hong Kong Flu epidemic on this campus," Dr. Thomas McBride of the infirmary said yesterday. In fact, "There are fewer cases this week than last." The peak number of cases in the infirmary was 85, which occured last week. Over the weekend the number of cases dropped to about 30-50. However, Mc Bride added that there are many students who have the flu but are staying in their dorms.

There is nothing special one can do to avoid the Flu except get enough food, rest, and try not to get run down. Unfortunately the infirmary has not been able to get the vaccine.

The Hong Kong flu is milder than the more familiar Asian Flu. After three or four days the worst is over. The symptoms are fever, muscle ache, headaches, sore throat, a hacking cough, and a general bad feeling.

Northampton Community College closed early for the Christmas holidays this week because 48 per cent of its students were absent.

Meanwhile, reports of flu and flu-like ailments continued to build in southern New England Tuesday, but still were not widespread in northern sections.

Schools, businesses and industry were increasingly affected by absenteeism. Even the health commissioner in Worcester, Mass., Dr. Kenneth MacLeed, was home with the bug.

In Hartford, Conn., 20 per cent of the city's public school teachers were out Tuesday, and the shortage prompted officials to double up some classes. A call was issued for uncertified college graduates and education students in colleges to fill the vacancies.

In Massachusetts and Rhode Island, several hospitals announced that they were imposing restrictions on visitors in an effort to keep patients isolated from the flu.

"WHEN TWILIGHT SHADOWS DEEPEN, AND THE STUDY HOUR DRAWS NIGH..." Perhaps nothing could sum up the prevalent feeling on campus quite so well as these opening lines from the UMass alma mater. As the student body prepares to evacuate before the onslaught of the Hong Kong flu, photographer Paul Cihocki took a few moments to capture this mood on film. More photos of unsuspecting dozers on page 2.

DEAN CRITICIZES STATE FOR IGNORING GRAD EDUCATION

"The state has shown no real interest in graduate education as such. What we've been able to do is a spinoff from undergraduate education at the university," according to Dean Arthur Gentile, acting head of the Graduate School.

At a Monday night meeting with the Graduate Student Senate, the Dean discussed the state legislature's tendency to act as if there is no public responsibility for postgraduate education. "They think the responsibility ends when students get bachelor's degrees, but the emphasis at this university will be more and more on graduate education," he said.

According to Dean Gentile, the ration of graduate students to undergraduates will be significantly greater in 10 years. "Where will the financial support come from?" he asked.

Suggesting a possible solution, he said grad students who are legal residents of the state should write individual letters to their state senators and representatives, describing the problems and requesting additional appropriations. Petitions and resolutions are suspected, he added, because "the politicians will think we, the administrators, put you up to it."

Asked why graduate students are being required to clear spring semester registrations Jan. 27 at Boyden Gym whether or not they are preregistered and prepaid, Gentile explained that the requirement is the result of mixups during fall registration when between 400 and 600 grad students were unaccounted for. The students reportedly returned acceptance forms but did not appear for classes.

Because an accurate enrollment count is needed to justify budget commitments, Dean Gentile said grad students are being asked to appear for the Jan. 27 registration clearance. "It should be relatively painless if you have completed preregistration," he commented.

Gentile discussed the University fee schedules and said he things it is doubtful that the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) could be successful in securing optional payment of the $25 per semester infirmary charge. "Sickness and accidents aren't optional," he said, noting that the university's costly medical service is financed almost entirely from student fees.

It is the Dean's opinion that the GSS "has a case" in attempts to obtain additional benefits for about $9 a semester which is not specifically earmarked in the $50 student fee. He said he would cooperate in discussions with the Athletic and Music Departments aimed at getting free tickets to sporting events and concerts for grad students.

Former Student Held In Wake of Drug Bust

BY BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

Amherst police have arrested a former UMass student senator on drug charges.

Richard Wimberly who is no longer a student, was arrested Tuesday in the Amherst police station. He is being held in the Amherst Jail in $2,000 bail.

Wilberly's arrest followed a raid on a North Pleasant Street rooming house which netted state and local police four other persons on similar charges Monday night.

Wimberly will be arraigned in Northampton District Court today on charges of possessing harmful drugs and narcotic drugs.

The other four appeared in court today and denied the charges. All four were placed in the Hampshire County House of Correction in lieu of bail.

Arraigned were: Terry Marashilan, 27, of 382 North Pleasant Street, unlawful possession of a hypodermic syringe, unlawful possession of a narcotic drug and being present where a narcotic drug was being kept; Michael D. Keane, 20, of Weathersfield, Conn., two counts of possession of a narcotic drug and being present where a narcotic drug was being kept; Rebecca T. Whaples, 17, of 169 Northampton Rd., unlawful possession of a harmful drug and being present were a narcotic drug was being kept; Katherine A. Perry, 19, of Sunderland, being present where a narcotic drug was being kept.

The four cases were continued to December 24. Bail was set at $3,000 for both Marashilan and Keane, $2,000 for Miss Whaples,. and $1,000 for Miss Perry.

Reagan Declares War On College Disorders

SACRAMENTO (AP) - Gov. Ronald Reagan said Tuesday a moment of confrontation has arrived on California college campuses and "there is no longer any room for appeasement or give."

Police will ring campuses "if that's what they must do" to keep the schools running and to protect those who really want an education, the governor, a Republican, told a news conference.

He added, "I think on the basis of attrition, Dr. Hayakawa at San Francisco State College is winning."

Rather than have police ringing the campus for months, Reagan said, "I would suggest ... concerted plans to get rid of those professors who've made it apparent that they are far more interested in closing the school than in fulfilling their contracts to teach, and likewise, ridding the campus of those part-time students or those nonstudents who are the militant leaders there."

He called these people "the criminal element" and said the idea of acceding to their demands is ridiculous.

Governor's Role In UMass Growth Disputed

When John A. Volpe became Governor in 1960, the Student Union was four years old, Orchard Hill and Southwest did not exist, and Alumni Stadium was yet to be built. As John Volpe prepares to leave office elght years later, a site for the University's Boston branch has been chosen and a third complex of high-rise dorms at the Amherst Campus is in the planning stages. The student body has tripled in size in the last decade. However, administrators and state officials disagree over the actual role played by the Governor in the building of the University.

Volpe has always prided himself on the attention given to public education by his administration. He told the MDC last year, "The fact is that Massachusetts last year ranked highest of all the states in the nation in the amount of increase made in the cost of higher education over the last four years. So we have stepped up the pace of spending for higher education faster than any other State in the Nation. We were way down, I appreciate that, but we have stepped it up."

However, in measuring the Governor's leadership in education, UMass President John W. Lederle warns, "one should be aware of the University's natural growth which forced people to acknowledge the need for more State support."

He went on to say, "The University budget has grown, however, University enrollment has also grown, and more buildings and more funds have just become a necessity ... the increase was inevitable considering the growing needs which the University has had to fill."

"Volpe feels he did a lot to help UMass. He thinks he did a lot more than we think he has done."

Lederle's sentiment was echoed by UMass Secretary Robert J. McCartney, who acknowledged the capital growth of the University during the Volpe Administration, but feels the Governor "was not the University's greatest friend."

McCartney summarized his feelings toward Volpe this way. "We've had a good capital growth, but remember that the Peabody administration was tucked in between that time. Our 15-17 million dollar per year capital is certainly great in contrast with other institutions, however ... we have had serious problems with our budget over the past few years. The Executive has made large cuts each year."

He then pointed out that the University's operating budget for fiscal '69 was cut by 38%.

Commissioner of Education Owen B. Kiernan however, disagreed with McCartney's opinion that Volpe's friendship toward the University is overrated.

Explained Kiernan, "Governor Volpe has done much for public education in this State. If nothing else, he has made the problems and needs of public education known on a State-wide level. This kind of publicity, coming from a Governor, gives the needs of a University much more importance in the eyes of all the people in the state. And this public awareness is a great money mover in the legislature.

"Also, I don't think that you can really criticize the Governor for cutting the University's budget each year. Cutting a third off of any state institution's proposed budget is not at all unusual, and I'm sure that the Governor would never cut any expenditure which he felt to be vital. He always tried to help the University whenever he could."

A past critic of Volpe's policy toward the University, Trustee Robert D. Gordon, refused to comment on the Governor's overall attitude toward the School. "I think that you have to be really close to the Governor", he said, "to be able to discuss this accurately. There are a lot of details which we never know, which play a major role in determining how things turn out."

He implied, however, that the University has grown during the Volpe Administration, and that criticizing the Governor as he leaves office will accomplish nothing.

President Lederle agreed. "I don't want to seem ungracious... John Volpe did a lot for this school...we grew under his administration and criticizing him now will not gain us anything."

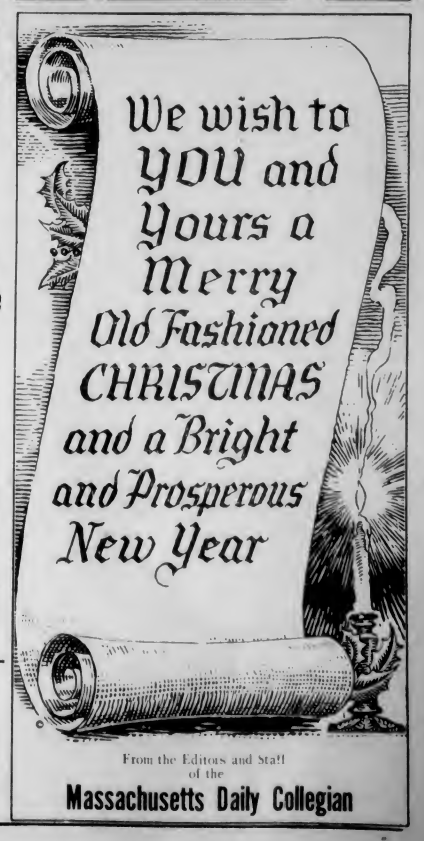
THE GROWTH OF THE UNIVERSITY over the past eight years, according to UMass President John W. Lederle, resulted from needs in the State which the school has had to fill, and not from the Governor's initiative. (MDC photo)

Cornell Prexy Rejects Demands For Black College



ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) - Cornell President James A. Perkins rejected Tuesday the demands of protesting Negro students for an autonomous Black College.

He told the students, however, that he would work with them to expand a proposed Afro-American Studies Program. He agreed that the program should have a Negro director.

Perkins and the students met Tuesday for the first time to discuss the proposal. The protesting students, who claim to represent the majority of the 250 Negroes at Cornell, and the university formerly communicated through a series of statements.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A State Department spokesman said Tuesday a meeting has taken place between U.S. and North Korean representatives at Panmunjom in an effort to secure the release of the U.S. intelligence ship Pueblo and 82 crewmen.

It was the first meeting since Oct. 30, reported press officer Robert J. McCloskey but he refused to say whether or not progress had been made in the talks.

The latest meeting was the 26th since last Jan. 23 when the Pueblo was seized in the Sea of Japan by North Korean gunboats.

CAMBRIDGE (AP) - The American Friends Service Committee Quakers has sent the first in a series of penicillin shipments to civilian warvictims in Vietnam areas controlled by the National Liberation Front, it announced Tuesday.

It was the first shipment that was sent without U.S. government approval, the committee statement said.

The committee said that an equal shipment of medical supplies was being sent to the Quaker service in Quang Ngai, South Vietnam.

"We have worked with many branches of the family of man," a committee spokesman said, "Sometimes our service has been among those whom other men call enemies, sometimes with those others called friends."

The committee said it has had many meetings with National Liberation Front representatives, held the prisoner exchanges, but has not yet been given permission to enter N.L.F.-held territory.

NEW YORK (AP) - President-elect Nixon visited the United Nations Tuesday, pledged his administration "to do everything that we can to strengthen this organization", and left one diplomat with a hint that he may soon advocate U.S. ratification of the treaty to control the spread of nuclear weapons.

That indication came from William C. Foster, chief U.S. disarmament negotiator, after a conversation with Nixon. The President-elect said during the campaign that Senate approval of the treaty should be delayed because of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. He has not publicly altered that stand.

But Foster said Nixon told him that while the time may or may not be right for ratification now, it is shortly going to be ripe.

Nixon spent a little more than 25 minutes at a reception for U.N. delegates and staff members. He also visited the U.S. mission across the street from the organization's headquarters.

But U.S. mission members said there was no discussion of his pending appointment of a new United Nations ambassador.

Nixon earlier named Dr. Herbert Stein, a Washington scholar and economist, to be a member of the Council of Economic Advisors. He also named John C. Whitaker, his campaign schedule-maker, to be Cabinet secretary in the new administration.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. AP - The Atomic Energy Commission, unmoved by protests, continued a countdown Tuesday for one of the biggest nuclear explosions ever to be detonated in the United States.

AEC scientists told civic leaders Monday the underground blast Wednesday would be similar to a one-megaton test in April and should cause no property damage or be hazardous to health.

CHICAGO (AP) - The Illinois Supreme Court stayed Tuesday the scheduled electrocution of Richard Speck to allow attorneys to present his case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Speck was sentenced to die in the electric chair Jan. 31 for murdering eight nurses July 14, 1966 in a townhouse dormitory on the South Side of Chicago.

Justice Daniel P. Ward signed the delaying order requested by Gerald W. Getty, the Cook County Chicago public defender. Getty submitted an affidavit declaring his intent to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to review Speck's case.

100 Staffers Prepare New "Index" Editors Institute New Procedure

By MARTHA CURRAN
Senior Reporter

Color transparencies, black and white enlargements, viewer lenses, proportion scales and people crowd the INDEX office these days as the 100-man staff prepares to meet the first-year-book deadline before Christmas vacation.

Editor-in-Chief Skip Fitch and Managing Editor Lyne Waldman expresses satisfaction with the progress of the 100th edition of the Massachusetts INDEX. Arrangements with Delmar Printing Company, which was awarded the $61,000 contract after unprecedented controversy over publication bids, have proved as compatible as Fitch had anticipated when he decided against American Yearbook Company and turned to Delmar.

The Executive Board of the INDEX has formulated policy and procedure for the rest of the staff. Jill Woolf, Chief of Personnel, and her crew maintain a working and amiable atmosphere as they unify the 100 man staff and serve as liasion officials between staffs.

Alan Marcus, Photography Editor, hardly goes anywhere without his camera. He and his staff attempt to capture memorable moments (and not so memorable moments) for the INDEX. This year the index will feature more color and more pictures.

Section Editor assignments were announced recently and these editors and their staffs are watching the yearbook take shape: Kathy Gilbert in Academics; Sherry Levenson in Campus Life; Judy Lenzner in Organizations; Judy Skibo in Seniors; Sandy Sokolove in Student Living (including Greeks); and Gil Norton in Sports.

Second Semester Registration Jan. 28, 29, 1969

Undergraduate registration for the spring semester will be held on Tuesday, January 28, as scheduled, according to UMass registrar Ralph Jones. Students may enter Boyden by either door on the north end of the building to register. Registrants must enter according to the established schedule.

Course changes may be made on the following day, Wednesday, January 29. This semester the same schedule as was in effect on Tuesday will be strictly adhered to for course changes on Wednesday as well. Registrar Jones announced that this semester, to facilitate course changes, most referral agencies, such as the Deans of Men and Women and Area Coordinators, will be represented at Boyden on Wednesday. The referral agency representatives will be authorized to answer requests and authorize changes.

The cashier's office will not be located in Boyden this semester for registration. Students having outstanding bills should go to the cashier's office in Whitmore prior to their registration.

Students who wish to make arrangements for special schedules or for parking privileges should do so in advance, through the Deans of Men or Women and the Area Coordinators.

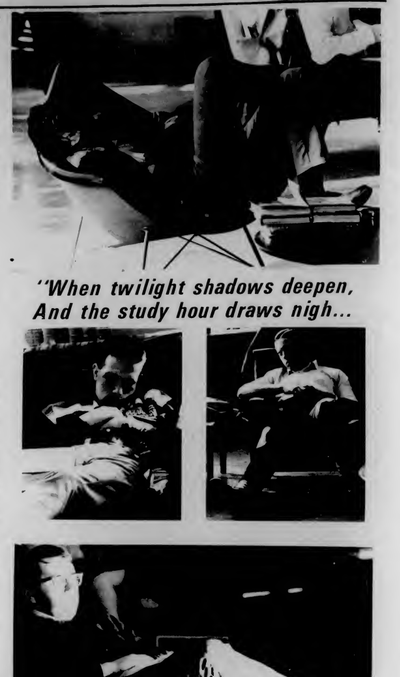
BY KAREN TARLOW
Fine Arts Staff

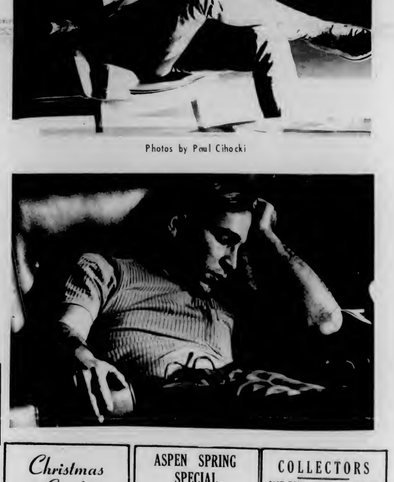
The University of Massachusetts Chorale, Chorus and Women's Choir presented a sparkling Winter Concert Sunday, December 15th, in Bowker Auditorium.

The University Women's Choir, directed by Alan Harler, began the program with a delightful rendering of the thirteenth century English carol, "Lullay, my child". The fourteenth century "Alleluia" which followed had a very solid beginning, and despite technical difficulties on the part of the recorder trio, was well done.



The members of the choir displayed a great deal of stage presence, and really sparkled. The major work performed by this group was Benjamin Britten's "Missa Brevis in D". Britten's ambiguous tonalities were bright and exciting as rendered by this small group. The strictly adhered to for course changes on Wednesday as well. Registrar Jones announced that this semester, to facilitate course changes, most referral agencies, such as the Deans of Men and Women and Area Coordinators, will be represented at Boyden on Wednesday. The referral agency representatives will be authorized to answer requests and authorize changes.

The University Chorale, directed by Richard du Bois, began its segment of the concert with the sixteenth century piece "O magnum mysterium" by Tomas Bictoria. This was followed by Herbert Howells' "A spotless rose", and another sixteenth century work, "Laudate omnes", by Sweelinck. The Chorale, seemingly off to a slow start, nevertheless displayed a great sensitivity to both the music and the texts.



"Incredible" is indeed the work for Poulenc's "Mass in G". Despite its vocal difficulties, the members of the Chorale displayed a high calibre of control. Although a few recognizable solo voices occasionally came through, the texture of the entire Mass was held and generally without distraction. The excellent blend and balance of the group as a whole counteracted the small technical problems within each section. The entire performance was polished and exciting; the members of the Chorale projected feeling musically and emotionally as well as vocally.

The University Chorus and Orchestra, directed by Alan Harler, performed Vivaldi's "Gloria", featuring soloists Dorothy Ornest, soprano, and Calliope Shenas, contralto. Also featured were Charles Lehrer, oboe, Ann Weaver, flute, and Dana Rankin, organ.

The difficulties of co-ordinating a string section with problems of its own, and a large choral group were largely surpassed in the performance, which taken as a whole, was impressive. Tempos were here and there a bit rushed, but were quickly controlled. The soloists performed admirable, and managed to keep individual musical footing through string accompaniments and choral sections. The chorus performed musically well, for the most part, and along with the orchestra rendered an enjoyable performance.

UMass Student Active in House of Rep.; May Run For Lieutenant Governor in 1970

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

Dave N. Vigneault, a UMass student who has served in the state legislature since 1960, has recently expressed interest in gaining the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor in 1970.

The 32-year-old Vigneault won reelection to the House in November from his district, Ward 8 in Springfield and Wilbraham. Vigneault is one of two representatives from the thirteenth Hampden district, formerly the seventeenth Hampden district. The double district has a population of 64,000 of whom 32,000 are registered voters.

When Vigneault first ran for the House as a college sophomore in 1960, he conducted a personal campaign, knocking on 10,000 doors in the district to make himself known and express his views. In a district where young elected officials are a tradition, Vigneault's style and personality gained him wide support.

Vigneault's constituency has undergone several changes in make-up since 1960. In that year he was elected to represent the double district of Wards 2 and 8 in Springfield. Ward 2 is largely an Irish-American area and previous representatives were all of Irish extraction. Ward 8 is a more residential area on the outskirts of Springfield, with a widely diversified population. Ward 2 was later separated from Ward 8, but Vigneault was reelected from Ward 8. In this past election, Ward 8 was combined with Wilbraham to create the new thirteenth Hampden district.

Despite his youth, the 23-year old Vigneault was well received in the State House in his first term by the older and more experienced members.

He points out that the factor of the equal vote is a great equalizer among house members, who may someday be seeking support themselves.

During his years in the State House Vigneault has been an active participant in the Democratic study group called the "Young Turks." Although he is a liberal Democrat in the Kennedy style, Vigneault has on occasion asserted his independence opposing the Democratic state leaders. The Boston Traveler said of Vigneault, "He doesn't play statehouse games."

Vigneault, a member of the House Committee on Education, favors universal education to the fourteenth grade. He served as the vice-chairman of the Committee on Constitutional Law and is also a member of the Committee on Towns, the Committee on Aeronautics, and the Committee on Civil Service.

"I would be one of the most experienced men in state government to seek the lieutenant governorship since Leverett Saltonstall sought the position in 1936, after thirteen years in the state house," Vigneault told the DAILY COLLEGIAN. Vigneault will have completed ten years in the house by 1970.

Channel 22 in Springfield represented its Outstanding Servant of the Public Award to Vigneault. He was an active supporter of the establishment of Springfield Technical Community College. He has also lent his support to the Springfield Civic Center, the Juvenile Court for Springfield, and a skating and hockey arena for the Springfield area.

Representative Vigneault is in favor of reducing the size of the House. He is a co-sponsor of the bills, increasing the term for statewide offices to four years and establishing the home rule amendment.

THE NEXT "DAILY COLLEGIAN" WILL BE JAN. 28, 1969.

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla.(AP)- The Apollo 8 astronauts Tuesday practiced returning to earth under emergency conditions, while launch crews worked toward Saturday's blast-off for a Christmastime flight around the moon.

NASA said the Apollo 8 pilots spent three hours rehearsing emergency procedures they would use returning to earth if spacecraft communications, guidance and navigation systems failed en route from the moon.

Countdown preparations for Saturday's 7:51 a.m. EST launching "continues satisfactorily," NASA said late Tuesday.

Technicians preparing the moonship and its 363-foot-tall Saturn 5 booster rocket completed spacecraft electrical checks Tuesday, installed ordnance devices used to separate launch vehicle stages in flight and began loading helium into the moonship's engine system.

Helium is used to pressurize other fuels forced into Apollo motors when they are ignited in space.

Apollo 8 pilots Frank Borman, James A. Lovell, Jr. and William A. Anders spent much of the day in a spacecraft trainer. Opening a new era in the history of exploration, Air Force Col. Borman, Navy Capt. Lovell and Air Force Maj. Anders are to become the first space explorers to travel outside the reaches of earth's gravitational influence.

If Apollo 8 orbits the moon Christmas Eve television viewers may be able to witness this historic event with an astronomer's eyeview through a telescope.

To show the Apollo ship in circumlunar flight NBC will hook into the telescope at the Denver Museum of Natural History. Its planetarium, completed five months ago, is the first equipped with a television-celestial telescope system.

"We might get lucky and catch them around the edge of the moon," said Jim Kitchell, in charge of NBC's coverage of the flight. "There's less chance of seeing them on the lighted side. That's a pretty hot surface.

"If we can pick up a 30-foot spacecraft 250,000 miles in space it'll be pretty amazing," he said.

The planned sightings will be at 4:45 p.m., 6:44 p.m., 8:42 p.m. and 10:40 p.m. Dec. 24, all times EST.

Several Area Colleges Give Students More Say In Planning For Future

A number of colleges and universities in New England are initiating student participation on faculty committees.

On the UMass campus there is student membership of some of the following Faculty Senate Committees; Academic Matters (1, non-voting), Foreign Students (1 undergrad, 2 grad., voting), Library (2, voting), Master Planning (3, voting), Scholarships and Financial Aid (1, non-voting), Student Affairs (9, voting), Summer Session (1, non-voting), Space and Calendar (1, ex-officio - Chairman SUG), Discipline Board (4, voting).

The committees which don't have student membership are; Admissions and Records, Faculty Affairs, Rules, Service Departments, University Affairs, University Computer, University Press, and Committee on Committees.

Of those that do have student membership, the member is sometimes ex-officio or non-voting as indicated. All seats for students on faculty Senate Committees, except for the one on student affairs, were filled as of Dec. 1, 1958.

The Amherst College Faculty voted to add three student members to one of its major committees, the committee on educational policy. The students will have full voting power in this 5-man standing committee of the faculty which considers and recommends changes in the college's academic program.

The proposal was voted on because it was felt that since the curriculum largely determines the students learning experiences students should be given a voice in shaping that experience.

The University of New Hampshire faculty senate reversed a previous vote last week and approved 47-5 a proposal to add 25 students to the senate which is now made up of administration and faculty members.

The vote, which is subject to ratification by the University trustees, came at a meeting which drew a large attendence of the coalition of student political unions and Afro-American organizations.

Boston College trustees unanimously endorsed a plan recently that will give students one fourth of the votes in the academic senate. Under the plan the faculty will have one-half the votes in the senate while students and administrators each have a quarter.

This means B.C. students now have a larger voice in the policy-making body than at other major American universities.

At Dartmouth College Students abolished their undergraduate Council as a prelude to seeking a more meaningful form of student government. They felt the Council was too cumbersome a body to be effective.

The head of the central committee of the undergraduate group will act as liason between students, faculty and administration, heading formation of a new student government group at Dartmouth.

Housing For Intersession

Temporary University housing will be available on a limited scale to residents who have legitimate reasons for requesting accommodations for intersession.

Students who need housing accommodations during this period must make an appointment in the Northeast Area Coordinator's Office in Leach House (545-0260) prior to Monday, January 13, 1969 to discuss why they must remain on campus. Consideration for granting room requests will be based on departmental work, extenuating travel circumstances, membership on an inter-collegiate team having a scheduled event during the intersession and extenuating personal circumstances.

Police Battle French Students

PARIS (AP) - Riot police chased groups of youths through the Latin Quarter of Paris Tuesday night and at the law school in Nanterre authorities buried tear-gas grenades to break up a banned film show of past student violence. These and other incidents recalled the pattern of turmoil that brought France to the brink of anarchy last spring.

For the first time since the springtime student-worker revolt, the Education Ministry announced it was closing a school - the Lycee Chaptal in Paris - because of continuing trouble there. And it threatened to refuse registration to protestors when the Lycee-high schools reopens in January.

Five arrests were reported in Paris' Left Bank student quarter after helmeted police broke up groups ranging through side streets shouting slogans. Police remained on the wet street through the night.

The events appeared to be the most serious since students made their delayed return to class last month following the May-June rebellion. Earlier, Tuesday, students on several campuses throughout the country flouted a government appeal for cooperation with new strikes and demonstrations.

The Ombudsman Idea

BY RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

The feasibility of instituting an ombudsman--an Americanized version of the Swedish-Danish "citizens' protector"--is presently being studied at UMass. But should the idea become a reality here, it will not be unique by any means.

In the November 11 "Chronicle of Higher Education" James W. Braman reports on a Detroit get-together of campus ombudsmen, of whom there are at present between twenty and thirty in the United States, with several dozen other institutions, UMass among them, considering such positions. The mode of application varies widely: some ombudsmen are appointed by the university president, some by the faculty, some by the student body. The post may be a full-time job, or it may be administered part-time by a member of the teaching faculty. Some are kept busy, but a professor-ombudsman at a Montana college has had only a handful of cases in two years.

Opinions about the value of ombudsman mediation also vary. Earle W. Clifford, dean of student affairs at Rutgers, likens the appointment of an ombudsman to putting a penny in the fuse socket when a circuit blows. "A decision to go the ombudsman route," he says, "is a fine advertisement for the failure of an administration in general or a student personnel program in particular to meet responsibilities for equity and communication in an academic community."

Mr. Clifford agreed with some other speakers that the universities are due for radical change, and that often the faculties stand in the way: "I need a student government mobilized to play a part, with me, in rocking the faculty boat." Along the same line, Frank Lucatelli, who directs the student-run free university at the University of Detroit, advocates that students walk out of inadequately conducted classes and set up their own classes, to show administrators and faculty members "how a meaningful learning experience is created."

By its nature, the ombudsman remedy, whether at an institution of learning or in government, is a compromise. If those in charge were wise and unselfish, an ombudsman would not be needed, nor can the concept help materially in situations where radical reform is the only solution. Yet, within its limitations, it can avoid or resolve a certain number of painful and even dangerous conflicts.

Braun tells, for example, of an incident at San Jose State College where a black student walking in a corridor of a classroom building had his hat knocked off by a faculty member, who told him: "We don't wear our hats in here." The student was furious, as were other blacks on the campus. The incident might have resulted in a major confrontation, since the college was already racially troubled. However, J. Benton White, the San Jose ombudsman, quickly cooled things off. The faculty member, it seems, had been knocking off students' hats for years to "teach them courtesy"; he apologized, and presumably has learned courtesy himself. In this single incident, the ombudsman may have earned his keep for the whole semester.

Many less dramatic instances can be cited, and there may be beneficial side effects. As Thomas F. Davis, a part-time ombudsman at the University of Detroit puts it, "The ombudsman is not the conscience of the university, but he makes it possible for a conscience to exist on the campus.

John and Goliath

"The cowboy from Marlboro Country," comments THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, "may be taking his last ride on television." If so, according to The Nation, a young lawyer named John F. Banzhaf III will be entitled to much of the credit. Mr. Banzhaf, head of Action on Smoking and Health, a citizens' anti-smoking group in Washington, asked the Columbia Broadcasting System for free time on WCBS-TV, the network's New York outlet, to combat cigarette commercials. C.B.S. declined. Banzhaf then appealed to the FCC under the "Fairness Doctrine." The FCC ruled in his favor in June, 1967, in an advisory opinion that required broadcasters to devote "significant" time to the case against smoking--say one anti-smoking message to every three cigarette commercials.

The Tobacco Institute and the National Association of Broadcasters went to court. In a 2-to-1 decision, a federal appeals court has upheld Banzhaf. "Cigarette advertising inherently promotes cigarette smoking as a very desirable habit," the majority opinion said.

WASHINGTON - As late as this past Tuesday (Dec. 10), when he discussed it with his advisers, nothing in the transition period had disturbed President-elect Nixon more than the continuing signs of President Johnson's insistence on a last-second, lame-duck summit meeting with Soviet Premier Alexis Kosygin.

Nixon himself has privately informed political intimates that he regards the White House pressure for a meeting, which would be held in Geneva, as "most unwise."

Furthermore, he has made it crystal clear to Mr. Johnson - either in one of their frequent telephone talks or through the foreign policy adviser, Robert Murphy--that he does not wish to be involved in any way.

For his part, the President has pressed hard for Mr. Nixon's cooperation with possible talks on nuclear arms control and anti-ballistic missile systems.

Nixon intimates say that Mr. Johnson has not actually invited Mr. Nixon to accompany him, if the projected summit talk can be arranged. But the President has tried to win Mr. Nixon's consent to assign a Nixon observer to the Johnson entourage - a suggestion flatly rejected by the President-elect up to now on grounds that it might compromise his own freedom of action after Jan. 20.

What privately worries the Nixon camp is that Johnson administration disarmament talks, either at the summit or a lower level, would complicate not only the basic Nixon policy approach to Moscow but also relations between the U.S. and its European allies, particularly West Germany.

Mr. Nixon, in short, wants to open a dialogue with U.S. allies in Europe before he opens one with the Soviet Union.

Beyond that, moreover, a

Prostitution of the University : Against Its Enhancement

A bill filed recently with the Massachusetts legislature proposes to add five faculty members to this University's Board of Trustees. The measure has been drafted and presented by Rep. David Vigneault, who is also a graduate student here, with the advice and cooperation of two faculty members from other Boston campus. The measure - partially prompted by the Trustees' recent decision opposed by the UM/B faculty senate - is not without precedent in higher education. The purpose of the bill, according to its sponsor, is primarily to "diffuse policy-making consistent with adequate functioning." This measure deserves more critical attention than it seems to have received to date.

The recent thoroughly-researched revelations about the intricate business associations between the trustees and administration of Columbia University may be fresh in many people's minds. Briefly, this investigation of Columbia's twenty-two trustees revealed that at least fifteen have primary interlocking real estate relationships, eight are major figures in the communications industry, five have primary relationships with leading national corporations, five represent the military-industrial complex, and seven have primary ties to either U.S. corporations or non-profit institutions with an international domain. This is not business, considering how completely a major university may be manipulated for the benefit of its trustees' personal and corporate financial gain. To avoid, or at least to attempt to temper this sort of development, the expedient of placing presumably "non-profit" faculty on a board of trustees would seem attractive.

I would suggest that the situation has not been completely thought through. The presence of faculty on a board of trustees will not, by any stretch of the imagination, assure a more open and less pressure-prone direction for a university than is presently the case. The vested interests of the academic world make those of the business world pale by comparison.

What sort of faculty might be appointed to a board of trustees? If ones first thought was of the business or engineering faculty, this course would be fraught with potential dangers from conflicting interests. It is clearly established for all who care to see that these two areas of any university are prime pillars of this country's corporate infrastructure. The advances and complexities of modern technology have given rise to a level of technological sophistication unrivaled in history. Given the proper applications of technology, our economy today can produce more of the more expensive, more superfluous, and less durable goods than any other country of the world. This capacity is presently an incompletely-heralded benefit of the corporate revolution that Galbraith charts so completely. Through the development of the mature corporation's middle-leveled technostructure - a product of the best graduates of this country's schools of business administration - the large corporation today has the proven ability to manipulate the so-called free market economy, and even the governmental economy, to its own artificial and contrived ends. These developments would have been largely impossible without the active assistance and compliance of these two areas of the university.

The natural science faculties must share some of this burden of guilt with the engineering faculty. The natural scientists are perhaps more closely tuned to, and dependent upon, government support and financing of their work than any other segment of the university. There is never a week passes but what the pages of the principal weekly journals report, in minute detail, the indicators emanating from Washington as to how federal policy and support levels are running. The recent setback in NSF funds across the nation sent shock waves crashing through these journals that have yet to subside. Government policy, apparently more than any other single factor today, shapes the levels and goals of basic research and activity in the natural sciences. The appointment of scientists to a board of trustees should be done only with eyes wide open.

The social sciences - particularly applied psychology, sociology, and anthropology - have established an unenviable record of indiscriminate response to government pressure and outright support of behavioral research that must remain classified. The Defense Department's studies of folk customs and traditions in Latin America and Africa were done by social science faculties, often to leave to dummy front research agencies. Counterinsurgency techniques are improved by a thorough knowledge of the social structure of the target country - all done through faculties of (applied) social science. Economists, of course, play a clear and crucial role, in alliance with the corporate structures, in the preservation and propagation of orthodox economic mythology. Sociologists from many urban universities are actively engaged in assisting their institutions to contain, and ultimately eliminate, minority and racial housing areas in their cities - all the while attempting to study and pacify the minority groups being displaced. The tailoring of a society's goals to those of a university, or those of a university to a government, could well be facilitated by strong social scientists on a board of trustees.

Faculty from the humanities area present different considerations as regards their appointment to a university's governing board. The greater number of professors of English, history, the languages and so forth seem to be free of the entangling alliances afflicting others in the university - the problem here is the one of too much of the outside world, but far too little of anything remotely approaching an intelligent citizen's concern about his society. There seems to be of these areas that Coffin spoke when he said that too many, for too long, have had their scholars in the ruins of the past, letting the present sicken as it will. It is in these areas most particularly that the introspective strictly-within-the-discipline view obtains. It is with the humanities that one seems most likely to find a faculty sharply tuned to who's been hired by whom, who's criticizing who, who's just been promoted, while remaining oblivious to employment discrimination within the university town.

It is here, probably more than anywhere else in the university, that the faculty have become concerned with educating one another by scholarly research and publications which advance the discipline; while becoming less and less concerned with anything save pre-professional undergraduate teaching.

Furthermore, the Russians are going to be living with Mr. Nixon for the next four long years. As some Nixon advisers see it, the Kremlin would be courting a possibly disastrous start in its relations with President Nixon if Kosygin took advantage of President Johnson's unseemly insistence on a summit talk.

In view of all that has gone on before between Mr. Nixon and the Soviet leaders and considering the corrosive relationship that Mr. Nixon has had with them in the past, the Russians are unlikely to make that mistake.

HUAC : New Personnel, New Name, New Tact

By TOM MILLER
College Press Service

If the two most recent sessions of the House Committee on Un-American Activities are any indication, we may as well see a new image emerge from this perennially controversial tribunal. These changes fall very neatly into three categories, all inter-related: new personnel, new name, and a new tact.

Coming in as chairman is Richard Ichord, a Missouri Democrat. Serving only his fourth term, he will be the youngest House committee chairman at 42. This is largely by default, though. The present chairman, Edwin Willis of Louisiana, was defeated last month; the number two man, William Tuck of Virginia, resigned, and next in line, Joe Pool, died earlier this year. This leaves Ichord, who is in his fifth year on the Committee.

The new chairman is already making some staff changes. The main one is a change in counsel. Chester Smith, who has been former Chairman Willis' favorite in now out, and Ichord protege Frank Conley, a Missouri Law School graduate, has replaced him. Remaining with the committee is their investigator of the left, Herb Romerstein. Romerstein, who works mainly out of New York, was active in leftist groups before he changed politics and went HUAC.

In creating the image, Ichord will probably not try to get deep-South Congressman appointed to HUAC when three vacant seats are filled in January. Instead, he will rely on conservatives of both parties from other parts of the country. These include Republicans John Ashbrook of Ohio, Del Clawson of California, Richard Roudebush of Indiana and Iowa's Democratic congressman, John Culver. The only southerner is Albert Watson of South Carolina, a nominal Republican.

In keeping with the "accent on youth" Richard Nixon has been pushing, the House group is shedding its old-age people and promoting its relatively youthful members. The average age on the committee as it enters the 91st Congress is under 45, one of the youngest committees in the House.

To change image also requires a new name, and Ichord is quite aware of this. HUAC like so many other obscenities, has been a dirty word so long it is almost acceptable, but Ichord will introduce legislation this session to have the name changed to the House Committee on Internal Security. Despite all the pronouncements to "clarify the committee's mandate," all this new name will probably mean is new stationery for the committee, and a new letterhead for the Los Angeles-based Committee to abolish HUAC.

The new tact is the most subtle difference. This becomes more evident after watching HUAC in-action this fall. Unlike the buffoonery perpetrated by Joe Pool when he held hearings, or the superficial red-butting under former chairmen, witnesses have traditionally used the first, fourth and fifth amendments in refusing to cooperate with the committee, dating back to its origin over thirty years ago. The New Left, though, has been using a new method: over-cooperation. All of the left's witnesses this fall have given full, sometimes overcomplete, answers to committee counsel queries, specifying date, place, people and when relevant, political affiliation.

Moreover, the witnesses have been spelling out to the fullest their own personal political philosophies. Tom Hayden for instance, spent over six hours before the committee expounding his owndeas on America's social and political sickness.

Toward the end, he said the reason there were no demonstrators or picketers outside the hearings was that "the job has already been done on HUAC. Appearances before HUAC are taken as a sign of respectability on campuses--or at least as a joke."

Ichord, more than any HUAC chairman before him, at least showed a vague understanding of what Hayden was alluding to. He told Mobe chairman Dave Dellinger of the anguish one of his constituents had with two sons; one who volunteered for Vietnam and the other who is considering emigration to Canada to avoid military service.

Committee counsel Conley is doing less guilt-by-association questioning than his predecessor. He is even injecting a bit of literary knowledge -- in his final question to Hayden he quoted from Ambrose Bierce in THE DEVIL'S DICTIONARY.

The only vivid reapresentative of HUAC's past is Cong. Albert Watson. He continually got into discussions with witnesses on superficial points, and invariable lost out. On a couple of occasions he was even gaveled down by the committee chairman.

Like so many other rightist groups, HUAC is adopting more sophisticated techniques. The image may be changing, but it seems fair to say the message will remain the same.

Double-Take

JOHNSON CITY, Texas (LNS) -- Twenty-seven years ago Congressman Lyndon Baines Johnson commented on what he would do to support himself after he retires from public office.

"My wife has a degree in journalism from the University of Texas. She always thought she could get a job on a newspaper if she had to. I had taught school a little while, but I wasn't competent to go back to that. When I thought about it all, I figured I could make a living as a salesman."

Next year Lyndon will teach at the University of Texas. He will also try to sell his version of the last six years.

WOMEN

Prisoner of Love

By DAVID NEWMAN
and ROBERT BENTON

For all its jollity, this particular season has a big drawback for many of you. For some, away from home for the first time, it will be a jolt. For others, who have been through this before, it's ancient history, but you're still as stymied by it as a novice. We're talking about going home to spend the holidays with family and finding out that not only do they treat you as if you were still ten years old, you yourself feel ten years old. Psychiatrists call it regression, Wolfe called it "You Can't Go Home Again" (except you have to), but you'll never be able to pin it that neatly. It's an intangible, frustrating feeling that invariably brings on a severe case of depression just when everyone is gathered around singing "Deck the Halls."

Here's how it works. You've cut the cord and gone off to college, or to work in some other city, and for months, even years, you've felt like a grown-up, independent woman. Then you come home for a visit and by the end of the first day you have been subjected to so many subtleties and nuances (both real and from within) which conspire to make you feel like the little girl who used to live there that you wonder if that cord was ever cut at all, or even just frayed a little.

Don't blame Mama and Papa, half the time it isn't their doing. Sometimes it is, of course: the 24-year-old grad student whose mother keeps coming into her room after midnight to tell her to turn off the light, stop reading and go to bed, has a legitimate complaint. But the insidious thing is the way she herself feels guilty about it in her mother's house. And that split moment when she found herself reaching for the flashlight so she could secretly read under the covers, only to remember that that flashlight has been gone from its hiding place for ten years - well, it's too embarrassing to talk about.

In every parent's soul, no matter how liberated there is always a tiny, persistent, probably eugenic belief that someday the kid will return for good. Oh, maybe she'll get married, but then she might, she just might, come to the next block. It is this kind of thing you're up against. It is also habit. You spent your formative years with them, behaving in great part according to the values and rituals they established, and once you get back in that same environment something happens to you. You feel little. You take (often reviled) orders. You shuffle your ideas, knowing that some of them might rub the folks the wrong way. And as for your sex life--it's as if it never happened.

Yes, we're exaggerating and no, we don't hate parents, but if you're at all honest with yourself you know that the you who comes home for Christmas isn't really the you who goes back to college or work. It doesn't happen only with parents, as kid sisters and kid brothers know too well.

To really see it at its worst, complicate it by making it the situation where you bring the fiance home for the first time, the man with whom (whether you have already or not) you are going to be sleeping someday. Just feel those vibrations around the old homestead! It's a terrific adjustment for your parents to make, and what often happens is that you suddenly begin treating him in a way that he can't understand. Suddenly, at your home, you're kind of cool (although you don't mean to be), assenal (ditto), and tough on him, because you're unfortunately anticipating all the criticism your folks are going to level at you one night around the kitchen table after he's gone up to the guest room. ("I'm just not sure he's really the boy for you." "Shhh, he can hear you." "Since when can't I talk in my own house?" "I didn't say that, Mom!" "You see how confused you are? You're still too young honey," etc., etc. ad infinitum.)

Now the question is, what can you do about it, and the answer is, not a hell of a lot (assuming you are going to pay that Christmas visit, anyway). Except for this: you can anticipate, realize the transformation that is bound to affect you, and thereby guard against its upsetting you overmuch. Given the fact that you are mother's little girl, it becomes a long, arduous, and necessary process to convince her that you are also your own big girl. And, it's even more important for you to realize it, too.

Does it ever end? Yes, it all comes to a finish the day you present them with their first grandchild. At that moment, they just have to recognize that you are no longer the little twerp who used to leave her room a mess, and, funny thing, they don't care any more. The reason for that is, now they have a new little twerp to contend with. And then you'll have the rather enjoyable experience of watching them give all the love to the baby that they gave to you without one-tenth the mistakes they used to make. Grandparents never make a kid neurotic, you see; that's your job.

Sand down your board or plaque so it will be smooth when you place the print on it.

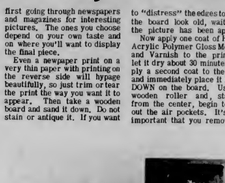
DECOUPAGE
Yesterday's Art Today

New York (ED) - Thanks to modern technology, the ancient art of decoupage is now enjoying one of the biggest revivals in centuries. Decoupage is the technique of applying a print to wood and varnishing it until a porcelain-like surface is achieved. It's a fascinating craft that goes back to the days of the earliest civilizations.

Hundreds of years before paper even existed in Europe, Chinese peasants were cutting intricate designs representing animals, fish, landscapes and folktales. In 16th Century Italy, decoupage was known as "l'arte del bone powero" - the poor man's art. People who couldn't afford painted furniture achieved the same lavish effect with decoupage.

The French developed decoupage even further and gave it its present name in the 19th Century. It became a favorite pastime in the 18th Century French court and a fashionable hobby in England in the 19th Century. One of the most famous examples of decoupage is a floor screen done by the great poet, Lord Byron. Pictures of his favorite authors, actors, and actresses are on one side, while prize righters adorn the other.



As lovely as its results were, the 4,000 -year-old decoupage was a difficult and time-consuming procedure. It meant applying a print to wood and varnishing it as many as 25 times until the edges seemed to be part of the surface. But today, the miracle of plastics is responsible for a new technique called hyapco. With this method, the print looks as if it were actually printed on the wood, the wood grain shows through the picture, and the satin-like surface remains.

Try this delightful new way of achieving fine works of art by first going through newspapers and magazines for interesting pictures. The ones you choose depend on your own taste and on where you'll want to display the final piece.

Even a newspaper print on a very thin paper with printing on the reverse side will hyapco beautifully, so just trim or tear the print the way you want it to appear. Then take a wooden board and sand it down. Do not stain or antique it. If you want to "distress" the edges to make the board look old, wait until the picture has been applied.

Now apply one coat of Hyplar Acrylic Polymer Gloss Medium and Varnish to the print and let it dry about 30 minutes. Apply a second coat to the print and immediately place it FACE DOWN on the board. Using a wooden roller and, starting from the center, begin to roll out the air pockets. It's very important that you remove all the air bubbles; their presence will prevent the print from transferring.

Placing a heavy object on the board for an hour or so will help set the print and keep it flat. Let this dry thoroughly, about 24 hours. This is the deckling step because polymer (a water soluble material) becomes waterproof when it is completely dried. If you don't wait until it's thoroughly dry, you run the risk of losing the print.

MUSEUM MASTERPIECES make themselves at home when you hyapco your favorite prints. Even starting a personal art gallery in the living room is easy with this fascinating technique. Just mount small reproductions of famous paintings on wooden plaques and you can enjoy the treasures that hang in the Louvre or Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Time Will Tell

To the editor:

This is in reply to the letter by Joe Donohue printed in your issue of December 16.

If Mr. Donohue had listened to the announcement of the new cabinet by president - elect Nixon, he would have discovered that Governor Volpe began his political career in the Eisenhower administration in Washington, not on the state level or even in Massachusetts.

Also, granted Governor Volpe is "abdicating his gubernatorial throne" however, simple mathematics shows that if a Massachusetts elected official with a four year term desires to accept a federal appointment by an incoming president, he must leave an unfulfilled term as the terms in Massachusetts differ by two years from those of the federal government.

Before the Afro-Am tries to straighten out the confusion in my mind, they should first straighten out the confusion in their own minds. And before them make statements as to whom their demands are for, they should first find out and KNOW who they are for.

Slight Confusion

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the interview in Thursday's (12-12-68-) paper with the Afro-Am, concerning its meeting with Van Meter.

I am a bit confused. in this particular interview Kinard stated that "white students are not allowed", yet at a previous meeting with this same group at another dorm, Robert Henderson said that white members were allowed. Obviously one or the other of these gentlemen must be in error; (Does SDC and the Student Senate support racist organizations?)

Another point in which I am a bit muddled: The first of the demands of the Afro-Am is the disarming of the police and that this "is a matter of life and death." As a support for this argument they refer to the fact that only one incident since 1963 has involved the use of a gun. I would take this more as proof that the police do not indiscriminately use their weapons, except where needed. And if they (the police) have not used their guns in six years, why is it now a "matter of life and death" that they be removed?

A third point of unclearness is the statement that "the demands were not made specifically for black students, . . ." Except for those demands involving sensitivity training, I did not see the words WHITE STUDENTS mentioned, but the DEMANDS mentioned several times. If these demands were not made for blacks, specifically, why were black students mentioned specifically? And if these demands were made for white as well as black students why were the white students not named more often?

Beatles' Film Voyage Is Best Trip Ever

BY PAT HENRY
Queens College Phoenix/CPS

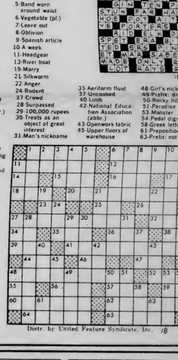
In the space of 85 minutes "Yellow Submarine" manages to make all other animated cartoonings look like pre-Disney, and illustrates a kind of stoned-out creativity that no amount of TV copycatting could ever duplicate.

Add to this some of the group's best music, a storm of outrageous puns and one-liners of the sort that endeared "A Hard Day's Night" and "Help"! to critics, and a sure-fire, honest-to-God classic emerges. The film may well find its final resting place in the collection of Museum of Modern Art's Film Library, though not, as rumored about at the idea.

The thing that will get you right off is that crazy drawing. The scenery designed by Heinz Edelmann has that quality of early daguerrotype enhanced by the brush of a Paul Klee--time and space are telescoped and blown out and the art-work seems to proceed along several planes at once. Reading the paperback based on the movie gives no sense at all of the depth achieved by the dozens of artists who contributed to the film.

"Things" are used liberally in and with the animation; in the Beatles' house (called the "Pier") dozens of doors are opened, hosting floods of objects, art, props and crap. Another arresting technique is punching holes in the cartoon track and filling the spces with clips of regular movie film; the effect is used to good advantage during the song "Eleanor Rigby".

John, Paul, Ringo and George are sure caricatures, but they bear no resemblance to the way they appear on Saturday morning television. Tall, lean and colorful, they ooze through the film with the ease of fluidity of musical tones and with the same I'm -a-household-word suavity of the real four.



They deliver some really awful plays on words without a shiver and complete their plays without ever descending to low comedy-leaving that to the other members of the "cast." It all comes off as mid-self-satire, which saves them from Monkees-like buffoonery. As usual, Ringo plays foil to the other three, Lennon lays down most of the patter, while Paul and George concentrate on the music.

"Liverpool can be a lonely place on Saturday night--and it's only Thursday morning," reflects a morose Ringo, just before he notices the garishly colored submersible that is following him through the streets. The craft is manned by Old Fred, blackface and recently appointed Admiral of the navy of Pepperland. He has come for help in freeing Pepperland from the domination of the Blue Meanies, a group of music-and color-hating invaders. The five of them set out on the return trip, passing through the troubled waters of the Seas of Science, Time, Monsters, and Holes, respectively. They stop to pick up Jeremy the Boob, a Nowhere Man who writes his own novels simultaneously and claims to hold degrees in every field there is.

Their reception on arrival is quiet, because all of Pepperland's fashion-plate people have been bleached of color and left paralyzed by the Meanie attack. Of course, the Beatles drive the blue barbarians out with sleight-of-hand, imperssonation, music and a lot of love, and the ending is properly hoppy. Even the Chief Blue Meanie repents of his war crimes and joins in the singing. This is almost the end of the film--splashy, rainbow tinted and joyous--except for a brief clip in which the real Beatles appear to advise the audience that more Meanies have been sighted in the area, and that everyone had better leave the theatre singing.

ANALYSIS

The Failure of White "Help" Programs

BY SANDRA COLVIN
College Press Service

MONTGOMERY, Ala. - During the past few years countless "help" programs have been initiated for black people by white people. These have been more numerous in the South than anywhere in the country, whites are attracted to the South because of its historical significance in the black peoples' struggle for liberation.

Some whites saw the South as an opportunity to gain experience and material for bestsellers when they returned to the North. And many of the liberals among them, asking, "Are things really that bad?", discovered that conditions for black people in the South were indeed much worse than even the television and newspaper portrayals, and poured into the South en masse, competing with one another to start the most noted "help" programs.

But "self-help" programs - the ones black people have always talked about building cooperatively for themselves - have had to back arithmetic money from liberal whites who want their own glory from helping blacks. Five such projects are dying now in Alabama for lack of money and support.

SNCC

A very clear example of white reactions is the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). Black students marched, demonstrated and sang freedom songs until they were physically exhausted, mentally frustrated and hoarse. Many were permanently injured, thrown into filthy jail cells and killed demanding freedom, justice and equality for black people.

But not until, in the early 1960's, large numbers of white students came from the North and got their heads bloodied by police billy clubs, did these blacks make any progress toward improving the conditions of black life in the South. Then, thousands of dollars were poured into many rights organizations to aid massive voter registration drives.

As long as blacks were fighting for the right to vote without police harassment and the right to peacefully eat hamburgers at a lunch counter, money from liberal whites came pouring in. Good white kids were still at the black freedom fighters' sides.

Then Stokely Carmichael popularized a slogan as old as Reconstruction: Black Power. The slogan threw the white community into terror. Had God forsaken America? What was niggers talking about, anyway?

Carmichael explained the Black Power 'self-help' program eloquently. But except for personal appearances where he could explain them himself, his ideas were at the mercy of commercial newspapers and televison for publicity. And the mass media, recognizing that Carmichael had struck a responsive chord in black people, set out to make the black community reject Black Power.

White journalists did their best to make his program for blacks as obscure to black people as possible. They distorted, schemed and lied to keep Carmichael's truth from the ears of black people.

Finally, the dynamic black spokesman came to Alabama, warning, "You can tell George Wallace and Jim Clark too, that the freedom fighters are coming their way." (Jim Clark is the former sheriff of Dallas County, whose county seat is at Selma.)

LOWNDES COUNTY

Lowndes County became a base for Carmichael in Alabama, and its people understood and agreed with his concept of black power.

Local leaders began to demand the right to control their own destiny. Blacks demanded massive voter registration and the right to run their own candidates for county offices. Through constant effort at mobilizing the black community, the Lowndes County Freedom Party was formed, with a beautiful black panther as its emblem. Black Power!

The Freedom Party was a BLACK program, and an important one. Where were the liberal-minded whites? From the beginning, it was clearly explained that the black community would exercise complete and full control over the project. And whites could not be found to help set up the Black program.

The cry for freedom, justice and equality was no longer a plea, but a demand. There was no place for the white college kids here, so the blacks told them to go back to their own communities and talk to their families, friends and the leaders of the white masses. When they did so, the white money stopped.

Whites were not interested in funding an all-black project because they knew their controlling hands would not be accepted.

The black community began more and more to think about cooperative control of their own community. It took a long time of "rake and scrape," but today the Lowndes County community can be proud of itself. In a few months, a supermarket and service station will be ready for business. The project is called the Lowndes County Co-op, and will provide employment for local blacks as well as profits.

THE SOUTHERN COURIER

In early 1965, Alabama had a chance to realize a long-term SNCC goal - a sound and accurate communications system to service the black community and black universities. In that year, the Southern Courier began publishing. The paper concentrated on presenting both sides of rights cases and on extensive coverage of poor housing conditions, job discrimination, and poor educational facilities for blacks.

Howard Moore, a black attorney in Atlanta who has helped the Courier, talked recently about the original concept of the paper. The white students who set up the paper were to stay only until a qualified black staff had been trained and was ready to take over. They they would leave - all of them.

The paper's first issue appeared in July 1965. For the next two years it became one of the most articulate black voices in the country, exposing discrimination and dealing with the issues that concerned the black community in the South. Every issue has always contained one - or two-page picture essays which became eagerly awaited by the thousands of illiterate blacks in the South.

Lack of funds was always a constant threat to the Courier, despite two Ford Foundation grants made just in time to keep the paper from folding. Staff members were harassed on many occasions and beaten on a few. Equipment has been forcefully taken from staffers by police. But the paper continued to function, challenging the white community to answer its questions about their treatment of blacks in their cities.

But during the past few months the Courier has started a backward trend. The paper has lost most of its relevance to the black community. Its subscription rate has declined, and relevant news articles are few and far between.

More serious, the paper seems to have lost its original goal - that of becoming a newspaper run by blacks for blacks. The present editor, Michael Lottman, a white, has not, as was intended, been training a black to take his job. And even if he were, blacks would not want to take the Courier over any more. Making it a relevant paper again would be harder than starting a new one.

COMMUNITY EDUCATION PROGRAM

Out of Tuskegee, Ala., came the Tuskegee Institute Community Education Program (TICEP), a two-year program funded primarily by the federal government. Students from predominantly black Tuskegee Institute were hired as teachers for the centers set up in twelve Alabama counties. TICEP set out to spur adult education and tutor children of all ages.

Timothy Mays, a former Tuskegee student and teacher in the TICEP, said the program was set up by whites, but that it had been run locally by blacks since its establishment.

"We taught people to use what they had effectively ," Mays said. Adult training was stressed, but children were also encouraged to develop writing and artistic talents.

In Pike County, the TICEP center was an interesting place to go for many young people. During the few hours they spent at the large house in which classes were held, they were urged to express themselves completely and effectively.

When the money appropriated for the TICEP by the federal government ran out last year, there just wasn't any more to go on. The community, which completely supported the project, asked why more money wasn't available. Many of the blacks believe that the TICEP had become too effective in mobilizing the black community, and so the government chose to let it die.

"IBM is so involved in the electronics field, I'd always assumed they weren't particularly interested in M.E.'s," says Andy Simon.

Andy got his M.E. degree in 1967. He's now a packaging engineer in memory development at IBM.

Andy found out why IBM needs good mechanical engineers when he went to his campus interview. As electronic packaging gets smaller and packaging density increases, a lot of new problems arise. And the M.E. has to solve them.

As Andy says, "When I design the hardware package for a micro-electronic memory unit, I deal with heat transfer and other thermal problems, vibration and shock analysis, and electromagnetic compatibility. The associated connector design work gets me into stress and creep analysis and Hertz contact stress and evaluation."

Then comes production

That's only part of Andy's job. After his team designs, develops, and produces a prototype memory unit, he has to work closely with manufacturing engineers, advising them on machines and processes to mass-produce the unit.

"It's tough but rewarding work," says Andy, "because the problems change with each new assignment. So an M.E. gains a lot of experience fast. The kind of experience that's bound to help him move up the ladder quickly."

Check with your placement office

If you're interested in the opportunities for mechanical engineers at IBM, ask your placement office for more information.

Or send a letter or resume to Paul Koslow, IBM Corporation, Dept. C, 425 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. We'd like to hear from you even if you're headed for graduate school or military service.

Grad Student Senate

Course On Racism Endorsed

A proposed course which may be offered during the spring semester to examine the problem of racism was endorsed Monday night in a resolution passed by the Graduate Student Senate.

The GSS president was instructed to convey the endorsement to the Dean of the Graduate School and Graduate Council and to urge the administrators "to explore the need for making a study of human relations a required part of graduate degree work."

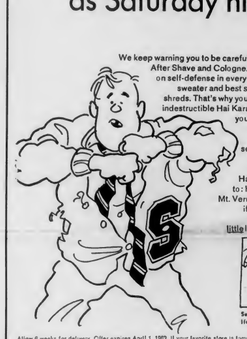
The course named "Educational Perspectives in Problems of Race Relations," would be offered to graduates and undergraduates for three hours of credit during two eight-week periods this spring.

Dean Arthur Gentile, acting head of the Graduate School who attended the GSS meeting, said although he is sympathetic to the idea, "there is no such course as of now."

"2. The scope of the study is broad enough to include (a) institutional relationships between the security forces, the university administration, and the university community, (b) the policies, practices and organization of the university's security forces as well as (c) the equipment and facilities which pertain to effective administration of security."

In other business, Sen. Michael Rosen, GSS secretary, proposed an advocacy resolution that some persons at UMass may be eligible to vote in the Feb. 18 Amherst town elections. The GSS passed the resolution 17 to 6 after President Thomas Minogue and Rosen explained that persons should be informed of their rights to use the democratic process as a vehicle to correct problems such as the lack of low-rent housing.

The dean added, "There is nothing to prevent the School of Education from offering such a course and I see no reason why graduate students could not attend voluntarily, even if no credit is offered."



Sen. David Sacker of the School of Education said definite information should be available by the Jan. 27 registration clearance date.

Also during the meeting, Sen. Wendell Cook proposed a resolution outlining conditions for GSS support of a study being considered on campus security procedures. The motion was passed by a vote of 19-0.

The GSS will commit itself to unreserved cooperation in the proposed study by a professional consulting firm, only if:

"1. The Graduate Student Senate and other representative bodies of the university are closely associated with the process of selection of the consulting firm and the design of the study;

"Saturday afternoon isn't nearly as tough as Saturday night."

Surgeons in some Boston-area hospitals said they were postponing elective surgery to keep patients from being exposed to flu-related post-operator complications.

Providence College in Rhode Island announced that it was closing four days early for Christmas vacation because of an increase in what health officials described as upper respiratory tract infections.

Health officials at the college said they had treated about 200 students within the past few days for "colds, sore throats and some symptoms of the flu." Providence College has an enrollment of 2,650.

The Chamber of Commerce in Holyoke, Mass., reported conducting a survey that showed absenteeism running at about 15 per cent at businesses in its area.

In Boston, 279 public school teachers were absent Tuesday, but substitutes were reported found for all classes.

The flu was just beginning to make inroads on the campus of the University of Maine in Orono. A spokesman said about 200 cases of flu-like illnesses have been treated at the university in the past week. They were described as "almost certainly" being cases of Hong Kong flu, but the spokesman said most were mild.

In New Hampshire and Vermont, officials had only scattered reports of flu-related illnesses. An official in Maine said he didn't expect the affliction to peak in that state until mid-January.

The latest available nationwide figures from the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta, Ga., showed 700 deaths from flu or other respiratory diseases for the week ending Dec. 7. This was 200 more deaths than expected at that time of year. The figures were based on statistics from 122 key cities.

UMass Hits the Tube

Keenan Makes TV Tick

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

All of a sudden UMass has hit the tube.

For the past 15 weeks, at 9:30 every Tuesday morning WHDH-TV, Channel 5 in Boston has been airing series called "Technology Today" hosted by UMass Professor, Joe Marcus, Assistant Dean of the School of Engineering.

Who is responsible for this weekly extension of the University onto greater Boston television screens?

Up on the third floor of the Whitmore Administration Building there is a small office numbered 345A. The room's decor is rather unusual. Besides three desks jammed into the room, there are also plans for submarines hanging on one wall, and various other charts and signs. There's an eight foot silhouette of a man cut out of plywood in one corner plus a movie projector, a tape recorder and other equipment lying about.

The office is occupied by Charles F. Keenan and three part-time student assistants. Keenan is not sure what his title is or what the unit should be called.

"We've been trying to figure out exactly what to call our operation, but we haven't come up with anything that is short enough, since we handle radio, television and film production, along with other odd assignments. A title like that would cover the door, not to mention a letterhead," says Keenan.

Actually Keenan is part of Secretary Robert McCartney's Office of University Relations.

The University may be new to the television medium, but not Keenan himself. He's been in television from the early days of network operations.

He actually started at his alma mater, Holy Cross, where he had a weekly satire program on the campus radio station, for which he did the writing and acting.

After graduation he was hired by General Electric to work at their Schenectady stations, WGY and WRGB-TV. Then G.E. started its "General Electric Theatre" series and transferred Keenan to New York to work on the "Progress Reports." They were a part of every show. There he met Don Herbert, better known as "Mr. Wizard", and later worked with Herbert in creating and writing "Experiment", an eight part science series for the National Educational Television Network.

Why did he leave the apparent glamour of New York TV and film work to come to UMass?

"I've always liked working in the educational end of TV which I feel has not yet lit its stride. And I also wanted to get out of the three-martini-lunch race in New York," he explains.

"I think that educational television has been too pretentious in its presentations. There's a feeling that we must learn from the commercial networks, but to incorporate the work of Hollywood and New York into the educational realm has always been considered a sellout.

"For instance, there are such fantastic possibilities for a show teaching languages, but most shows of this type are still geared to a classroom presentation and that's why few students get enthusiastic about them. For a show to educate it has to involve the student and I'm afraid watching someone write on a blackboard doesn't do that.

"ETV has to be able to incorporate some of the techniques of holding an audience that the commercial programs have. Maybe something like cartoons in French or comedy in German."

He continues, "I hope that someday when the University finally gets the educational station it has been planning that it may become a pioneer in the field."

While he is waiting for that station, Keenan has become more involved in getting the University television exposure around the state.

He notes, "Outside Massachusetts, UMass has an excellent reputation, but at home we are overshadowed by such private institutions as Harvard, MIT, Tufts and Amherst. They have established reputations going for them, but many people still think of UMass as a cow college, and they don't realize what a fantastic school we have here. Among the students you often find what might be called a UMass inferiority complex, although they seem to lose it after they've been here awhile.

"What we're doing is expanding the University's traditional public relations effort which has been geared toward the printed media," he continues. "The publicity information is great. Even in a bad time slot, you may reach 100,000 people at a time, so now TV is coming into its own at the University."

As an example of this was the "Technology Today." According to Keenan the show tries to expose as many of the "varied and talented" members of the faculty to the public as possible. "So far we have presented 15 members of the engineering faculty, from which we draw most of the talent for the show, and no two are alike or fit the cliche stereotypes of engineers. Personally I've been very impressed and think the audience has too."

What does he project for the future?

"If I worry about that we'll never get this week's show done."

Students Propose Trustee Members In Washington

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (CPS) A proposal providing for voting student trustees on the boards of state colleges and universities will go to the Washington legislature next year.

The Council of Washington State student body presidents is meeting this week to formulate a definite proposal. The plan has been discussed since last summer.

Noel Bourassa, student body president at Western Washington State College, said the state legislators which whom he has talked have not been opposed to the plan. The only opposition, he said, has come from two state university presidents and the University of Washington Regents.

The Council has met with Gov. Dan Evans and gained his approval of the student trustee proposal. And State Senator Martin Durkan, who originally endorsed the idea in his losing primary campaign for governor, is now planning to introduce legislation for it in the 1969 session.

Cagers Remain Undefeated As UConn Falls, 80-66 - And It's On To Maine Tonight

BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

STORRS, Conn. - UMass playing great pressure basketball extended their winning streak to six games before 32,000 here last night. Dennis Chapman and Ray Ellerbrook were the standouts with 20 points apiece in the 80-66 decision.

Both squads battled back and forth in the early going. A jumper from the top of the key by Billy Greeley gave UMass an early 2-0 edge.

Bob Staak, 6'2 transfer from St. Johns threw in a 25-footer which was only a hint of things to come.

The lead changed hands several times as UConn relied on the outside shooting of Staak and Ron Hrubala while the Redmen worked the ball into big Pete Gayeska and Ken Mathias. At the ten minute mark a corner jumper by Jack Gallagher gave UMass a 21-20 lead.

UConn's outside shooting was not to be denied. Tom McCrocklin and Staak continued to fire 25-footers over the visitors zone.

Foul shots by Tony Budzinsky and another bomb by Staak forged a 28-22 lead for the Huskies. UMass solved UConn's combination defense with several Mathias layups, but the Huskies still couldn't miss.

The Redmen came out of the locker room typically more aggressive. Gayeska's free throw shooting and Ellerbrook's popping gradually closed the gap until, with 13:35 to go the score was tied at 38-all.

Mathias and Gayeska then took command of the backboards while Ellerbrook and Chapman turned the bombs into points. A turn around jumper by Chapman put UMass ahead on 64-54 as the clock showed a little over six minutes left.

The last two minutes were typically hectic UMass-UConn basketball. A full court Huskie press had Coach Leaman gaining years, seconds at a time, but the clutch foul shooting of Greeley, Mathias and Chapman proved decisive.

Technical fouls against the Huskies added to the excitement. UMass scored the last 11 points of the contest.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Coach Leaman, ebullient over the victory, proclaimed we did it again.

DENNIS CHAPMAN - A GREAT EFFORT FOR THE REDMEN

UMass shot 50 per cent of the game with Chapman six for eight from the floor and eight for 11 from the field. Gayeska had 12 rebounds and Mathias had 11.

Black Bear Gunners Aim At Redmen

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

When Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen arrive in Orono, Maine, tomorrow for their game against the Black Bears perhaps they had better stay in a bomb shelter rather than the usual accommodations at a local motel. Folks down Maine are still talking about the 107 shots Maine launched against Rhode Island Saturday night.

The Black Bears just aren't shy about shooting. As a result, they're averaging better than 80 points a ball game. A porous defense, however, has let in over 90 a game and accounted for Maine's 1 - 4. They beat New Hampshire, 125-86 last night.

Cheif among first-year Coach Gil Philbrick's gunners is senior Jim Stephenson, who led New England scorers last year with a 23.0 average. Stephenson, with his hands on the ball, should be labelled "extremely dangerous." If he's on, he'll kill the opponent, and if he's off, the Black Bears lose. Presently the 6'3 guard is averaging 24.5 points.

Marshall Todd, a 6' transfer from Colby, is the other starter in the backcourt. His playmaking was supposed to complement Stephenson's gunning, but the newcomer has managed to can 14.7 points a game.

Hugh Campbell, a 6'4 senior, is the standout of the forecourt. For his size and build, Campbell is excellent off both the offensive and defensive boards. He leads the Black Bears in rebounding with a 13.2 average and gets his share of points, 14.2, on follow-ups.

Juniors Russ Vickery, 6'3, and sophomore Dennis Stanley, 6'6, are the other starters for Maine. Both men are having trouble adjusting to their corner positions, although Stanley did have an excellent season with the freshmen last year, scoring at a 17.7 clip.

Coach Jack Leaman found his first two trips to Orono as head coach nerve wracking. Last season UMass emerged with a 74-66 overtime verdict, and the year before they were down at halftime but rallied for an 83-75 win.

There's no relief in sight this year. Maine will be literally gunning for the Redmen.

JIM STEPHENSON - BLACK BEAR ACE

STORRS, Conn.-The undefeated Redman freshman team had to rally from a nine point deficit midway through the second half to keep its unblemished record in tact by defeating the UConn frosh, 67-65.

Behind 49-40 with 13 minutes to go in the second half the Redmen fought back to tie the game with two free throws by Julius Erving with eight minutes to go at 55 all. UMass then built a six point cushion on fast break baskets by John Bettancourt and Mike Pagliara.

UConn struggled to retain the lead in the last two minutes, but a one and one foul shot successfully thrown by Erving gave UMass a five point lead with 30 seconds to go. The UConn Huskies scored three points in the next seconds.

The Little Redmen began the first half by taking an early lead on the rebounding of Vogeley and Erving in the last few minutes of the half. UConn surged ahead, capitalizing on U-Mass' mistakes. The home team left the court at halftime with a 36-33 lead.

UConn's advantage was further increased in the early minutes of the second half on the outside shooting of Paul Zorsky. A spirited UMass rally however, was decisive as Erving, Chris Coffin and Vogeley shot numerous times, blocked Husky shots and took control of the boards.

Five missed one-and-one opportunities almost cost the visitors the game in the last few minutes. Leading scorer for the Redmen was Erving at 19, followed by Vogeley, 18, Bettancourt, 14 and Pagliara 13. Zorsky copped 25 for the UConn Huskies.

Pucksters Iced 6-1 By AIC

By KEN SCHWARTZ Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity hockey team was defeated by a big and tough AIC sextet last night 6 - 1 at Orr Rink. The Yellow Jackets were led by junior captain Yves DeRhome from Sillery, Quebec. DeRhome had a goal and three assists while showing unusual skating ability and moves.

AIC didn't get on the score board until 3:20 of the second period when sophomore Dave Forbes beat UMass goalie Larry Walsh after taking a pass from the high-flying DeRhome. The visitors added two more goals before the end of the period.

AIC high scorer Gary Socha from Westfield tallied at 14:18 assisted by DeRhome. DeRhome then scored at 19:38 of the same period assisted by Socha.

The Redmen played AIC even most of the first two periods but could not score. At one point in the first period juncture for center John Hartnett went in all alone on the AIC goalie Gary Young from Ottawa, Ontario. Hartnett made Young make the first move, but he couldn't put the puck in the net.

The Yellowjackets added another goal at 3:36 of the same frame, on a back hander by junior Mike Egoross assisted by Forbes, who had a goal and two assists and DeRhome. UMass who had missed several good scoring chances before the fourth AIC goal finally went on the score board at 4:13 of the third period, when sophomore Ken Reddick scored assisted by Bob Medore and Joel Brebbia.

From then on the Redmen applied continual pressure until their backs were finally broken on a goal by Bob Chipman. AIC added a final goal in the last minute of the game on Egoros' second tally. The final shots on the net were more indicative of the closeness of play than the score was an AIC only outshot the Redmen 41 - 38.

UMass goalie Walsh, who played an outstanding first period, had 35 saves. On DeRhome first turn on the ice, the flashy Canadian who has more moves than an Allied van truck, went in on Walsh all alone, only to have the UMass goalie make a spectacular save.

The Redmen will play Middlebury at home Saturday at 7 p.m. Over the Christmas vacation, the icemen will play in the Yankee Conference at Vermont, Dec. 27 and 28. The next day they will return to the Boston Arena for the two day Codfish Bowl.

Swimmers Look Good, But Lose To Bowdoin

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

In spite of the fact the UMass swim team produced its best effort of the season, Bowdoin College emerged the victor, 52-42, in a meet held in the Boyden Pool.

Co-captain Flip Morton got the Redmen rolling, placing second in the 50-yard free style. Doug Samp of Bowdoin was the winner. Morton and Samp paired off again in the 100-yard free style. Both swimmers gave an excellent account of themselves but Samp touched first as both swimmers broke 52 seconds. It was the first time Morton had broke 52 seconds causing Coach Joe Rogers to crack a wide grin.

Bowdoin won the medley relay, but UMass, led by Mark Miller, co-captain Bob Asquith, Ed Jazab and Morton won the 200 yard free style relay. The Redman's time was 3:35, the best showing of the year.

Asquith gave another excellent performance as he won the back stroke, and placed second in the 200-yard individual medley.

The butterfly event was taken by Bowdoin's Harry Spencer with UMass' Dick Donoghue placing second. Maurice Lynch gained third place in the 500-yard free style.

Dave Larson took a first place in diving with Bob Deguglielmo pacing second. It was Larson's second excellent showing in as many meets. His performance gave every indication that he wants to be the Number One Diver in New England. He has been second for the last two years. If he continues his excellent performance, the honor should be his.

The breast stroke proved to be the Redman's downfall. If the Redmen could have captured first and second, UMass would have won its first meet of the year. It was hard fought battle, but as luck would have it, they were only able to take second and fourth.

Miller grabbed a first in the 200-yard free style, and Morton captured a second in the 50-yard free style.

The win gave Bowdoin a 2-1 record, the only loss coming at the hands of Springfield College. The loss dropped the Redmen to an 0-3 record.

Frosh Icemen Outskate AIC, 4-2

By STEVE SHAMBAN Staff Reporter

The Little Redmen made it two in a row last night as they defeated AIC 4-2 in a frosh hockey game played at Orr Rink. This was the first of three games in a row for UMass and brings their record to 4-2.

Coming off Saturday's big win at BC, the Little Redmen appeared somewhat sluggish but nevertheless, they compiled an imposing 62-22 shots on goal edge over the young Aces. UMass scored one goal in each of the first two periods and two in the third as did AIC.

The only factor that kept the score so close was the outstanding play of AIC goalie Bob Faubert. Time and time again Faubert came up with the save, some of them on the spectacular side. His cat-quick reflexes thwarted several bonafide UMass scoring threats and on occasion he came out of the crease to bat the puck away on break-aways.

Charlie Donovan put UMass ahead 1-0 at 13:28 of the first period with his second goal in as many games.

In the second period the Little Redmen pressured Faubert constantly and the effort payed off with Bob Whelden's goal at 7:00. Jack Edwards assisted on the score. For the period, UMass outshot AIC 22-5.

Dennis Grabowski scored at 3:40 of the third period to put the Little Redmen ahead 3-0. He took a pass from defenseman Bill Brown at the blue line and slammed a 15 footer into the right corner.

It appeared that UMass was going to be home free but AIC came back with two goals in 67 seconds to make things exciting. At 8:08 Don Chipman scored on screen shot from the left side that Little Redmen goalie Bruce Crawford never saw. The assist went to John Hammister. Cyrus Johnson's score at 9:15 came on a centering pass from Chipman's twin brother Jack. These two scores were the first against the Little Redmen in 98 minutes of play.

The final UMass goal came with two seconds remaining as Jack Edwards took a pass from Al Nickerson and fired the puck into an open net. AIC had pulled its goalie 28 seconds earlier to put a sixth skater on the ice.

Evasville Tourney - A Hoopster's Yule Gift

By PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

'Tis the season to be jolly, and all that, but the UMass basketball team won't have much time to enjoy the holiday season. The Redmen will fly out to Evansville, Indiana, to be one of the four participants in the Evansville Christmas Tourney, held December 27 and 28.

The other three teams in the tourney are the host squad Evansville University, UMass 1st round opponent, New Mexico State and Tennesse Tech.

UMass will be in against as good competition as they will ever face. The home team Purple Aces are an example. A perennial small college power, Evansville was the NCAA College Division Champions in 1964 and 1965, and have made the finals six of the last eight years. They are presently 2-1 with two more games before the tourney, against Arizona, last evening and New Mexico State tomorrow.

The Purple Aces who will playing before over 12,000 home fans, are led by 6'4 forward Dave Weeks. Weeks is averaging 19.5 points. He is aided by 6'5 junior Mike Owens who is scoring at a 16 point clip and also is taking down almost eight rebounds a game.

Also starting up front will be 6'5 junior will be Layne Holmes. Holmes is averaging eight rebounds a game. At the guards will be two juniors Kae Moore and Roger Guth.

The team everyone wants to see in this tournament however, has to be the Amazing Aggies from New Mexico State. The undefeated Aggies are 6-0 and ranked 13th in the nation. New Mexico defeated Hardin-Simmons Monday night 74-68 and will play Evansville tomorrow.

They are led by two definite All-American candidates, Jimmy Collins a 6'2 guard from Yonkers, N.Y., who is averaging 21.8 points per game and has not been stopped by many people in the past two years. The other star of the Aggies is 6'9 junior center, "Slammin" Sam Lacey. Lacey is averaging 17.2 points, 11.8 rebounds and gets his nickname from his enthusiastic blocking of shots. Lacey could be the most imposing big man the Redmen may have to face this year.

That's not all there is. Starting at the other guard spot will be an amazing junior, 5'8 Charley Criss. Criss is averaging 20.5 points per game. The other starters will be 6'8 sophomore Jeff Smith and 6'5 junior John Burgess. Smith is averaging nine points.

Not to be overlooked in this tourney will be the Tennesse Tech Purple Eagles. The Ohio Valley Conference team are undefeated at 4 -0 with a game Saturday and are returning with their starting lineup intact from last year.

The starting lineup is big and well balanced scoring wise. The leading scorer is 6'0 Bill Bland averaging 17.5 per game. Bland is reputed to be a great shooter.

Also at guard will be 6'2 senior Jim Sutton who is averaging 13 a game. In the frontcourt will be 6'7 Ketchel Strauss, averaging 14 points per game and 16 rebounds, 6'5 Ron Sutton averaging 10.5 and ten rebounds, and 6'5 senior Frank Bartelson averaging seven points and more than ten rebounds.

Metawampe's Xmas Picks

After the football season, Ye Great One intended to stay in his southern hibernation for a long time, like maybe forever. He had been destroyed by the erecting of another Indian at the Stadium. Then public scorn was heaped upon the ancient back of the poor soul for picking UMass to lose a football game. O Ye of faint hearts, he still prayed for their victory, but after all he had to pick up a lagging percentage. Besides, does the truth hurt?

However, the bard sitting forlornly along the white sands decided to return. But not just return next fall. No. Return in great style without fanfare, just with thousands kissing his mocassins. Secretly, the bard had performed a reverse rain dance to help keep the Cage dry for the rest of the year. That was not enough.

Below is presented the old injun's season offerings to some of the people he knows and loves. He regrets the lack of his now-famous verse, but hopes that all realize, the thought is there.

GOOD EVENING TONITE CPS WASHINGTON WELCOMES U MASS DAILY COLLEGIAN TO THE CPS TELEX SYSTEM. FOLLWING IS WASHINGTONS OFFERING FOR TONITE

With that greeting last night the College Press Service began its first news transmission to the DAILY COLLEGIAN. A newly installed Western Union Telex machine now links the DAILY COLLEGIAN with all of the nation's largest college dailies as well as the 13-member paper Canadian University Press, (CUP).

With the installation of the new telex, the DAILY COLLEGIAN is able to be in instantaneous direct communication with such schools as the University of California's Berkeley and Irvine campuses, and the Universities of New Mexico, Utah, Maryland, and Ottowa.

The College Press Service is the news service of the United States Student Press Association, a national organization of four hundred college newspapers.

WASHINGTON (CPS--TELEX) - A black caucus at a "Summit Conference" on critical issues in education has urged the National Education Association (NEA) to include young people in its policy-making.

A scheduled discussion on economic issues Sunday was disrupted when Warren Wilmore, a young black who is president of Youth Organizations United, was not permitted to read the caucus report.

Another black read the statement, which recommended that "the consumers of education, especially the delinquent, dropout, disadvantaged, and deprived," be invited to future NEA meetings with expenses paid and be given "an actual voice" in decisions.

"This is necessary in order that educators know the real pulse" of black youths, the statement said.

It also called NEA "hypocritical" for calling a conference on critical educatio n issues, most of which relate to minorities, when the organization's hierarchy is almost completely lily-white.

The black caucus called on NEA to "completely restructure itself" to allow participation by blacks "from a base of power rather than frustration."

The concept of community control over the schools, the big issue in the New York City dispute, was endorsed by both the black caucus and an integrated one. The NEA's delegate assembly will consider the issue at its July meeting in Philadelphia.

There was sympathy at the meeting this weekend for establishment of some kind of mechanism for policy stands that are needed before the delegates convene. The integrated caucus called for action rather than "double-talk" on important issues. A similar plea was made Saturday by Mario Fantini of the Ford Foundation.

Contact lenses are made of modern plastics which have entirely different characteristics than the tissues and fluids of the eye. Consequently your eye cannot handle this foreign object without help.

So, in order to correct for Mother Nature's lack of foresight, you have to use lens solutions to make your contacts and your eyes compatible.

There was a time when you needed two or more separate solutions to properly modify and care for your contacts, making them ready for your eyes. But now there's Lensine from the makers of Murine. Lensine, for contact comfort and convenience.

Lensine is the one solution for complete contact lens care. Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the natural fluids of your eye. Why? Because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution, very much like your own tears. Lensine is compatible with the eye.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated that improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and, in some cases, can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Let caring for your contacts be as convenient as wearing them. Get some Lensine . . . Mother's little helper.

Mother Nature never planned on contact lenses

Faculty Senate Approves New Race Relations Course

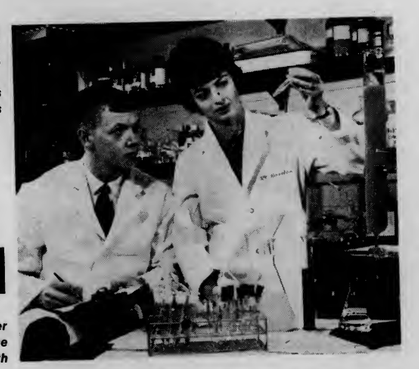
By RICHARD STORY
Education Editor

The Faculty Senate has voted approval of a new course in the School of Education, EDUC 270 " Educational Perspectives in Problems of Race Relations, " with the provision that the course be available on a pass/fail basis only to all students. The course is the experimental offering in race relations and sensitivity, first announced early in December as "The Fire Next Time" - it has been renumbered since that time.

Because of the change of number, all students who pre-registered for the course should make a special point of checking their enrollment with the School to be sure that they have been retained on the enrollment roster. Others may add the course at this time, up to the limits established by the School of Education.

Since its first announcement on Counseling Day last December, the course has under gone some revisions - pass/fail grading was not mentioned in early press releases; and the possibility of having the course fulfill the "D" category of social science courses was also not initially discussed. Each of these latter points has been considered in the handling of the course through administrative channels since early December.

Since its inception, the course proposal has had several unique features to it. The course first arose in Education as a response to demands presented by black students in November: it was viewed as a "service course," aiming to reach as many students as practical. For this reason it was decided to make it an 8-week course, repeated for an additional 300 students during the second half of the semester. With this arrangement, Education planned to reach a total of 600 students. (Pre-registration enrollment reached more than 500.) In order to make the course as attractive as possible to those students who seemed to be its prime target group, it was requested that the course be opened on a pass/fail basis to ALL students enrolled, and that it satisfy a "D" requirement.



The faculty Academic Matters committee reviewed the course, and after some discussion of its organization, methods and goals, recommended the addition of enough classroom hours to bring it to the level of the usual 3-credit course, and recommended that the grading and "D" requirement aspects of the course be approved. The student Academic Affairs committee seconded this recommendation unanimously, as did the Student Senate. The course then went to the Faculty Senate on 9 January.

The Faculty Senate debated amendments which would have denied pass/fail grading and disallowed satisfaction of "D" group course requirements. After lengthy debate on each point, the grading policy was retained; now all students, including freshmen and sophomores not normally eligible to take any course pass/fail, will be so graded - the only grading permitted in the course. On the second point - that of the course satisfying part of the social science distribution requirement - the Sociology department was primarily responsible for arguing that the course was not sufficently rigorous to qualify for such a rating. Sociology also argued that the course duplicated a significant amount of material presented in some of their courses. The provision of a "D" rating for the course was defeated by the Faculty Senate.

Fire Ravages USSPA Offices In Washington

WASHINGTON (CPS) --Fire ravaged the offices of the United States Student Press Association last week, temporarily suspending the operations of the College Press Service, which spreads copy and light daily to 400 college newspapers across the country, including the Daily Collegian.

An unknown arsonist, according to firemen, set fires not once but twice during the night of Jan. 15 in the USSPA building at 1779 Church St., N.W. in Washington. They answered one alarm at 2 a.m., called in by a man in a nearby apartment who smelled smoke, and again at 6:30 a.m.

The effect of deprivation of their news service on the CPS's student editor subscribers was not known at this writing.

Swingshifter

Dear Swingshifter,

Allow me this opportunity to welcome you back to the University and reassure you that this is the same University which you left some five months ago.

I am sure you have realized since returning that the dining commons is slightly different. Those dried prunes you survived on all summer are no longer offered. Jello is our food (it's a hell of a lot cheaper). Breakfast, lunch and supper - jello, jello and jello. As a matter of fact, ask any UMass alumnus what he remembers about the school, and the chances are he'll say "jello".

Your Student Senate meets every Wednesday night. We urge you to attend the Senate meetings; with LAUGH-IN on Monday night, the Senate meeting on Wednesday night, and the Senate Executive meetings Thursday night (that's when the Senate officers and committee chairmen meet in order to throw peanuts at each other) - you're never more than 48 hours away from a good laugh.

However, with all humor aside, you will have to learn to respect your student senator despite his drawbacks. Where else but in your Student Senate can a senator (during a committee meeting) address a Senate Officer, "Hey Stupid."

During these first few days you will probably complain about the long walks between classes. Numerous girls living in Southwest will no doubt become track stars making their 8 a.m. WOPE class, and then running back to Southwest for their 9:05 English class. Don't waste energy trying to change it, just time yourself so that you will be able to make the 7:50 mud slide to WOPE and the 8:55 mud slide back.

Mud is a fact of life here. While some campuses pride themselves on their academic excellence, UMass takes pride in its mud. Within a week or two you'll realize that the only reason they rip up paths, walkways and streets is to create more mud.

Those unidentified flying objects you think you see in Southwest are really coke or beer bottles being thrown from the towers. Once again don't try to complain that one of these days you might be killed by a flying coke bottle. The Southwest Student Affairs Office (God only knows what its function is) just classifies those objects as - UFO's coming from Amherst College.

And then of course there is WMUA, which calls itself the campus radio station. For those of you with the intelligence of a second grader, give it a try - they need another listener.

So in brief that's a capsule look at UMass during the regular season. Good Luck, Swingshifter, if you can maintain your cool during the next three and a half years, you're a better man than I.

An Open Letter

To All English Majors

I have spent many hours listening to English majors (and students in a number of other fields) complaining about the quality of English courses on this campus. Boring professors. Tedious, inane assignments. Rote memorization. Worthless, trivial examinations. Overcrowded classes. The list of grievances is extensive. But, apparently, not many students have articulated these grievances loudly enough to gain audience with the omniscient, omnipotent faculty committees in the English department. And those few students who do voice their complaints are politely reminded that as individuals they possess no documented authorization to speak for the entire group of English majors.

It is time, then, to obtain such documented authorization -- a consensus of student opinion. To that end, I have devised a survey to solicit English majors' opinions about the policies and practices of the University's English department. I was assisted in this project by Rosaria D'Andrea, Ann Drysdale, Paula Messina, and Stephen Stoia, all of whom (except Mr. Stoia) are representatives in the recently-formed forty-member English Department Undergraduate Council (EDUC)--a body of students supposedly representing the views of ALL undergraduate English majors at the University (in fact, EDUC has devised NO means of gauging student opinion on ANY subject); a body which theoretically COULD BE capable of influencing English department policies (whereas in fact, EDUC has no real power to institute any reforms, since it is permitted by the English department Undergraduate Studies Committee to function only in an advisory capacity; i.e., EDUC may respectfully make "recommendations" to the department about curriculum, grading, requirements, teaching effectiveness, etc.).

Those of us who want to make EDUC a meaningful, powerful body, sensitive to the needs and desires of ALL undergraduate English majors at this university, require the assistance of the twelve hundred English majors whom we allegedly represent. YOU CAN HELP US EFFECTIVELY BY PROVIDING US WITH YOUR CANDID, HONEST OPINIONS. The aforementioned students and I will be distributing survey questionnaires throughout the registration-course change period, January 28th and 29th, in the Boyden Gymnasium; we will be located in the vicinity of the King Council table, which will also be staffed throughout the two-day period. It is imperative that we distribute and retrieve (at pickup points to be announced) ALL survey questionnaires as soon as possible -- hopefully by February 3rd -- since tabulation of the results will require a considerable amount of time. If a majority of the twelve hundred English undergraduates obtain questionnaires during Tuesday-Wednesday and return them completed ON THE SAME DAY, it is quite likely that I may be able to discuss preliminary results with other EDUC representatives on WMUA's "Focus" program next week.

I must reiterate: We need YOUR cooperation if this first step toward achieving genuine "student power" is to be successful.

EDUCATION:

ROTC Question Still Alive

RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

Yet another chapter has been written in this campus' continuing investigation and review of the matter of the ROTC programs. Faithful fans of this exciting serial will recall that, in a Ballroom-filling meeting in September, the Student Senate voted to recommend that academic credit be denied to the ROTC programs. Following this stirring action, however, they relented, calling part of their action back under reconsideration; and remanding about half of the question back to the Academic Affairs committee, where it reposes to this day.

Never to be outdone by mere undergraduates, the Faculty Senate has been keeping its own finger in the ROTC pie -- their Military Studies subcommittee (of Academic Matters) has been studying the ROTC question, and they reported to the Senate early in January. (It was a preliminary version of their report which was released to the Student Senate by one of the military departments, and which was then quoted, in part, in the Student Senate rationale for its denial-of-credit votes.) The Faculty Senate, in considering the report of the Military Studies subcommittee, turned around and wrote a new, stronger, 4-part charge to the subcommittee, directing them to deal expressly with questions that had been overlooked or dodged in their report. Without ... report said that land grant institutions are obligated to offer ROTC training (which isn't news here), that the country seems to need ROTC, that college graduates seem to make better officers, and that some students want ROTC. Three paragraphs buried near the very end of the report explained the subcommittee's reluctance to make any substantive investigation or evaluation of the matter of academic credit for ROTC courses. Two faculty Senators in particular were upset with this conclusion, since the matter (of academic credit) seemed to be the very heart of the whole ballgame. The subcommittee reiterated its reluctance to undertake an evaluation of the credit question; and the Senate affirmed its intention to have this investigation made, nevertheless.

The effect of the Faculty Senate actions was to write and issue the following charge to the Military Studies subcommittee:

"VOTED: That the Academic Matters Committee, through its subcommittee on Military Studies, is hereby charged with an examination of the ROTC program with regard to the following questions:

1. Should the program significantly increase its non-military faculty participation and interdis- ... ther through such ... now being ... the University of Rhode Island and other universities, which provides, in part, for instruction by regular university faculty in portions of the program?

2. What should be the structural relationship of the Departments of Military and Air Science to other units of the University, such as the College of Arts and Sciences?

3. How much academic credit should be given for the various levels of the ROTC program, present and proposed?

4. What restrictions, if any, does the Department of Defense place on choice of materials for military science courses? Are such restrictions consistent with normal University standards? If not, what remedies are there?"

Meanwhile, back at the ranch, the investigation continues by the student Academic Affairs committee. Together with the new findings of the Military Studies subcommittee, the campus should expect to see the issue brought back to center stage later this Spring as the two bodies present their findings. The investigation of ROTC, like that of the Loch Ness monster, is not over - will it ever be - but a more concrete resolution should emerge from ... particularly to this pressing matter.

Student Union Hazard

To the editor:

I wish to call attention to the hazardous and annoying conditions that exist along the walkway leading from North Pleasant St. (next to Hasbrouck) to the back entrance of the Student Union. This walkway also serves as the service road for the Union, with the result that there are numerous trucks traveling on a path intended and designed for pedestrians. Since it is impossible for trucks to turn around after making their delivery, they must back up, forcing students to climb snowbanks and wade into deep drifts to avoid being crushed.

The service entrance to the Union should be moved before someone is seriously injured.

To the editor:

I have corresponded with Senator Hatfield (R-Oregon) several times in the last few weeks about the Volunteer Army Bill that he intends to introduce in the current session of Congress. The reasons why I support this bill are myriad. I am particularly anxious to eliminate the need for young men to choose careers that fit the bureaucratic criteria of being in the "national interest" in order to obtain a deferment; for when our government gains this much control over our lives, then we are losing the battle for freedom at home as well as abroad.

As a result of my correspondence, and provided this bill reaches the appropriate Senate and House Committees, Raymond Underwood, legal counsel to Senator Hatfield, will request my appearance as a witness.

Hence, I wish to accumulate as many case histories as possible. If you feel that your personal freedom has been diminished by the threat of conscription, so much so that you have altered career plans or otherwise done things you wouldn't ordinarily do, please send me a typed, concise summary c/o the Chemistry Department, University of Oregon, Eugene, Oregon 97403. Of course, any comment on other details of the Volunteer Army Bill will be appreciated.

The Rape of Vietnam

To the editor:

In Man's long history of inhumanity to his fellow-man, three major atrocities stand out: 1) The extermination of 6,000,000 Jews by Nazi Germany; 2) The selling into world slavery of 15,000,000 Africans by the warring kings of that continent; and 3) The torturing, burning and life imprisonment of untold thousands of "heretics" by the medieval Church.

Now a fourth such atrocity looms on the horizon; the rape of lovely, primitive Vietnam.

Left to work out their own destiny, these people would long ago have achieved unity and a stable government. The interference in their internal affairs by Russia, China and the U.S. with weapons and advisors, perpetuates the agony. The U.S., by sending troops, must assume the major guilt. We have already napalmed, bombed and shot to death 1,000,000 of these pathetic little men, women and children.

These are primitive farm folk who don't know a communist from a capitalist and care less. These are patriots fighting for their independence. They will never quit. Are we so far removed from 1776 that we cannot understand this?

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
"This is my own, my native land"?
O America, this evil, like slavery, shall forever dim thy lustre!

Man's Life in 21 Words

To the editor:

I have recently written the complete history of MAN'S life in twenty-one words. This history describes MAN'S life in three dimensions.

1. It is the story of MAN'S life on earth from its origin to the end of his life on earth when life will cease to exist.
2. It starts from his humblest beginning and reaches his highest level of attainment.
3. It proves itself out by applying it to the life of one man.

Using these twenty-one words as a formula you can:

1. Define MAN'S intelligence.
2. Answer any question relative to MAN and his life.
3. Determine the validity of any statement made relative to MAN and his life.
4. Define the sub-conscious mind.
5. Define MAN'S soul.
6. --Bring SCIENCE, ART, PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION into an area of complete compatability and understanding.
7. Find the solution to any problem; individual, social, national, religious or world.

By working backward with the formula:

1. Answer the imponderable: "What happens when 'THE IRRESISTABLE FORCE' meets 'THE IMMOVABLE OBJECT'."
2. Relate this answer to the:
   1. Origin of the UNIVERSE
   2. Definition of GOD.
   3. Relate MAN directly to the origin of the UNIVERSE and to GOD.
4. Prove that MAN is the highest level of intellectual attainment in the cycle of the UNIVERSE.
5. Define ETERNITY.

I offer this formula to you unconditionally. With it I will give as complete an explanation as time will permit. This is for students only.

Controversial Ad

To the editor:

It seems that my "What's Your Hang Up?" ad has caused some controversy on your campus and on quite a few others. Many letters have come to me complaining about the hoax, the sacrilege, the desire for escapism, etc. All these epithets miss the point. The ad is an HONEST attempt to interest more men in a career as a priest or brother by reminding them that "blondes, brew and bread" MAY NOT BE ENOUGH for them. None of the three are bad in themselves--at ANY level; but for some men, life means MORE. So much more.

If the point is too subtle to make sense, let it be forgotten FOR NOW; but for many, this is the only point in life that does make sense. I only ask collegians to be as "bro•dminded" and liberal as they ask others to be.

Our pill.

Does it really work?

If you've ever resorted to NoDoz® at 4 a.m. the night before an exam, you've probably been disappointed.

NoDoz, after all, is no substitute for sleep. Neither is anything else we can think of.

What NoDoz is is a very strong stimulant. In fact, NoDoz has the strongest stimulant you can buy without a prescription.

Caffeine.

What's so strong about that?

If we may cite The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics: Caffeine is a powerful central nervous stimulant. Caffeine excites all portions of the central nervous system. Caffeine stimulates all portions of the cortex, but its main action is on the psychic and sensory functions. It produces a more rapid and clearer flow of thought and allays drowsiness and fatigue. After taking caffeine, one is capable of more sustained intellectual effort and a more perfect association of ideas. There is also a keener appreciation of sensory stimuli.

Very interesting. But why take NoDoz when you can get caffeine in a cup of coffee?

Very simple. You take NoDoz all at once instead of sipping coffee for 10 minutes. And if you take two NoDoz tablets, the recommended dosage, you get twice the caffeine in a cup of coffee.

Two tablets—isn't that likely to be habit forming? Definitely not. NoDoz is completely non-habit forming.

Which means it's safe to take whether you're cramming at night. Or about to walk into an 8 o'clock class. Or driving somewhere (even though you're rested) and the monotony of the road makes you drowsy.

One last thing you should know about NoDoz. It now comes in two forms. Those familiar white pills you take with water. And a chewable tablet called NoDoz Action Aids®. It tastes like a chocolate mint, but it does everything regular NoDoz does.

And if you've managed to stay awake this long, you know that's quite a lot.

Palach's Death Jolts Czechs to New Awareness

PRAGUE (CPS) --Friday, Jan. 17, Jan Palach set himself afire to protest press censorship and the publication of the Russian occupation newspaper ZPRAVY. Jan was 21 years old, a student at Charles University. He is now dead.

It is always sad when a person comes to the conclusion that there is no alternative but death. Sometimes it is tragic. In this case it was unnecessary.

I recently spent twelve days in Prague, talking to scores of students, workers, politicians, journalists. None of them gave the impression that the situation was so grave as to merit sacrifice. In fact, I got the opposite impression.

NO REAL CENSORSHIP

First, there is not press censorship of significance in Czechoslovakia at the moment. There are two newspapers banned in Slovakia, but that censorship is more a function of the Slovak Communist Party leader, Gustav Husak, that of the Russians. Husak is not a popular man even among nationalistic Slovaks.

Two magazines were banned in Prague early in November. They are now printing again, as vitriolic as ever. The Prague press is generally open, candid, and critical. There are certainly no blank spaces in the newspapers as there are in South Vietnamese publications.

I spent New Year's Eve with Ivan and Helene Klima, two of the editors of LISTY, the muckraking weekly largely responsible for the "Action Program." But there has not been much back-stepping, in either economic or liberalized political reforms. The observable government policy has been to make gains in one area at the price of concessions in another. This is a likely explanation of the Smrkovsky affair: the Russians demanded his removal, but the people wanted him to remain. So the Czechs removed him, replaced his with a Slovak progressive, and kept Smrkovsky on the powerful Central Committee of the Communist Party.

It is open to question how long the Czechs can continue to play this game with the Russians.

"RUSSIANS GO HOME"

I do not doubt that Jan Palach's act was politically motivated; I do question his assessment of the situation. At the momemt, however, it is not important to evaluate his assessment, but to follow up on his act. And that is precisely what Czech students are doing: spontaneous demonstrations of hundreds of students in Prague, Bratislava, and Brno; hunger strikes, chants in front of the Russian-occupied hotel - "Russians go home!"

Where these acts will lead is unclear. Much depends on the solidarity between students, workers, and intellectuals. Much depends on the Russians. Communist Party chief Dubcek has already responded in his new role of frightened compromiser, issuing a warning that "such acts could lead to a catastrophic collision." One result of the coming weeks will probably be a loss of confidence in Dubcek by the majority of the population.

Jan Palach's death has sent the nation into a state of shock. And more recent attempts at self-immolation have compounded that state. The Czech people, who had almost adjusted to their new political situation, have been jolted into awareness again. How they will finally react is still a mystery.

Roister Doisters Offer "Man for All Seasons" To Begin Semester

On February 5, 6, 7, and 8, Roister Doisters will present a play entitled "A Man For All Seasons" by Robert Bolt.

"A Man For All Seasons" is the dramatization of the life of Sir Thomas More, English statesman and humanist. The setting is sixteenth century England during the reign of King Henry the 8th. More is ordained Lord Chancellor at the time when the king is attempting to secure a divorce from Katharine of Aragon. More disapproves of the divorce on moral grounds. It is against the laws of the church.

He refuses to subscribe to the Act of Supremacy which would make the King supreme head of the church and thus enable him to change the divorce laws to suit himself. More's silence on the issue causes him to be imprisoned and subsequently beheaded for high treason.

The play will be presented in two acts with one intermission. There will be no scene changes and various moods and suggested locations will be produced by lighting. Tickets will be on sale at Bowker auditorium January 28th - February 4th 1:00-6:00 p.m. Reservations can be made by calling 545-2149 at any of these times.

Course "Pays Off"

Students Publish For Credit & Profit

An experiment in the teaching of writing by tutoring has literally paid off at the University of Massachusetts for students enrolled in E-337 Article Writing.

Under the tutelage of Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies, 13 students who completed the three-credit course in December produced a total of 24 articles. Of these, 11 have either appeared or are scheduled for publication in magazines and newspapers. Four authors have already received checks totaling $79 and one student has been invited to become a contributing editor to one magazine.

"The conditions of the course were to produce two publishable fact articles and to submit them to selected magazines or newspapers," according to Dr. Politella.

In a series of 14 weekly tutoring sessions that took the place of formal lectures, the student authors were guided into selecting appropriate subject matter, gathering information, writing it for a pre-determined readership and submitting the finished articles for publication.

"Only one article was formally rejected by an editor the first time out," Dr. Politella said. "And that editor recanted within two weeks. He did something I've never heard of in some years of free-lancing experience: he asked the student to resubmit - at a stated price, of course."

The subjects chosen by the student authors ranged from a newspaper feature on "The Demise of the Yankee Conference' to a piece on "The Bay State Morgans" for a horsey-set magazine.

One area newspaper bannered a student-written feature across eight columns: "Five College Co-operation - Success or Failure?" Editor & Publisher Magazine, the national trade weekly of the newspaper industry, devoted a half-page to an article titled "Campus Mix Spawns Satellite Newspapers."

Other articles accepted for publication include dealing with research in submersible craft at UMass, a history of student protest movements and a new look at the campus humor magazine controversy that rocked the UMass campus in 1966.

Not to be outdone by his prolific students, Dr. Politella practiced what he preached by being published in five magazines and one newspaper during the semester.

"All of us proved that article writing is productive if one has something to say and somewhere to have it said," Dr. Politella concluded.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 28, 1969 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

WASHINGTON - If you let your mind go, you would have thought you were in some foreign state where political violence is the norm. But is was Washington and the time was Richard Nixon's inauguration as 37th President of the United States.

It really hit you though when you strayed a block or two from the parade route and found squads of riot-equipped military police waiting. Or when the Secret Service opened and searched every manhole along Pennsylvania Avenue for hidden bombs or assasins.

And what really hurt is that they had good reason to search the manholes and have riot police at the ready.

Their reason was the people who claimed they were for peace.

It became apparent early that many of them were anything but peace-loving. The day before the official inauguration there was a parade which was the highlight of the counter-inaugural activities. On the whole it was quiet enough. There were about three dozen marchers who found it necessary to heckle their police escort with cries of "fascist pig" and various obscenities. But as one cop commented, "A nice day for a walk."

It might have been but some of the marchers decided it would be a good idea to crash a reception for Spiro Agnew. Eight were arrested.

Monday's crowd was a bit more restless than Sunday's and it seemed that they really wanted to fight the police. A large number of the protestors showed up wearing helmets of various types and carrying flag poles that were about the same size and thickness as police riot batons. Many had smeared their faces with petroleum jelly in anticipation of being Maced or gassed.

The taunts at the police were more vicious and when the police ignored them they became more obscene singling out officers by their name tags and calling their wives whores.

Daily Collegian
Bill Dickinson

Later a large crowed of protestors tried to rush the presidential reviewing stand through Lafayette Park and some of the protestors got their wish and were clubbed. They threw rocks and bricks at the cops. Car windows were broken and people were hit.

For four hours the mobs roamed the streets near the White House clashing with the police. And then it got dark and cold and started to rain.

It was over and it didn't feel like the capitol of the United States.

Officials Impose Sanctions On U of Wisconsin Paper

MADISON, Wisc. (CPS) - University of Wisconsin regents have imposed economic penalties on the school's DAILY CARDINAL for its use of four-letter words.

The regents told the paper it would have to conform to ethical standards of state newspaper associations if it wants to continue using university printing facilites.

They cancelled all university-paid subscriptions, and told the Cardinal it must move its office off campus or pay rent. Gregory G. Graze, Cardinal editor, said the paper has not decided what to do about the restrictions, which he called "obvious harassment."

Graze said the rent and cancelled subscriptions and summer subsidy would amout to about $9,100 of its total budget of $132,000.

Religious People Let Us Unite

A segregated faith tends to shut its own truth in and other truth out. Its center of gravity is itself.

We need one another. Let us unite and supply that need!

So long as we remain segregated into many faiths we deny the very spirit of religion and deny ourselves its full benefit.

There has never been a time when there was greater need for religion to bring its full united strength to bear.

Segregation is bad emotionally. It tends to cramp our we-feeling within the limits of fellow segregated sectarians rather than to include all religious people.

Segregation is bad intellectually. Through the ages, segregated faiths have demanded implicit — even blind — obedience. "Thou shalt!" and "Thou shalt not!" were not to be questioned.

History condemns segregation which limits, blights and pits faith against faith. A faith, emboldened by its sense of certainty, has fought over faiths with even greater zeal than it has fought irreligion.

Sects split communities, nations and the world into self-centered groups who disrupt society and make it hard to work together. Sectarian preferences and prejudices spill over into politics, education, business, the employment office, medicine and other fields as manipulators appeal to prejudice and play one group against others.

By contrast. One Religion of Brotherhood would pool the Religious Experiences of all in the enjoyment of a common Religious Life of Service and in the search for greater Religious Truth. It is a Unity of Purpose — The Practice of Brotherhood.

The faiths have shown little inclination to merge. It became evident that if an inclusive religion were created in our day, individual One Religionists would have to create it. Numerous local One Religion groups are needed. Such a grass roots movement is likely to be more vital, dynamic and meaningful to its members than one organized and controlled from above.

Religious People, Let Us Unite!

Southwest Draft Counseling Expands To Baker House

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

The draft counseling program begun last semester by the Southwest Area Master's office in cooperation with the Valley Peace Center will be expanded in the coming semester, according to UMass chaplain Reverend Ronald Hardy.

The program was initiated by Walter Silvo, assistant master of the Southwest Area, in October, as a result of numerous requests for advice in matters concerning the draft.

The Valley Peace Center was asked to assist in the program and to provide trained draft counselors. Ray Werby of that organization serves as consultant to the program.

Six discussion sessions conducted in November and December were attended by nearly 500 people. One hundred fifty people participated in individual consultations, some of whom had subsequent meetings with the staff at the Valley Peace Center.

Individual draft counseling will be available every Monday night during the spring semester at two locations. Counselors will be in the lobbies of Coolidge and Baker.

"The draft counselors," said Werby, "are experienced, trained, and come from all walks of life - businessmen, clergymen, professors, and housewives - and provide quite a catholic perspective." Several of the counselors are from UMass.

In addition to individual sessions, discussions and films on the draft and on the war will be presented on alternate weeks. A film entitled VIET NAM: HOW DID WE GET IN? HOW DO WE GET OUT?, will be presented Feb. 10, at Baker and on Feb. 17 in the Berkshire Lounge. On February 24 in Baker the government version of the war will be conveyed through the film WHY VIETNAM? The same film will be shown at the Berkshire Lounge Mar. 3. A panel will discuss "The Black Student and the Draft" in Baker Mar. 10, and in the Southwest's Berkshire Lounge Mar. 17.

The draft counseling program was initiated to reach the many students who would not otherwise seek advice about their military status, according to Mr. Hardy. Mr. Hardy pointed out that in the past six months the percentage of college graduates in the monthly call-ups has risen from 4 to 17 per cent.

The draft counseling program provides both factual information and seeks to help answer the moral questions of people on campus who are concerned and interested in the draft itself, and in the wider implications of the war and the military.

Survey Shows Scientist Shortage

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Unless changes are made in the present draft regulations as they affect graduate students, the nation's supply of trained Ph.D.s in the sciences will be "seriously curtailed" in the 1970's.

That is the conclusion of a survey of the draft's affect of male students now in their first or second year of graduate school in the sciences, released this week by the Scientific Manpower Commission, an independent Washington research firm.

According to data furnished by 1,237 Ph.D. granting science departments in institutions throughout the U.S., as many as 46 per cent first-and second-year male graduate students are potentially liable to induction in the next few months.

That's 50 per cent of all graduate students who are also employed by universities to teach undergraduate classes, and 47 per cent of those who are employed to do research in the sciences.

Many universities told the Commission they will not be able to find enough students to teach courses during the next year, and that research projects may have to be curtailed, reduced or delayed if no changes in graduate deferment are made this year.

The present policy of drafting oldest eligible men first means that first-and second-year graduate students, most recently reclassified since last spring's policy change, are first priority to fill draft calls, which are expected to stay at the 30,000 plus level through the coming summer.

The survey was limited to science departments because the organizations which sponsor the Commission are scientific academic groups. It believes, however, that results of this first survey are roughly applicable to general graduate school enrollment.

The Commission also speculated about the reasons for the failure of Fall 1968's projected enrollment drop to materialize. The slowness of the reclassification process, it said, combined with the summer setback in physical examinations, was a major reason.

Another was that many students returned to or started graduate school although in imminent danger of reclassification, because "they just wanted to get as far as they could," or because they had federal scholarships or grants which required that they enroll immediately. Those scholarships would then be waiting for them after they came out of military service, if they were drafted.

Of the more than 4,000 male graduate students who were reported to have been accepted to a department and then failed to enroll, however, about one-fourth were known to have either been drafted or to have voluntarily entered military service.

Many students, of course, when faced with imminent drafting, have chosen to join a service other than the Army, hoping to avoid duty in Vietnam.

Will the bad predictions of the Commission come true this spring?

"There is no way," the survey report states, "to predict accurately how many of the first and second year graduate students who are liable to induction will be called to service before summer.

"But inductions are likely to be highest among this group, since current regulations require that a draft board fill its quota from the oldest available men. Few non-college men are available in the age group 22-25, where most of these students fall."

According to the Commission, the importance in all of this is not how many students are lost during the 1968-69 school year itself, or during any given semester, but the final toll on students and universities in the next five-year period.

"Although many may be allowed to complete this school year if an induction notice is not issued before they are in the final term, this does not change the fact that MOST OF THESE DRAFT-ELIGIBLE MEN MAY BE UNABLE TO COMPLETE THEIR GRADUATE TRAINING PRIOR TO ENTRY INTO THE SERVICE. A substantial loss of first-and second-year graduate students inevitably will reduce the size of advanced Ph.D. classes in following years.

"The Commission believes that the results obtained in this survey," the report concludes, "are substantial enough to provide those concerned with scientific manpower an insight into the potential impact of current draft policy on graduate education in the sciences, and on the future well-being of the nation."

UTexas Grad Student Wins Momentous Victory

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) - U.S. Dist. Judge Jack Roberts issued an order yesterday in favor of a second-year law student at the University of Texas that could affect the draft status of graduate students across the country.

Albert Armendariz Jr. sought an injunction against Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, to prohibit Armendariz' induction into the service until the end of the current academic school year.

Armendariz had a II-S deferment, which is good for 12 months and is renewable. After he got his induction notice, he sought a I-S deferment, which would permit him to finish the academic school year. His draft board in El Paso denied him the I-S classification because of a memorandum issued by Hershey last April.

Hershey's memorandum said any student who had received a II-S deferment since June 30, 1967, was not entitled to get a I-S after receiving his induction notice.

Armendariz' lawyer, Pete Tijerina, argued that Hershey's memorandum went outside the Selective Service regulation it sought to interpret. He said his client had a statutory right to a I-S classification and that the draft board was without discretion in the matter.

European Universities Plagued By Student Threats and Violence

LONDON (AP) - Student unrest flared in a number of countries Monday with violence in Berlin, arrests in Spain, protests in London and a stern warning from the French government.

One main target was the Iranian consulate, where windos were broken. Scores of helmeted police blocked the students from reaching the Greek military mission and the U. S. Amerika Haus Cultural center. Witnesses said several of the 500 to 600 students were arrested.

The students said they were protesting possible dismissal from the Free University of 14 students because of earlier disturbances.

In Spain, police hunted for student extremists. Major universities in Madrid and Barcelona remained closed.

Gen. Francisco Franco has declared a nationwide state of emergency and suspended five major civil rights. Press censorship also was reintroduced. Rumors circulated Monday that 500 persons were arrested, but police sources said no more than 200 were held.

Demonstrators in Frankfurt protested Franco's move by smashing windows in various Spanish institutions, including the Spanish national tourist office, Iberia airlines and a Spanish bank.

In London, more than 1,000 students marched on the London school of Economics demanding that it be reopened. Police stood by and there was no violence.

The school was closed Friday night after some 300 students destroyed steel security gates with axes and sledgehammers. The gates had been installed recently to control demonstrators who had threatened to occupy the school.

Militant student leaders were canvassing students in other British universities for support.

French Premier Maurice Couve de Murville in a television appearance Monday warned students the government would punish "unflinchingly" the nation's student rebels if they occupy classrooms or vandalize buildings.

His warning came on the heels of last weeks's student violence the most serious outbreak since last spring's open revolt.

Commission to Be Set Up

Town Of Amherst To Look at Self

Amherst's annual town meeting in March will be asked to set up a commission to "determine how findings in the Kerner Report" apply to the town and "how Amherst may more fully extend democratic government and equal opportunity to all inhabitants."

A petition being circulated for such an article already has the necessary minimum of 10 signatures, according to Atty. Paul R. Rogers. The proposed article is the outgrowth of meetings of the Sunday Breakfast Discussion Group of which Rogers is moderator.

The Kerner Report is the name given to the findings of The National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders appointed by President Johnson after racial incidents and riots of 1967. Judge Otto Kerner of Illinois was commission chairman.

"We will continue to circulate the petition for the article so that all who wish may sign it," Rogers said. A copy is available for signing at the Amherst Record office, 109 Main St. Copies of the Kerner Report summary are also available there.

The proposed article reads as follows:

"To see if the town, accepting its share of the urgent domestic social challenges which all America faces in 1969, as confirmed by the Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders (the Kerner Report), will establish a Citizens Review Commission of eleven members widely representative of resident races, creeds, levels of age, education, and income, and including members of both sexes, to determine how the findings and recommendations set forth in the Kerner Report apply to Amherst and to determine how Amherst may more fully extend democratic government and equal opportunity to all inhabitants, and to advise the town publicly not later than Nov. 1, 1969, of its findings and recommendations."

The Sunday Breakfast group meets at 9 a.m. at On The Green Restaurant; anyone is welcome to attend, Rogers pointed out.

Provost Announces Appointment Of Internat'l Programs Director

Dr. Barbara B. Burn has been appointed Director of International Programs at UMass, it was announced today by Provost Oswald Tippo.

In this newly created position, Mrs. Burn will supervise the office of Foreign Students and serve in a liaison capacity between the administration and faculty in the development of international programs, including study-abroad programs and international overseas assistance commitments.

The University conducts summer study programs in Oxford, Madrid and Bologna, and will launch a new one this summer in Peau, France. UMass also operates an academic-year Atlantic studies program in Freiburg, Germany.

The College of Agriculture has a number of international programs which are coordinated by the newly established Center for International Agricultural Studies. Under contract with the Agency for International Development (AID) the College conducts a program in Malawi, East Africa, that is helping to build an agricultural college there and is developing an American-type agricultural extension system. Approximately 65 agricultural trainees from countries all over the world come to Amherst each year for special courses at UMass. In the spring semester the new Center will launch a Peace Corps training program for 25 UMass seniors in agriculture and home economics; upon graduation in June these new volunteers will be assigned to Kenya and Malawi.

The School of Education, under AID contract, has built and is staffing an all-girl high school in Tororo, Uganda.

Other international programs include the JET (Junior Executive Training) program that brings 40 young executives from Europe to Amherst for a summer training program in the School of Business Administration, and a summer program for 40 Japanese students that provides training in the English language and current American problems.

"I hope to be of service to both students and faculty," says Mrs. Burn. "More of our students should be going abroad for study, work or travel. A function of my office will be to compile information that will help students who don't know about the wealth of opportunities for study and travel overseas. The office will also be a center of information for faculty members who want to obtain Fulbright and other overseas teaching and research grants."

"We have more than 400 foreign students at the University this year," she added, "and there are many at Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke College. To date we have not worked together closely enough for the benefit of these students. My office will lend support to this type of cooperation."

Agraduate of the University of Michigan, Mrs. Burn received her master's and Ph. D. degrees from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. She has had extensive experience in the field of international education, serving as a Fulbright student in England, with the Foreign Service Institute, UNESCO, the Asia Foundation and the Department of State.

She also served as an assistant to President Clark Kerr when he headed the University of California system. Most recently she has been preparing a study of foreign higher education in eight countries for the Carnegie Commission on the Future of Higher Education. Her report focuses on the structure, financing and functions of higher education in Japan, Australia, Russia, Germany, France, Sweden, England and Canada. It will be published this spring.

...is personal development programs

As a graduating engineer, how can you position yourself so that your career chances are constantly optimized? Answer—get with an aerospace company where the optimum conditions are . . . Grumman. Here we take a keen interest in seeing that our engineers and scientists develop personally. We are sincerely interested in their personal progress within the company . . . that they keep abreast of the sweeping advances in technology, not because they can contribute more (although this is true), but more because it makes for greater individual progress and well-being. Job satisfaction, if you will. Let's look at these personal development programs.

Tuition Reimbursement Program
Directly applicable to their work, these programs offer engineers and scientists financial assistance for graduate studies at the many institutions in the Long Island-New York area.

In-Plant Courses
Engineering courses, particularly those not available at neighboring institutions, to deepen technical knowledge to the specific needs of the engineering sections.

College-Industry Courses
Selective attendance for rapid technical updating on fundamentals, theoretical methods and design information. (One to two weeks' duration.)

Engineering Masters Fellowship Program
To enhance creative design capability, one-year fellowships, renewable for a second year, are awarded to new engineering Bachelor of Science graduates and engineers with a year or more company service. The program combines two days of graduate school study with three days of in-plant engineering (in fixed or rotating assignments) and covers payment of full tuition, books, fees, a stipend, and a salary at engineering hourly rates for the hours worked.

Professional Development Programs
Lasting for 2 years, participants are given, in 4 six-months' terms, an exposure to Grumman operations which broadens their technical knowledge, sharpens ability to make sound decisions, and raises their career potential. Separate programs serve individuals in Business Systems, Engineering and Manufacturing.

Senior Engineers' Program
Intended to overcome the threat of technological obsolescence, individual disciplines are updated with regard to new scientific discoveries, new or expanded applications of long existing knowledge, and computer applications to problem solving.

Senior Management Development
Selected individuals within Grumman junior and middle management groups are nominated to attend management development programs such as the MIT Executive Development Program, the Program for Management Development or the Advanced Management Program at Harvard University.

Basic Principles of Supervisory Management
A series of discussion sessions provide a course in management principles to group leaders who show technical management ability.

Here then is a real opportunity for graduating engineers in AE, CE, EE, ME, IE, Physics and Chemical Engineering . . . to take their place in the continuum of technology that is Grumman. Grumman representatives will be ON CAMPUS

UMass Faculty Honored Through Grants, Awards

Wheeler Cited

UMass professor of entomology Dr. E. H. Wheeler was presented with a gold medal and the sum of $1000 by the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Agriculture for his "outstanding service to agriculture and conservation in Massachusetts."

Dr. Wheeler, who will retire August 31, was cited for his "effective work with legislators, control agencies and other groups interested in the safe use of agricultural chemicals for the protection of the farm operators, conservationists, the general public and all wildlife."

Dr. Wheeler, a UMass graduate with M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell University, has been a professor of entomology here since 1948. Since 1965 he has headed the UMass Pesticide Chemicals Information Center, statewide clearinghouse for pesticide information and education.

Wildlife Honors

UMass is one of the top ten in student enrollment among 76 North American universities offering training in wildlife and fisheries biology, according to The Wildlife Society News, published in Washington, D.C.

With 129 students enrolled in the wildlife program and 81 in the fishery program, UMass ranks sixth and fifth in these areas and has the largest combined enrollment in these fields of any university east of the Mississippi River.

German Head

Dr. Wolfgang Paulsen, head of the UMass department of Germanic languages and literatures, was elected to the editorial board of the Germanic Review. The Germanic Review is devoted to German studies in this country and published by the German department of Columbia University.

Chemical Grant

A grant of $4000 has been awarded to UMass by the Esso Education Foundation to support a number of graduate fellowships in the chemical engineering department. According to Dr. John W. Eldridge, head of the department, part of the sum will also be used for research, equipment and supplies.

Aggie Grant

Dr. George B. Goddard of the UMass department of plant and soil sciences will administer a National Science Foundation grant of $28,223 that will support a research project entitled "Cooperative College-School Science Program."

Nursing Grant

A sum of $9350 was awarded the UMass School of Nursing by the U.S. Department of Public Health, Education and Welfare as part of the Nursing Educational Opportunity Grant Program. Dean Mary A. Maher of the School of Nursing will administer the grant, which will be used for scholarships for nursing students.

Gov't Grant

A grant of $8300 has been awarded to the UMass department of government to extend a study of the relationship of demographic characteristics and percentage of voter turnout to the 167 cities that originally applied for model city grants.

The sum is supplemental to an original grant of $35,147 from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare that was used last year to study 600 American cities ranging in population from 5000 to 250,000 in the states of New York, Illinois and California. The survey is being conducted through the means of two sets of questionnaires sent to the town and city clerks of the 167 American cities. The first questionnaire lists 57 kinds of public services that a community could offer and asks the clerk to check those available in the community.

Computor Growth

UMass has more than doubled the capacity of its Research Computing Center with the installation of a second CDC 3600 computer, center director Conrad A. Wogrin has announced.

The installation makes the UMass computer facility one of the largest in New England, Wogrin said. The center's existing CDC 3600 has a 65,000 word core memory.

There are some 36 teletype locations in classrooms and laboratories throughout the University campus and at such off-campus sites as Amherst Regional High School, Mount Holyoke College and the University's Waltham Field Station.

Addition of the new machine will increase the machine time for remote access use and permit the number of remote access ports to be increased to 64, Wogrin said. One result of the increase will be to reach UMass-Boston with the system.

The two computers will operate separately, one running 24 hours a day for batch use--input through previously prepared cards or tape. The other will handle UMASS remote teletype signals exclusively on a 9 a.m. to 1 a.m. schedule.

Labor Relations

The UMass Labor Relations and Research Center will sponsor a planning project on manpower policy and programs, under a $15,600 grant from the U.S. Department of Labor, Professor Ben B. Seligman, director of the Labor Center, has announced. Principal investigator for the project will be Solomon Barkin, professor of economics and research associate in the Labor Relations and Research center.

The project will explore the relations between economic and manpower policy objectives, instruments, measures and behavior as developed in the federal government. A meeting with leading economists will be held toward the end of the planning phase in order to specify the objectives clearly and to review the plan. A final report of the project is expected by January 1, 1970.

Associated with Prof. Barkin in the project will be Dr. Gerald Gunderson, assistant professor of economics. Dr. Gunderson is a specialist in economic history.

Student Newspaper Censorship Sought In North Dakota

(CPS) -- Threatened censorship and controls by the North Dakota Board of Higher Education and the North Dakota legislature drew editors representing six North Dakota college newspapers to Fargo in December.

Meeting in a day-long session, the editors voted to adopt part of the newly-issued Code of Conduct of the Board as the basis of their own policy statement on obscenity.

"Student publications should be free to act as the voice of the student body, to praise or criticize at will," read the Code of Conduct, "and to espouse any cause, whether campus-oriented or not, deemed by them to be appropriate. However," the statement continued, "any and all material in such publications should be in accord with the rules of common decency and fair play."

"The Board has reserved the right to censor us," said Mike Zaharakis, editor of the Minot (N.D.) State College newspaper, the RED AND GREEN. "They're saying it's the people in the state who should determine content of student press. We're saying the campus should."

A North Dakota legislator has attempted passage of a law to ban the editor of the University of North Dakota newspaper from continuing to serve as editor. Ted Frederickson, editor of the DAKOTA STUDENT, has been under fire from legislators and the Board for printing a photograph depecting the word "shit."

Water Aide

A statewide information clearinghouse to help Massachusetts industry fight water pollution has been established at the University of Massachusetts.

The Technical Guidance Center for Industrial Water Pollution Control is supported by state and federal grants through the Commonwealth Technical Resource Service (COMTECH), the office of industrial liaison at the UMass School of Engineering.

The center has been established at the Marshall Hall laboratories of the UMass Institute of Industrial and Agricultural Microbiology under the direction of Dr. Warren Litsky, Dr. Haim B. Gunner and Mrs. Kreplick.

Twenty UMass faculty and graduate students spent six days in New York City during the hectic period from Oct. 27 to Nov. 1, video and audio taping interviews and action on picket lines, in schools, on the street, at conferences and at meetings. The purpose was to gather as much material as possible on the New York crisis to use as curriculum resource materials in urban education studies.

"The result is probably five hours of usable video tape and from 30 to 40 hours of audio tape, plus one half-hour film," said associate professor of education David Day, who with Arthur France, lecturer, directed the project.

Content analysis and indexing of the tapes is now going on, along with some editing. "We're not trying to do a documentary," Day explained, "We want to let the material itself present the various points of view."

A group at the UMass School of Education concieved the project after the strike started. "We were trying to keep up by reading the papers and found some great gaps," Day explained. The whole thing was planned and funded virtually from one week to the next, the critical factor being a $5000 grant from the Institute for Community Studies at Queens College, put through in near-record time by Marilyn Gittell, institute director.

"We left Amherst on a Sunday with four portable video tape units five portable tape recorders and a movie camera," Day said. "We broke up into teams of three or four each and interviewed people all over New York, digging, probing, and getting as much information as we could on issues and background."

Teams talked to teachers union head Albert Shanker, Board of Education President John Doar, Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district head Rhody McCoy, union members, supervisors, teachers, parents and children. Independent board meetings and Experimental Board of Education meetings were taped. Interviewers went into offices, to picket lines, on the streets and at one point taped midnight interviews with parents and children who were sleeping in at a school to keep it open.

The team had no difficulty whatsoever in talking to the people, Day said. "We told them who we were and that we were going to use the material to try to make our educational programs a little more relevant. They said beautiful, fine, come on in."

WFCR Fundraising Drive Is Success With $10,000

The drive to raise $10,000 in operating funds for WFCR, the Five College Radio Station on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, was completed successfully last week, according to WFCR Station Manager Al Hulsen.

A check for $5.00 from Donna Herzig of Manchester, Connecticut put the drive over the top.

Hulsen stated that contributions ranging from $1.00 to $100.00 had been received from over 1,200 listeners throughout New England, eastern New York, and Long Island since the drive began November 1. The largest support came from the Hartford, Connecticut area, he said.

Members of the Smith College music faculty -- Philipp Naegele, Ernst and Lory Wallfisch, and William Wittig -- were singled out for their contribution to the drive. Earlier this month they performed a benefit concert at the Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, which raised $550.

"The willingness of so many listeners to contribute to the continuation of our 18-hour broadcast day is very much appreciated," Hulsen said. "Because of their generous assistance there will be no curtailment of WFCR's non-commercial broadcast services."

Principal support of the FM station, at 88.5 megacycles, comes from the University of Massachusetts, and Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges. Contributions from listeners and program underwriters account for approximately 15% of WFCR's annual operating budget.

Be selfish. But be honest. You've put in a lot of tough years to get your degree. Your allegiance lies with a professional discipline.

Why, then, must you decide now to plight your trust to a company for life? Don't. Join a company first. If it doesn't advance you within that professional discipline, well, you're not married to it.

Many have found career enrichment at Du Pont. This comes from being handed a ball and being expected to run with it. From working with top people, from growing in a company where the opportunities are always wide open and the projects are often way out.

Many have found professional fulfillment and have built a very full, varied and happy life as "Du Ponters."

Others have found, after working at Du Pont, that their professional interest lay in teaching, in further study or in an industry that offered even wider scope in their particular discipline. All of these men left Du Pont far better qualified professionally than when they came.

So talk to the Du Pont recruiter. If he offers you something, think of it as a professional challenge, not a proposal of marriage.

The major campus story last semester was the Afro-American Society's confrontation with the Administration. When the story broke several hours after the MDC's final deadline, the editors and staff spent the night covering the event and putting together a special edition.

Police and peace demonstratots clashed during the inauguration of Richard M. Nixon and the DAILY COLLEGIAN was there to cover the story. In addition to its own reporters, the MDC gathers World, National, and State news through the wires of the Associated Press, TELEX (the wire service connecting major American College Dailies, National columnists Evans and Novack, and Herblock cattoons.

Co-captain Joey DiSarcina drives for the hoop in basketball action against AIC. The MDC sports staff offers complete campus sports coverage, backed up by the latest AP national sports news. (ACP rated the sports department tops!)

Ironically, the Redmen began their holiday games in a rather impressive fashion as they beat a strong Middlebury team 4-3 at Orr Rink. The Redmen led, 4-2, going into the third period and held on to win. Junior center John Hartnett scored two goals for the varsity skaters.

The game also saw the third line of Tom Peters, Joel Brebbia and Tom Babson coming to life. They continued to play well and will be counted on heavily for the remainder of the season.

In the Yankee Conference Tournament the following weekend the UMass sextet were beaten, 4-1, by their host team Vermont. The Catamounts, who had beaten the Redmen once before, lost to powerful New Hampshire in the finals. UMass finished the tourney by downing Connecticut in the consolation game, 7-3.

At this point the Redmen were 2-1, and things looked good. They were one game over .500 and heading for the Beantown and Boston State's pet Codfish Bowl tournament held at the geometician's delight, the Boston Arean, in the shadows of Perkins School for the Blind, the New Conservatory of Music, and last but certainly not least.

Things didn't remain rosy for long. In fact after just 11 seconds of their first round game against State the Redmen were behind and never caught up till the tourney's conclusion. The Redmen were dismal at an 11-1 defeat the first night and lost to Bowdoin in the consolation game, 3-1.

The Redmen, according to Coach Jack Canniff played well against the Bears but couldn't put the puck in the net. It would not be fair to be overly critical of the varsity as, according to Canniff, most of the blame was to be shouldered by himself. He felt the team had no right playing a third and fourth game in as many nights especially in tournaments.

Whatever the reasons for the showing, the Redmen finished the holiday season with a 5-6 record. The five wins in only half a schedule equals the total for last year's team.

Grapplers Face Tough 2nd Half

The UMass wrestling team in the first half of its season has lived up to its optimistic preseason predictions. The Redman grapplers are currently 5 - 2 in meet competition as they await Saturday's meet with Central Connecticut.

In a Quadrangle meet before vacation the UMass win streak was snapped at three by a strong Shippenburg squad, but the Redmen preceded to win the other two matches in the meet to start another streak.

Leading the win parade was undefeated Tom Andrewes. Wrestling in the 167-pound class, Andrewes won both his matches. The sophomore has yet to lose as a UMass performer, both in freshman and varsity competition.

This year's wrestling has featured a deep supply of depth. Most weight classes have two and sometimes more performers equally good.

Hodling down the 115-pound spot alone, however, has been sophomore Nick DiDomenico, who has only one blemish in an otherwise perfect record this season.

Also taking care of a position alone is 123-pounder Dave Wade. Wade has wrestled in only three meets, however, posting a 1-2 record.

At 130-pounds Phil Davis had started the season by winning three of his first four contests. An injury has sidelined him since, but his spot has been taken over admirably by Howie Kaplan who has swept three matches.

At 137-pounds Earle McCartney and John Paltrineri have combined for a 2-5 record.

Bill Keith and Brian Urquhart both have been successful at 145 pounds as they have helped the that weight class.

Mike Brauner has shouldered the entire schedule at 152 pounds but it has not seemed to hurt him much as Brauner has wrestled for 6-1 individual record.

Sophomore Bob Willman has taken care of the 177 pound class by himself and Willman has wrestled for a fine 4-2-1 slate in the first half of the season.

Three men have wrestled thus far at the 191 pound classification. Tim Perkins who has won twice in the unlimited division has wrestled mainly in the 191 class where he has posted a 3-1 record. Dick Gnatek has posted a 1-2 mark in his action while George Zguris has lost in his only appearance.

With strength at all weight classes the UMass wrestling team thus looks forward to its second half of the season with anticipation.

Among highlights of that second half will be a big trip to Pennsylvania that includes a meeting with small college Wilkes College.

Hoopmen Meet Disaster in Evansville and Boston

UMass Bombs Maine, 5-0 in Conf.

ORONO, Me. - UMass, harnassing the hot shooting of junior guard Ray Ellerbrook and the marvelous passing of Co-captain Joey DiSarcina, ran their victory streak to seven as they buried Maine, 106-81. The win also gave the rampaging Redmen a 5 - 0 driver's seat in the Yankee Conference.

Ellerbrook set a career high of 31 points for himself, making good on exactly half of his 30 field goal attempts while DiSarcina, returning to action after a three-game layoff, was handing out 15 assists to his backcourt buddy on fast breaks.

The Black Bears, who had racked up 125 points in an earlier contest, held the lead in the early going. Jim Stephenson, averaging 25 points going into the game, was hitting on his fall-away jump shot and put Maine ahead, 21 - 14, with just eight minutes gone off the clock.

UMass pulled even a few minutes later, but they could not go ahead as the smaller home team had the upper hand in the rebounding action. A three-point play by Dick Samuelson gave the visitors a 45 - 42 halftime edge.

In the second half, the Redman forward line of Ken Mathias, Pete Gayeska and Dennis Chapman took command of both of the backboards. Quick outlet passes to DiSarcina were turned into points by Chapman and Ellerbrook. On the defensive boards, Mathias and Gayeska scored on second efforts.

Gradually UMass pulled away and by the ten minute mark, had just about wrapped up the contest. In the closing seconds, the invaders went over the century mark, a new first for Coach Jack Leaman.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Ellerbrook and Stephenson had 31 apiece to lead the way. Others in double figures for Maine were transfer guard Marshall Todd, 14, and Dennis Stanley, 10. . . .Besides Ellerbrook, other high-scoring Redmen included Chapman with 18, Gayeska and Mathias, 15 each, and DiSarcina and Samuelson, who both wound up with 11. . . . It was the best shooting night of the season for UMass as they hit for 58 per cent from the floor and 80 per cent from the line.

Redmen Lose Finale to Tenn Tech....

EVANSVILLE, Ind. - A crowd of 5,481 Hoosiers were treated to the most exciting game of the tournament as UMass fell 80-79 to Tennessee Tech in overtime after staging a valiant comeback.

Hoops by Ray Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman and Pete Gayeska launched the Redmen into an early 6-2 advantage, but a rash of ball-handling mistakes quickly erased that edge.

Capitalizing on UMass' slow recovery from the Evansville loss the previous night, the Golden Eagles raced to a 32-17 lead behind the shooting of Ron Sutton and Billy Bland.

Suddenly, however, Ray Ellerbrook caught fire and with Kenny Mathias and Dick Samuelson crashing the boards, and Joey DiSarcina leading the fastbreak, the Redmen narrowed the gap to five. A three-point drive by Sutton made it Tennessee Tech 40, UMass, 32 at halftime.

A couple of hoops by Jack Gallagher in the early minutes of the second stanza, brought the Redmen closer, but the Eagles, use to the pressure basketball of the rugged Ohio Valley Conference, held on and increased their lead to 52 - 40. There were still 10 minutes to go, however.

A short jump shot and two free throws by Gayeska and a baseline bomb from John Dreyer whittled away at the lead a little more. Tech held on despite a good forecourt press by the Redmen.

Ellerbrook and Chapman kept the rally going with 15-footers, then a driving layup by Samuelson cut the Eagles margin to three, at 61-58. Four clutch foul shots delivered by Bland and Sutton made the outlook dim for UMass, however.

Two layups by Gayeska, sandwiched around an opponent's free throw, drew the Redmen closer. With a minute to go, Ellerbrook hit a 20-footer and only two points separated the clubs.

UMass got the ball with 45 seconds on a Gayeska steal but lost it ten tics later. Then as the clock ground into single figures, Chapman intercepted a Tech pass, flipped the ball up-court to Ellerbrook who passed to DiSarcina for a fast break layup with just three seconds to go. The basket knotted the ballgame up at 66 all and brought the fans to their feet cheering the rallying Redmen.

Bland, a smooth guard with a nice shooting touch, quickly pushed his team into a five point lead, and it was comeback time again. Free throws by DiSarcina and a jumper by Ellerbrook kept it close, but Tennessee Tech was again up to the occasion at the foul line. Art Boznak, 7'0, converted two attempts, then after a DiSarcina turnaround, Frank Bartleson made another pair.

Coach Hack Leaman was shuffling rebounders and pressers into the ball game as fast as possible but Tech would not miss from the foul line. Two charity stripe tosses by DiSarcina made it 80-79 with 15 seconds remaing. UMass got possession again but lost the ball before it could get it upcourt on a sideline infraction.

Ellerbrook led all scorers with 27, the best scoring output of the tournament. DiSarcina and Gayeska had 15 and 14, respectively.

TOURNEY TALK - New Mexico topped Evansville, 86-75, for the championship. . .Slammin' Sam Lacey, a 6'9 All-American, was the most valuable player of the tournament. The Aggie center grabbed 48 rebounds, scored 43 points, and blocked 15 shots in the two-night event. . . .Ray Ellerbrook won the Sportsmanship Awards so the Redmen did not go home empty-handed anyways. . . Ken Mathias fell victim to the flu bug. . . .

...After Evansville Rout

EVANSVILLE, Ind. - A scrappy hustling Evansville team took the wind out of UMass' sails, 93 -73, in the nightcap of the opening doubleheader in the Evansville Invitational. A small, but enthusiastic turnout of 3,517 witnessed the host team's victory in spacious Roberts Municipal Stadium.

The Purple Aces, a perennial small college powerhouse, were suffering through a mediocre 3-3 season, but put it all together against the previously unbeaten Easterners. Despite having no player above 6'5, they controlled the backboards, 60-46, and their offensive rebounding enabled them to get off an amazing 93 shots.

UMass, with Pete Gayeska doing the bulk of the scoring, grabbed an early 13 - 7 lead. Evansville roared back, however, as reserve forward John Wellemeyer pumped in six straight points.

Both clubs battled back and forth on even terms for the next five minutes. Jack Gallagher and Ray Ellerbrook were the visitor's chief marksmen while the Aces were getting the second and third shot off all too often.

A 25-24 score was the last Redmen edge. Evansville took command as UMass blew fast break and free throw opportunities. Kenny Mathias canned two hoops to keep the visitors within striking distance, but the Aces were up 37 - 31, at intermission.

Evansville returned from the locker room and gave their guests a lesson in racehorse basketball. In five minutes they scored 19 points against nine for the Redmen, and were in command the rest of the way.

Substitutes Dick Samuelson and John Shockro played well in spots for UMass, but the rest of the cast was sub-par in the second stanza.

Gayeska led the Redmen with 17 points and 10 rebounds followed by Mathias with 15 markers. Each made seven of 10 field goal attempts. Gallagher was also in double figures as he picked up 11.

Twenty-seven turnovers were a big part of the visitors undoing. Add to this the rebounding stats, and the cold shooting of Dennis Chapman and Ellerbrook, UMass' offense, and you have the reason for the first setback.

TOURNEY TALK - The Redmen arrived in Evansville late Thursday afternoon after a five hour wait in the Indianapolis Terminal. New Mexico State beat Tennessee Tech, 80 - 67, in the comparatively well-played opener. . .New Mexico State routed Evansville a week ago in Las Cruces. . .

Redmen Lose to B.U. 85-71, and to Northeastern 68-64

BOSTON - Northeastern, playing near-perfect basketball, handed the road-weary Redmen their fourth straight defeat, 68-64, before a packed house at Cabot Gymnanium. The victorious Huskies were paced by Captain Lee Osgood's 22 points.

Cold shooting in the early minutes of the second half, a problem which has plagued UMass all season, again did the Redmen in.

Leading 41-35 with 20 minutes to go, the visitors failed to hit an outside shot until 10 minutes had passed in the period. By then Northeastern was up 55-50, and they held on to gain their eleventh win in 14 starts.

Ray Ellerbrook and Dennis Chapman had UMass off and running in the early going as they pumped in 15 and 20-footers. The Huskies were just as hot from the floor, however, and they held a four point lead at the 10 minute mark.

A rebound shot by Chapman and a fast break three-pointer by Ellerbrook pushed the Redmen into the lead. Ken Mathias and Joey DiSarcina increased the visitor's advantage to four.

With 5:03 left in the first period, Ellerbrook sprained his left ankle. The junior guard shook off the injury, but it hampered his movements the rest of the night.

At halftime the Redmen led, 41-35, thanks mainly to Chapman's 13 points and Ellerbrook's 12.

Carlton Chandler and Osgood headed the Huskies' second half rally. UMass could only counter with rebound shots by Pete Gayeska and free throws by the four other Northeastern starters as they outscored them 20-9 in the third quarter.

John Schockre's 20-footer woke the Redmen up, but the Beantowners went into a freeze and only four fouls could bring them out of it. Chandler's layup gave the Huskies a 62-54 edge with four minutes left.

UMass' press could not rattle the home team though. Osgood's passing and dribbling was superb as the seconds ticked away.

Baskets by Chapman, Ellerbrook and Jack Gallagher kept the Redmen within three, but Northeastern would not give up the ball without a layup or free throw. They made only two turnovers the entire second half.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - The Huskies shot 52 per cent while the Redmen hit 45 per cent. UMass hit a poor 27 per cent in the second stanza, however . . . Ellerbrook and Chapman were the only visitors in double figures with 19 and 16 respectively . . . Osgood, hitting nine of 15 from the floor, paced Northeastern with 22 . . . Superior outside shooting by the Huskies won this battle of the zone defenses . . .

The Rapprochement Between Rock and Jazz

By JOHN S. WILSON

THE rapprochement between rock and jazz that has been going on for two years is steadily building up steam as musicians from both sides of the fence become more and more excited about what they hear (or think they hear) on the other side.

That rock and jazz should be flowing together is not surprising since jazz, in its rhythm and blues aspect, supplied one of the key elements in the creation of rock. But, until recently, the two musical styles have gone their separate ways largely because jazz musicians tended to look down their noses at rock, while rock musicians were unaware of, or uninterested in, jazz.

The change has come about because musicians of both schools have found themselves working toward what they feel is a dead end and, in their dissatisfaction, each school has been attracted by the seemingly new horizons of the other school.

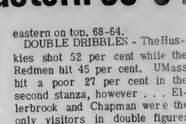
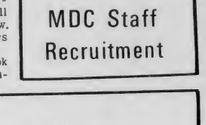
Musicians who developed in a jazz atmosphere have had to overcome a built-in prejudice against rock ("I used to think all rock musicians were just thumpers," one converted jazz musician has admitted).



For many anti-rock jazz musicians, the Beatles provided the first glimpse of the possibilities to be explored in rock. Steve Marcus, a jazz saxophonist who has been featured in Woody Herman's and Stan Kenton's bands, went through a period of surreptitiously enjoying the Beatles' records.



"But I'd hide them when my friends came in," he admits.

Then, feeling the need to participate in rock as well as to appreciate it, he formed a small group which he describes as "a jazz band that uses the colors of rock." It has made two LPs (Tomorrow, Vortex 2001; Count's Rock Band, Vortex 2009), on both of which Larry Coryell also plays.

"All of what I play with my eyes closed is from my jazz background," Marcus said in explaining how he pulls the two musical elements together. "The rock aspect is primarily in the character of the music. It's a very satisfying thing right now, but it's not necessarily the end of everything for me."

Skiers Rebound to Win After Fall in Opener

MIDDLEBURY, Vt. - The Redmen, who are the defending champions of the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference took the pipe in the season opener but they bounced back to take the giant slalom the following day. Amherst College took advantage of the UMass mishap and established a solid lead in the conference standings. Amherst was first on Saturday and second on Sunday.

The frozen granular snow, which had become softened by four days of January thaw yielded many ruts on the steeper section of the course. These ruts proved to be the nemisis for all, but Dave Kamila. The remainder of the squad experienced falls and placed far back in the final standings giving UMass a rather discouraging sixth place in the final standings.

Despite the poor showing in the slalom, UMass attracted quite a bit of attention on the hill. Following the race, while the awards were being presented, most of the spectators were able to catch a glimpse of Ted Martin execute what will be the most talked about jump of Middlebury this season.

"Madman" Martin performed the jump (referred to as a gelandersprung in skiing) from the headwell of the Proctor Trail to the base of a crevice some 30 feet below. The air flight was something usually reserved for the movies, but the landing in the melting snow was less impressive.

It was not determined whether Martin had intended to take the route down the mountain as he was noticeably quiet after returning from the hospital where he had his head candled and stitched for good measure.

Peter Rosenthal replaced Martin in the line-up for the G.S. and perhaps sparked the team into winning form. Jim Garstang turned in a fine first run to nail down second place followed by Dave Kamila in third. A first year member of the ski team, Jerry Curran, skied a blazing race and beat out Co-captain Dick McHugh to insure the team prize for UMass.

UMASS RIFLE ACE GARY FULTON sets his sights on another opponent. The Redman gunners have been undefeated through three meets, defeating Central Conn., Rhode Island and Brown. Leading the UMass squad, which is coached by Mike Goodge are in addition to Fulton, Captain John Lacoutre, Doug Hjorth, Bern Amata and Dud Darling. The Redmen who are aiming for an unbeaten season will next meet New Hampshire on February 8 at Durham. (MDC photo by Pat Lempart)

Gymnasts Score One Win and One Loss over Intersession

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

The varsity gymnastics team wound up their intersession vacation by splitting two away meets in Pennsylvania. They trounced the University of Pittsburgh, 140-96, and lost to Penn State by a narrow eight point margin, 160-152.

Against Pitt, Co-captain Dick DelGallo walked away with a first in the still rings, second in the floor exercises and a fourth on the parallel bars.

All-around man Joe Reed had a first in the side horse vault, two seconds, the rings and the high bars, and a third in the floor exercises.

Norm Vexler chalked up a first in the side horse event, and teammate George Seibert had a first in the high bar event and a third in the rings. Rich Riley garnered a second in the side horse, and Steve Cary a second in the side horse vault.

The highlight of the Penn State meet was the strong performance by the Redmen floor exercise team composed of Vexler, Reed, Del Gallo, Co-captain Mike Kasavana and Bill McAuley. The ring team also combined to produce a fine showing with a 27.4 score, a better than nine point average for each man on the team. The score was also the highest event score for UMass.

DelGallo had a first on the floor exercises and a second in the rings. Reed posted a second in the rings and Seibert had a fourth in the same event. Cary posted a second in vaulting.

Both Vexler and Reed had strong all-around performances in both meets and did a fine job.

Indoor Track Squad Preps for Season

On February 5, the UMass indoor track squad, led by tri-captains Bob Hasselbaum, John Ariensen, and Charlie Lang, begins its 1969 dual meet season. The team will be manned by many returnees from last year's conference title contender and will be supplemented by a number of good, solid performers from last year's winning freshman squad.

Track coach Ken O'Brien and his assistant coach, Gary Schwartz, have developed a good field events team that will be a big plus to this year's team. The 35 pound weight and shot put will be handled by seniors Dave Schlatka and Bill Wilen and soph Ed Arcaro. Schlatka is the Yan-Con discus champ and Arcaro is the freshman shot put record holder. In the high jump UMass has three top-notch performers with senior John Ariensen, junior Paul Nyman, and soph Cal Carpenter. Ariensen and Nyman placed one-two in the conference meet last year, with Carpenter, the fr[illegible] recordholder, they make a str[illegible] threesome who will be tough to be[illegible].

In the broad jump, junior Dick Dyer and soph Dave Canterbury will supply a strong scoring punch. UMass hopes of finally scoring points in the pole vault have been temporarily dispelled by a fractured bone in the foot of soph vaulter, Buzz Hiller.

Coach O'Brien expects a lot of points to come from his strong sprints and hurdles teams. The sprints are manned by three top runners, Walter Mayo, freshman record owner, Dave Marble and Steve Chase, two juniors who both won high conference honors as sophs last year. Hurdlers Marc Lefever, a junior, and Gerry Spellman, a soph, own practically all the school's hurdling marks between them and are expected to break some of these records this year.

Senior Bob Hasselbaum will be leading the middle distance runners in the quarter and 600. Supporting Hasselbaum in these events will be Carl Ventura. Versatile Diego Gonzalez will run the 600, 1000, and mile during the year and junior Bill Donaldson will be counted on for valuable points in both the 1000 and the mile. Due to a severe knee injury, top 1000 yarder Dave Evans may be lost to the team all season.

The distance team will be held down by five members from this season successful cross-country team. Seniors Charlie Lang and Paul Hoss hope to be fully recovered from injuries by the time the season begins. Three sophs, Ron Wayne, Leo Duart, and Tom Derderian, who all had glittering cross-country seasons, will join seniors Lang and Hoss in the mile and two mile events.

This 1969 team faces four tough opponents in their four dual meet schedule, according to Coach O'Brien. Ivy League power Dartmouth is the first rival on Feb. 5. A "seasoned" Northeastern team, who has already had six meets, battle the Redmen Feb. 15. Two top conference rivals, UConn and UNH, provide the competition on Feb. 18 and 22, respectively. The season's big meet, the Yankee Conference title meet, occurs March 1 in Vermont. Ironically, Vermont is the only team that cannot be considered a serious threat for the conference championship.

On January 11, a few members of the team turned in "average performances due to final exams" said the coach, during the Knights of Columbus annual Boston meet. The mile relay of Angel Nieves, Steve Chase, Gerry Spellman, and Diego Gonzalez placed third in their heat. Placing fifth in their two mile relay heat were Bill Donaldson, Dave Evans, Ron Wayne, and Diego Gonzalez. Wayne running his first indoor half mile and anchor man Gonzalez both turned in good performances. Two individual runners, Marc Lefever in the hurdles and Angel Nieves in the dash both made it to the semi-finals of their events.

The season has now begun with the KofC meet and culminates with a chance to regain the conference title on March 1. JDF

Road-Weary Cagers Play Host To Impressive Fordham

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Fordham, ranked thirty-sixth in the nation, this week by BASKETBALL WEEKLY, takes to the Cage floor tonight in what should be a good battle with the UMass Redmen, fresh from their upset over Providence.

The Redmen, playing at Curry Hicks Cage for the first time since Dec. 14, are coming off seven straight away games. If they'd stayed on the road much longer, they probably would have been awarded an AGA franchise. It won't necessarily be home, sweet home, though.

The Rams from the Bronz have an impressive 10-4 mark which included wins over San Francisco and Holy Cross and defeats at the hands of Notre Dame and Columbia. They are aiming for another NIT bid.

Balance is the key word in the Fordham attack. The Rams have a good combination of depth and experience despite the recent departure of 6'7 Co-captain Denny Witkowski from the squad.

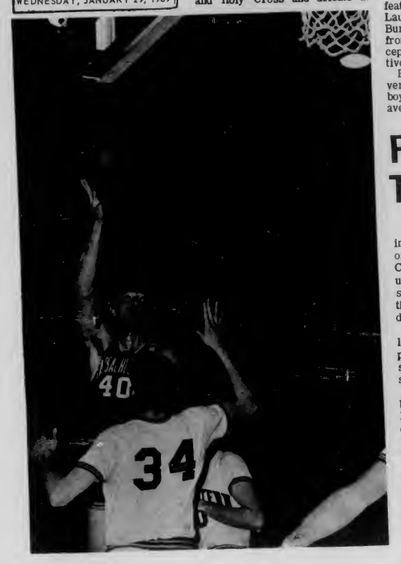
Reserve forward Charlie Yelverton, former all NYC schoolboy, is the team's leading scorer, averaging 10.9 a game. Guard Bill Mainor has come off the bench to win a couple of games for the Rams.



John Zanzalari, a 6'8 center, may also be called upon by rookie Coach Ed Conlin, an ex-NBA star. Ken Crusius and Bob Cassou will also see plenty of action for the visitors.

UMass, 8-4, is counting on the lineup of Pete Gayeska, Ken Mathias, Dennis Chapman, Joey DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook to hold off the stiff competition. Ellerbrook leads the Redmen through 12 games as the junior guard is averaging 18.4.

In the four away losses, UMass averaged five points in the opening five minutes of each second half. These second half blahs will have to be solved if the Redmen are to win tonight.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - A standing room only crowd of 3300 looked on as UMass stunned Providence College, 75-62. The sparkling upset stopped a four-game losing streak for the Redmen and handed the Friars their first home court defeat this season.

Pete Gayeska had 22 points and 13 rebounds to highlight the superb team effort. UMass now stands 8-4 after playing seven straight away games.

Outside bombing by Ray Ellerbrook and Dennis Chapman put the Redmen on top, 4-0, at the start of the contest, but baskets from Friar forwards Craig Callen and Dennis Walsh tied the score.

Ken Mathias and Ray Ellerbrook traded hoops with Vin Collucci and Callen, making it 8-all after five minutes of action. Then the visitors took command as Chapman connected and Mathias followed with a three-point play.

Ellerbrook's shooting and Gayeska's rebounding widened the margin until Joe DiSarcina's drive made it UMass 33, Providence 15, with 7:20 to go in the first period.

Jim Larranaga, Providence's leading scorer, and Collucci, who scored 36 points against UCLA, pooled their point-making talents to bring the Friars back. Their fine shooting offset buckets by Billy Greeley and Chapman and pulled PC to within six points at halftime.

Both squards went cold at the start of the second half. Good offensive rebounding by center Ray Johnson cut into the UMass edge, leaving the Redmen with a meager 46-43 advantage.

The visitors weren't about to let this sweet one get away, however. Gayeska canned another hook, Chapman took a DiSarcina pass for a layin and Mathias walked in for two on an assist from Ellerbrook.

Free throws pushed the Redman margin into double figures at the 10 minute mark. Providence started to press a little but drives by Larranaga and Walsh were offset by reserve John Dreyer's efforts.

Dreyer came off the bench to tap in a rebound and pop a 15-footer through the cords. The clutch foul shooting of Ellerbrook and DiSarcina capped off the fine team effort.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Gayeska topped all scorers hitting 10 of 14 for 22 points, while Ellerbrook and Chapman followed with 18 and 13 respectively . . . The Friars, a young team, had sophomores Collucci, Larranaga and Ferro in twin numbers . . . UMass was impressive on the boards . . . They won that battle also, 49-34 . . . Providence's Captain Andy Clary was sidelined with an injured ankle . . . The game was telecast on Channel 12, WPRO-TV . . .

Frosh Five To Battle Dartmouth After Month's Vacation

By Peter Pascarelli
Assistant Sports Editor

Rest is important to any athletic team, but the six week layoff the UMass freshman basketball team had is stretching the point a little. The undefeated Little Redmen will be virtually starting their season anew when they meet the tough Dartmouth College frosh tonight at 6 p.m. in the Cage.

Frosh coach Peter Broaca is more than a little concerned about the extended vacation his team has enjoyed. "We would be a lot better off coming back with an easier opponent," said Broaca. "This would be a tough game if we were in midseason form."

The UMass coach has given his charges a s much work as possible in the past few days in hopes they can regain the performance which led the Little Redmen to five straight wins. The team practiced twice Monday for three hours and practiced again last evening. Broaca said, "We have been working hard and I think we are as good as we can be."

The frosh get a big boost tonight with the addition of forward Bill Kesgen. The 6'5 Kesgen who is a highly regarded prospect, has been sidelined with an ankle injury since the beginning of the season and has yet to see his first action. However the burly East Rutherford, N.J. native seems in good shape and will be UMass' sixth man.

The Little Redmen will need Kesgen's help against Dartmouth. The Indians' 4-4 record belies a well balanced and talented squad. Dartmouth's four losses were all on the road, two in overtime to New Hampshire and Connecticut. The other defeats were to Harvard and Holy Cross.

The Indian's leading scorer is 6'3 guard John Van Kurn from Lafayette, Indiana. Van Kurn averages 14.5 points. At the other guard is former Weymouth High School star Ed Wisneski. The 6'2 Wisneski is averaging 11 points.

At the pivot position of the big Dartmouth forecourt is 6'10 Jim Masker from Vernon, Conn. Masker is averaging almost 11 points and ten rebounds. Starting in one forward spot is 6'5 Paul Erland. The Nashville, Tenn. product is averaging 13 points. In the other corner will be 6'7 Tom Byron from Delmar, N.Y. He is averaging almost nine points per game.

Thru five games, Julius Erving is the leading UMass scorer. The talented forward is averaging 19 points per game. Supporting Erving in the well-balanced UMass attack have been forward Rick Vogeley and guard Mike Pagliara both averaging 15 points. Guard John Bettancourt is averaging 12 points, while forward Chris Coffin and center Tom Austin are averaging seven and six points respectively.

The Little Redman dominance of its opposition this season is evidence by its scoring average of 82 points a game. UMass has given up only 59 to the opponent.

Bill Kesgen's return to the frosh lineup is expected to aid their effort against the Dartmouth frosh tonight.

Redmen on the Warpath

BASKETBALL - vs. Fordham University, at home, (the Cage) tonight, 8 p.m.

HOCKEY - vs. University of Pennsylvania (at home, Orr Rink) today, 4 p.m.

Frenzied Penn Icemen Arrive With Travelling Cheer Squad

With just half the hockey season gone the UMass varsity has already compiled more wins (5) than they did all last year. Today, as they embark on the second half of their schedule, they will meet a good U of Penn sextet.

The Quakers, in only their second year of inter-collegiate competition, are full members of the tough Ivy League. They play teams like Cornell (twice), Yale, Princeton and Harvard. Although they lost to the Jawns by a 12-0 score during Christmas recess, they came back to scare a strong Yale team before bowing 5-4. Penn had amassed a 4-0 lead.

Comparative scores with Penn seem to be ominous although there are bright spots. Less than 24 hours after Jim O'Brian had potted a goal with just 8 seconds left to beat Bowdoin, the Bears travelled to East Orange, N.J., and beat the Quakers in their own Cherry Hill Arena.

The visitors will feature one high scoring line which will be pitted against UMass' first line of Paul Riley, Charlie Hanifan, and Bob Madore, who have proved to be very efficient defensively.

If they can keep the high flying Penn line in check then the Redmen can make a game of it, otherwise it may be a long afternoon for the home team.

Reportedly, there is a terrific frenzy being whipped up on the Penn campus over the game. In fact it has been rumored that two Penn co-eds, Janet Hoffman and Barbara Schwartz are planning to transport a cheering section to Amherst for the encounter. Lets hope that the redmen can dampen their enthusiasm.

Students Log Line Time at Registration '69

The longest line of registration was in Whitmore, as one whole side of the building was crammed with students Tuesday morning.

Waiting in line is a fact of life during registration. In view of this, the DAILY COLLEGIAN "rated" lines during the past two days, and now presents UMass' worst waits, listed in order of time spent standing around.

The worst wait was awarded hands down to the line outside the cashier's office in Whitmore. It was here that 200 students waited for an hour, from noon to one, while the cashiers ate lunch.

The runner-up award went to the line in front of the administration booth in Boyden Tuesday. This was where students waited an average of 20 minutes to learn that the computer may have indeed made a mistake on their grade card.

In third place, but not far behind the leaders, was the combined effort of the lines in front of Spanish, French, and German tables yesterday. Students in these lines dropped, added and hated courses they disappointingly flunked or unexpectedly passed.

Finishing out of the money, but earning honorable mention, was the line in front of the cashier's window in the Student Union. The delay in this area was caused by the construction of a new cashier's window on the second floor around the corner from the old one.

This is the list of winners as of today. However, this is not an accurate account of the semester-opening lines. The old pro, the lines at the check-out corner in the bookstore, have yet to be waited in. But line experts agree that by the end of next week, the ultimate winner will be the perennial all-star, the text-book trail.

LEVERETT - Judge W. Arthur Garrity of Boston Federal District Court has reduced the sentence of Suzanne Williams, 20, of Leverett, from an indefinite prison term to a one year sentence.

Miss Williams, who is confined to the Women's Reformatory at Alderson, W. Va., was convicted of pouring black paint on draft records Oct. 14 in Boston.

Judge Garrity sentenced the Leverett girl to an indeterminate stay in prison and told her, "your stay in prison depends entirely on your attitude and your will to abide by our laws. Persons who violate laws must be prepared to suffer the sanctions provided by law."

Miss Williams had spent a little over two months in the West Virginia reformatory before she filed a motion to Judge Garrity in late December.

Governor Eyes Med School Cut As Inflation Swells Budget

Massachusetts Governor Francis W. Sargent has ordered a "complete review" of the UMass Medical School and its inflation-ridden budget. The school plans to open in the fall of 1970, with an initial class of 16.

Administration sources close to the Governor indicated that Sargent intended to take a "new" approach to the Medical School program which would probably mean a severe curtailment of the institution.

Medical School planners have been warned that inflation will add nearly $18 million more to the estimated cost of the medical sciences building project.

The approximately $18 million is the difference between a cost estimate made last February, and the most recent prediction. Both estimates were made by H. A. Sloane, a firm of professional estimators employed by the architects with the approval of the state Bureau of Building Construction.

According to the estimators, the major reason for the jump is the rapidly escalating cost of construction. Since February, the figure used to estimate building cost inflation has more than doubled.

UMass President John W. Lederle expressed shock over the development. "We were moving ahead on schedule on a building designed within the authorized appropriation. Now we find inflation over which we have no control has forced this serious problem upon us."

The president added that similar inflation-generated problems were hitting other medical school construction projects throughout the country and, as a result, partially offsetting federal funds adjustments have in some cases been made available.

"Some federal funds have been added to original grants in cases where inflation has been a problem," he said. "We will make every effort to obtain additional federal funding in this case."

In February, Sloane Associates estimated that the medical sciences building project would cost a total of $44,017,031. This figure was used in applying for federal funds that were granted in the amount of approximately $18.7 million.

The current estimate by the Sloane firm jumped the total cost estimate for the same building project to $64,270,000. Of this, approximately $4.25 million came from cost additions for site development and power plant construction not entirely included in the previous estimate.

UMass planners are continuing to work with officials of the state executive branch and the state bureau of Building Construction on a thorough study and review of the problem.

"We have had excellent cooperation in the past from the State Legislature and the executive branch in getting the medical school going in Worcester," President Lederle said. "We are hoping for further cooperation as we tackle this problem and try to keep the medical school on schedule."

Black Campus Grievances Spark College Turmoil Across Nation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - A fast-spreading drive by American Negroes and their supporters for special treatment in the schools has brought campuses in many parts of the country to a boiling point.

Some student leaders in state after state are pressing for new "black studies" programs, lowered college enrollment standards for Negroes and other minority groups, more Negro faculty members. In some schools there are demands for autonomous Negro colleges within integrated universities.

The "movement", thus far without visible links among schools where it is in action, has spread even to high schools and grade schools in some cities.

The black militants say they are seeking to establish a Negro identity. They demand recognition of the Negro role in American history and culture. They want acknowledgement that the American Negro has problems peculiar to his race and unlike those of minority groups in other times.

They denounce the existing educational structure as a scheme to extol and uphold a white power system in which Negroes are treated as an inferior people.

Despite the violence and disorder which has accompanied it, the campaign has won the sympathy of a considerable cross-section of educators.

Others regard some demands, and behavior, as arrogant and intolerable and are taking a firm line to restore peace on the campuses.

A third group of school officials, seeking to avoid future confrontation, has volunteered curriculum changes and expanded aid to minority students, particularly Negroes.

After months of study, and consultation with black student leaders, a Harvard faculty committee recommended establishment of a degree-level course in Afro-American studies. It would take its place in the Harvard curriculum along with the traditional majors of college students - languages, music, literature, sciences. It is expected to be put into effect in September.

Among those who consider that Negroes have justice on their side when they ask for black-oriented academic courses is Joseph Boskin, co-director of the American Studies Program at the University of Southern California.

"To the disgrace of the United States, past and present, the Afro-American was the only individual who was denied his history.

"In contrast to the millions of immigrants who settled in the country, the African was prevented from retaining his culture, his language, his historic links with his continent.'

Elbert Walton, a Negro graduate student at Washington University in St. Louis, was asked what the student militants mean, in general, when they speak of a "black studies program."

"A black studies program is just that," Walton replied. "It's from the black perspective. And that would naturally require a black man to teach it.

"You're going to have every course you have in the standard curriculum. You're going to have economics, but economics based on black economic development or exploitation."

Some educators, while expressing sympathy with black aspirations, have cautioned that continued violence will encourage widespread public antagonism.

One of these was President Roger E. Guiles of Wisconsin's Oshkosh State University, where rowdy demonstrations by students demanded concessions for Negroes - only 113 in the student boy of 11,000.

"I believe the university is very much interested in providing a good experience for anyone on campus," Guiles said.

"We have no desire to become an all-white university.

"But the university must provide a climate in which its appropriate activities can be carried on without the fear of intimidation and physical violence."

Federal Gov't Awards Grants To AC Faculty

Research grants totaling more than $62,000 have been awarded to members of the Amherst faculty by Federal Government agencies during the first semester of this academic year. Of this sum, approximately $17,280 has been donated by the National Science Foundation for undergraduate research participation.

Largest of the awards is $20,800 from the National Science Foundation for a project involving research on the emergence of adult flies, manifestations of the light-dark cycle, determination of the locus of photoreception and the effect of light upon the nervous system, and differences in results caused by pigment mutants, directed by Professor William Zimmerman.

George W. Kidder, Stone Professor of Biology, has received a $10,454 Public Health Service grant for his research entitled "Synthesis and Testing of Metabolic Analogs." This grant is continuing support for Professor Kidder's studies of intermediary metabolism, specifically the study of pteridines (folic acid) which are compounds related to the vital functions of insects and other parasites.

Wilkins Opposes Black Protests Over Separate Departments

NEW YORK (CPS) --While black student protests raged on at least five major campuses in recent weeks, with no end in sight, the militants reveived a slap in the face from a black leader, Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

Wilkins, who was known to disagree with black student militants on the issues of separation and "black power," and is considered an "Uncle Tom" by many for his views and his acceptance of the White Establishment, said Monday he is strongly opposed to all-black studies departments and all-black dormitories on college campuses.

He said the NAACP will take to court, if necessary, black students' demands for departments autonomously controlled by blacks and dormitores where white students are not allowed. He said such departments and housing, which are being demanded on many campuses by militants, are "simply another version of segregation and Jim Crow."

Wilkins said he and the NAACP's lawyers were sure such departments and such all-black control would be found unconstitutional by the courts. He said he considers it illegal "to use public tax funds to set up segregated facilites," under the same laws that found segregation by whites illegal in 1954 and said schools which provide separate facilities are inherently unequal.

Of the black militant students who have been in the forefront of this season's campus agitation, Wilkins said, "They ought to be in the library studying to get a degree, so they could do some good."

He said, "It would be suicidal for a 'small minority' like black people to start talking about separatism and apartheid. We have suffered too much fighting the evil of racial segregation."

It has been over four years now since the Boss Tweeds, a campus rock-blues group started to perform at UMass, but the renowned sound of the Tweeds continues.

They will be playing in the Student Union Ballroom on Saturday, Feb. 1 at 8 p.m. along with a band new to campus. Sam DeLuxe and the Shoes. For $.50, let the Boss Tweeds welcome you back to second semester.

Roister Doisters Produce 'A Man For All Seasons'

An exciting production of Robert Bolt's A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS will be presented by the Roister Doisters Dramatic Society on Feb. 5, 6, 7, and 8 in Bowker Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. Roister Doisters has the distinction of being the University's oldest organization and A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS will celebrate the organization's fifty-ninth season.

Directed by Pedro Silva, a senior theatre major and promising young director, the cast is working toward the power and tension that emanates throughout the play. The technical crew, led by John Woods has been working to create the set design of Miss Karen Connolly. Many of these people are talented young theatre majors with serious goals in the production of theatre, and this year's endeavor should prove to be an exciting theatre experience.

Coffin's Speech Aired Over WFCR Saturday

The lecture by the Rev. William Sloane Coffin entitled "The Ordeal of Change" which was given on campus in November will be rebroadcast on Station WFCR on Saturday Feb. 1 at 7:30 p.m. Mr. Coffin, chaplain at Yale University, is nationally prominent for speaking out against the discriminatory nature of national fraternities, organizing one of the first "Freedom Rides" and most recently for being brought to trial for speaking out against the Selective Service system and the war in Viet-Nam. His lecture in the fall was sponsored by the United Christian Foundation and the Distinguished Visitors Program.

News Briefs

PARIS (AP) - The United States is going into the second full-scale session of Vietnam peace talks Thursday refusing to accept as final the other side's rejection of its proposals on steps to scale down the war.

A high diplomatic source said the U.S. delegation views the quick statements of rejection by North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front as part of a process which will develop into long sparring for advantage.

The NLF-Hanoi delegations said at the first session they would explain and elaborate at this session why they rejected U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge's proposals.

The proposal specifically rejected was one which dealt with the demilitarized zone buffer between North and South Vietnam. The United States and its South Vietnamese ally want the zone reestablished and guarantees that it will be respected.

Lodge can be expected to press this proposal again, along with proposals concerning gradual de-escalation of the war, gradual withdrawal of foreign troops by both sides from South Vietnam and prisoner exchanges. North Vietnam has yet to admit in so many words that it has any troops at all in the South.

Mid - East

Israel seemed Wednesday night to be trying to dispel fears it might be planning military reprisals against Iraq for the mass execution of nine Jews in Baghdad. Defense Minister Moshe Dayan told his countrymen: "We must provide no excuse for the rulers of Iraq to further harm the surviving Jews."

The United States, which has been urging Israel to avoid retaliation, declared in a letter to the U.N. Security Council that the public hangings in Iraq seemed to have been aimed at aggravating the tense Middle East crisis.

Speculation about an impending Israeli strike was fanned by Iraqi charges that Israel was massing its troops for an attack on Iraqi military units stationed in Jordan. The Israeli army officially denied the claim.

"All international factors must be mobilized to aid the Jews of Iraq," Dayan told a Tel Aviv gathering of his United Labor party. He added that Israel should take no action that might endanger the fate of Iraq's Jewish community.

Williams College Dorms, Houses To Set Rules on Female Visits

WILLIAMSTOWN - The trustees of Williams College have approved a report of the student-faculty Committee on Undergraduate Life recommending that individual residential houses and dormitory units be given responsibility for establishing and enforcing their own rules governing visit by women.

A statement issued by the trustees said:

"It is recognized that no institution can condone violatons of the laws of state and community and that the college by its very nature must be concerned with the preservation of conditions of privacy, decency and personal dignity for its members and guests.

"As long as these principles are observed the trustees authorize a favorable response to the report of the Committee on Undergraduate Life at such time as the latter can assure the faculty and the Dean of the College that the houses and other members of the college community are prepared to assume these responsibilities."

Women visitors would be allowed only in a house that prepares and obtains approval of such an agreement.

Amherst College Chairman Resigns After Twenty-One Years Service

John Jay McCloy, chairman of the Amherst College Board of Trustees since 1956, has announced his retirement from the board effective January 25, 1969, the date of the trustees' last meeting. Mr. McCloy was elected by alumni to a six-year term as trustee in 1947 and became a permanent member of the board in 1954.

A graduate of Amherst in the class of 1916, Mr. McCloy earned his law degree at Harvard, then served in the field artillery in France in World War I. Since then, with interruptions for military and government service, he has practiced law in New York City, presently with the firm of Milbank, Tweed, Hope, Hadley & McCloy.

Mr. McCloy has served as director of many business corporations, international agencies, and philanthropic organizations among them as chairman of the Ford Foundation, a post from which he recently retired.

In accepting his resignation, Amherst President Calvin H. Plimpton noted that Mr. McCloy's interest in the College was one of the important influences in his own decision to change from a career in medicine to one in college education.

Abolish "Signing-In"

At the beginning of this new semester a startling fact is apparent. In spite of last semester's parietal policy, thousands of our coeds are not pregnant this semester.

The administration, which previously feared that the new policy might have had that sort of disastrous effect knows why it did not. It was not due to birth controls or abortions. Certainly, it was not because of our students' chastity. Rather, the administration is sure that success was due to their own foolproof safeguard "the signing-in procedure". They believe that this one little technicality has protected the purity of thousands of girls.

Most students, on the other hand, have no idea of what saved the girls from last semester's madness. But all of us know it was not the signing-in procedure. In fact, we all know that the procedure was inserted to appease the administration and serves no useful purpose.

In practice, the signing-in rule is often forgotten or ignored. Strict enforcement would require at least a seven man police force in each dorm - probably more in the larger and more Bohemian Southwest area. The rule does not prevent students intending to break rules from signing-in, then signing-out, and then sneaking back up to the room for the rest of the night. What it does do is cause an annoying nuisance to dorm governments, and students making legitimate use of the open house privileges.

How much longer must be continue this future procedure? It does not affect the minority for whom it was intended, but plagues the majority with an unfair and unnecessary burden.

Nixon and Criminals

President Nixon has announced that higher bail provisions will be part of his attack on crime. "Law and order" was the mainstay of his campaign oratory this fall, but the President appears to be paying scant attention to the causes of the types of crimes he referred to in his campaign.

His announcement emphasized building up better prosecuting staffs and public defender systems. Nothing was said about programs which would strike at the roots of "crime in the streets" - lack of jobs, race prejudice among employers and unions, and frustration with the "system" of oppression. The criminals President Nixon is concerned with are products of their environment. Yet he ignores environment in attacking crime.

He has stated that cost is no factor in his quest for justice. However, high bail provisions will only affect the poor criminal who could be best helped through rehabilitation programs rather than by detention and jail - a process which only reinforces criminal behavior. The rich, organized criminals will not be affected, since they can afford any bail, however high. Thus they are left free to continue their illicit activities. It is interesting to note, in regard to Nixon's concern over costs and efficiency, that Peter Maas writes in "The Valachi Papers" that if the Mafia were controlled, america could afford a 10% tax reduction instead of the present surcharge.

How sincere is President Nixon in his desire to control crime and cut costs?

INSIDE REPORT

The Fulbright - Rogers Axis

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - Sen. J.W. Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, is not the same man who one year ago flatly refused to take testimony behind closed doors from Secretary of State Dean Rusk, insisting on public testimony or none at all.

When Rusk's Republican successor, William P. Rogers, came to Capitol Hill for routine questioning on his confirmation, Fulbright actually offered a closed-door session to spare him any possible embarrassment.

This is just one piece of evidence to show how sharply the view of the State Department has changed as seen from Fulbright's musty, elegant old Foreign Relations Committee room in the Capitol. There are many other pieces.

Shortly after the election, for example, Richard M. Nixon telephoned Fulbright, just elected to his fifth Senate term from Arkansas, for mutual congratulations. But the exhange was pregnant with innuendo about the relationship between Fulbright, whose sharp criticism contributed to President Johnson's fall, and the new administration.

That wasn't their last private talk. After making his early December surprise decision to name Rogers Secretary of State, Mr. Nixon discussed that - and other appointments - in detail with Fulbright.

Since then, the relationship has sweetened, creating a mood of civility and cooperation between Fulbright and the State Department dramatically different from the last three years of acrimony.

One reason for this unusual atmosphere is Fulbright's high estimate of both Roger's ability and his power in the Administration. Rogers has more influence with Mr. Nixon over the control of top-level appointments than any other Cabinet member. Confides a White House aide: "Bill Rogers put a hands-off sign at the State Department, and the politicians know he can enforce it."

Thus, Mr. Nixon's campaign pledge to clean out the department from top to bottom is a dead letter, and Fulbright gives Rogers much of the credit.

Far more important, Fulbright is convinced that Roger's view of the war in Vietnam (which destroyed his relationship with Rusk) is close to his own. Having spent the last three years in limbo far outside the perimeter of the Johnson administration, Fulbright is now doing some highly unusual things to make life easier for Republican Rogers and his Administration.

For instance, Fulbright is scrupulously rejecting all the Sunday TV quiz shows, on the ground that he might inadvertently say something embarrassing to the Nixon administration on Vietnam.

When pressure for more U.S. help to victims of the civil war in Nigeria reached a new peak, Rogers offered to come before Fulbright's committee and review what could be done. Fulbright said thanks, but the testimony wasn't needed. The real reason: he knew Rogers didn't have the time.

Fulbright has also quietly offered to help Rogers and the President sell their solution to the Vietnam war so long as he remains convinced that the Administration really means to push the Paris negotiations without reescalating the war, no matter how painful and long those negotiations may be.

Thus, Fulbright has drawn back from the resolution he pushed through the Foreign Relations Committee last year, aimed squarely at President Johnson, to put the Senate on record that no President should commit American troops abroad without first clearing it with the Senate. Although he will reintroduce this resolution, he will not make it a big issue - as of today.

State Department skeptics wonder how long "today" will last. They give the Rogers-Fulbright honeymoon about three months and see a path ahead that is strewn with boobytraps. The President is under strong pressure from some military experts - including Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, deputy commander in Vietnam who has been here counselling Mr. Nixon - to win a military victory in Vietnam.

If the President resists that pressure, Fulbright will stay in line, opening up an era of bipartisanship not seen here since John Foster Dulles used to take Sen. Walter George to lunch every other week in his State Department office.

For the Nixon administration, the stakes are large. If Fulbright breaks with the President over Vietnam, he could unleash against Mr. Nixon the full fury of the liberal-intellectual-youth lobby that forced Lyndon Johnson out of politics.

Innovations, Traditional Events Highlight Winter Carni Week

"Bows and flows of angel hair, and ice cream castles in the air.," so sings Judy Collins in her latest hit record, "Both Sides Now."

But UMass students will be building snow sculptures--weather permitting--instead of ice cream castles to the tune of "Both Sides Now," the theme for this year's Winter Carnival.

Opening of the 1969 Winter Carni is Sunday, Feb. 9 and it will run for an action-packed week until Sunday, Feb. 16. The week includes the traditional as well as the innovative and a quick glance at the schedule promises fun as well as surprises.

First on the list of events is the screening of old-time and new "avant gard" films, Monday and Tuesday. On Wednesday the Best Dressed Girl on Campus contest will be held as well as an ice skating party on the campus pond. An ice cream smorgasbord will be served in the Hatch on Thursday with a band for background music and entertainment.

Winter Carni weekend will begin on Friday, Valentine's Day, with an "Oldey But Goody" record hop featuring old pop record hits in the Student Union Ballroom. Later, the Chambers Brothers will appear in concert in the Curry Hicks Cage at 10 p.m. The 1969 Winter Carnival Queen will be crowned at the concert. An all night discotheque will be featured in the Student Union Ballroom following the concert.

Snow sculptures, such as the one above, are a traditional part of Winter Carnival at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. During the carnival week, February 9 through 16, the sculptures will be judged and the best awarded trophies.

American Social History Subject of Capra Films

Four Frank Capra films will be shown in Mead Auditorium at Amherst College. The films, important as research material on American social history, are: "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" (1936), to be shown today at 7:30 p.m.; "You Can't Take it With You" (1938), shown tomorrow at 7:30 p.m.; "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" (1939), Feb. 1 at 7:30 p.m. with a panel discussion following in Converse Assembly from 9:30 p.m. on; and "Lost Horizon" (1937) and "Prelude to War" (1942), Feb. 2 at 7:00 p.m.

Capra was one of five directors in the 1930's who were completely in charge of their films. He produced all of these films for Columbia Pictures. Now living as a recluse in California, Capra was the single most successful director between 1930-1950. He had complete control over fifty films and only one of them lost money.

Each of these five films is a statement about American society. The first three are about the depression and social classes. "Prelude to War", made at the behest of Franklin D. Roosevelt, is a commentary on the evils of fascism and why America should fight. "Lost Horizon" is a sharp contrast, urging pacifism.

One quarter of a billion people have seen these films. They are expertly done, hav e a definite message, and are oriented toward the middle and lower-middle class American, who though not formally educated, is nonetheless intelligent. The audio portion of the pictures is particularly noteworthy; the movies were designed to compete with radio, not television.

The showing of the films will benefit the Black and White Action Committee, and there will be a one dollar donation for the Summer Action Program.

UMass' School of Education Dean Dwight W. Allen will speak today at the quarterly meeting of the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents today at Shaker Farms Country Club in Westfield.

In a 12:30 p.m. luncheon talk entitled "A Possible Partnership," Dr. Allen will detail some of the educational innovations now being planned at UMass and discuss their future impact on education in the Commonwealth.

'Four Seasons', Audubon Film To be Shown at Smith Today

"Four Seasons," the third of a series of four Audubon wildlife films, will be shown at Smith College today.

The film-lecture, sponsored by Smith College and the Arcadia Audubon Society, will be at 7:30 p.m. in Sage Hall.

A year in British Columbia is the subject of "Four Seasons," beginning with spring on the coast and ending with winter among the snow-capped peaks of the Canadian Rockies.

Featured in the close-up sequences are Red-necked Grebes, snow geese, sharp-tailed grouse, sockeye salmon, bear, deer and other wildlife inhabitants. Award winning wildlife film producer Wilfred E. Gray will be the narrator.

Tickets for each program may be purchased on the Smith College campus at the Biological Sciences Club in Burton Hall and at the Calendar Office in College Hall. Tickets may also be bought at Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary, Easthampton, and at Sage Hall on the evening of the lecture.

"Demonstrators Accomplish Nothing" During Inauguration

BY RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Yippies and other various assorted revolutionaries seem to have developed a moral obligation to make their presence felt at every major political event.

The inauguration of Richard M. Nixon was no exception for along with all the spectacle inherited from tradition, a new dimension was added, a large scale protest demonstration.

The nation's capitol, however, was prepared to absorb this particular onslaught of star-spangled troublemakers, give them a fair amount of room to release their frustrations, and then dispose of them when they got unreasonably out of hand.

The story of the three day series of counter inaugural events, officially sponsored by the National Mobilization Against the War in Vietnam and later taken over by the more militant left-wing groups, is worthy of note only to place it in perspective. Chicago was a hard lesson and for those who would politically exploit the situation in any way, the facts of the day show that Washington, D.C. is a long way from Daley's domain.

The thousands of young people who went to Chicago during the Democratic National Convention demonstrated far more purpose than those who came to Washington last week. It became sorely obvious that the purpose of many of them was only violence.

While many met with violence at the hands of police in Chicago, much of which was unprovoked, the young dissidents in Washington did all the provoking. Blame cannot rest on the organizers of the protest in any sense. Sunday night, the night before the inauguration, leaders of the national mobilization were warned by members of the more militant groups that the protest was ineffectual and would be taken over Monday by those militant groups.

The counter-inaugural events began Saturday with discussion workshops which were apparently less than successful.

Sunday was planned as the big day of protest. Shortly after noon, the demonstrators began to converge near the Washington monument where a huge circus tent had been erected. Estimates at numbers ranged from two to ten thousand. It was, however, a totally disorganized group broken into disagreeing factions.

Their clothing was of all descriptions. Many wore helmets. Many had rubbed Vasoline over their faces to protect themselves from tear gas. Their precautions stemmed more out of deep persecution complexes than necessity. The police were courteous. Some of the protesters seemed even angered that the police would do nothing but smile back at them.

The counter inaugural march, which went up Pennsylvania Avenue in the opposite direction President Nixon's parade would take the next day, was less an effort of protest than a fun jaunt around the city. People walked along talking in small groups. A few had horns and drums. Marijuana "joints" were passed back and forth.

The passing of grass may be a symbol of solidarity in the movement but its use here in front of the hundreds of Washington detectives and Secret Service men who had saturated the city with security precautions, was only one more obvious act of provocation. It didn't work. No busts.

Demonstrators gather outside of the capitol building the day before Richard M. Nixon was sworn in as the new President. (MDC Photos by Ron LaBrecque).

Most of the demonstrations during the counter inauguration were against the war in Vietnam. This coffin was used to symbolize the death resulting from the war.

One youth, his face covered with orange fluorescent paint, said "Its just nice that we can all get together and talk about things." But the talking that did go on was not put to any good use for the next day all order was lost and the protest turned into a failure for all practical purposes.

One last fling before the big day. Sunday night acid rock filled the circus as several thousand jammed themselves in to breathe deeply of the air thick with the smell of marijuana.

Late Monday, as Lyndon B. Johnson and his family circled over the city in Air Force One for a last look before returning to Texas, the demonstrators were catching their breaths from a wild, destructive rampage through the streets.

A few hours earlier, tens of thousands of people began lining Pennsylvania Avenue to watch the inaugural parade while the protesters formed a few blocks away.

As street speakers carried the sounds of the transfer of power from Capitol Hill, Pennsylvania Ave. seemed to be clear of any of the demonstrators. Then, while Richard Nixon was only moments away from becoming President Nixon, the youths appeared en masse at 14th Street and Pennsylvania Ave.

This was the beginning of the second confrontation between police and demonstrators. The day before there had been a number of arrests outside the Smithsonian when a small number from the counter-inaugural march tried to break into a reception for Vice-President Spiro Agnew.

The group on 14th St. was immediately surrounded. There were noticeably many more helmets being work by the demonstrators than the day before. The police were firm but calm as the protestors screamed at them with an insane fervor. A few scuffles broke out and several were arrested.

....was the message to the Washington police as this student watched the presidential motorcade as it traveled back to the White House from Capital Hill.

The demonstrators moved down a few blocks and occupied a small area in front of the National Theater. They were lining Pennsylvania Ave. now. Their chants continued. Fibre-glass coated steel roping lined the streets and the demonstrators pushed against it.

The group became more violent and several fights broke out. Those arrested were overly dramatic in their discomfort whenever they saw news cameras. But the press was not moved. Reports of television coverage and coverage by the Washington newspapers took the demonstrators as much in stride as the police had.

Noticeably absent from the group were the militant leaders whose names have become well known in the "revolution". Only one such identification was made by four detectives watching the group from across the street. They thought they had spotted Tom Hayden, the founder of the Students for a Democratic Society, but this was not verified.

The protestors along Pennsylvania Ave. were not going to be satisfied with just waving their Viet Cong and black flags and banners when the new President drove by. They prepared to push into the street. Their chants became more obscene.

In a tree behind the group, two demonstrators unfurled a flag which displayed red and white stripes but in place of the field of stars was the peace symbol. A number of the youths wore clothing made from American flags, while others burned a pile of the small flags Boy Scouts had been distributing along the parade route.

As the President's arrival drew closer the demonstrators became more violent, More arrests. Then, from across the street, to the cheers of thousands who had purchased grandstand parade seats in the vicinity, came rifle bearing military men who positioned themselves in front of the screaming group.

The positioning of the troops proved to be a wise decision on the part of those in charge of security. When the newly inaugurated President drove by the demonstrators lunged forward. Sticks and empty soda cans were thrown. Several cherry and smoke bombs, none of them lit, were thrown. When the Marine band preceding the President's car had marched by a lit cherry bomb had been thrown into it and exploded.

Secret service men protecting Vice-President Agnew were startled by one of the missiles and for a brief moment the scene was tense and dramatic as the car sped up and the Secret Service men hurdled themselves only the back of the Vice-President's car.

Following the passing of the cabinet and the governors, the group of demonstrators broke away from Pennsylvania Ave.

Spurred on by the chant of a few that "the streets belong to the people, lets take the streets" the group began its wild rampage.

Police formed rapidly and moved behind the protestors clearing them from whatever street they went on.

When it was all over there were 80 arrests, a few injuries and some broken windows but the demonstrators had accomplished nothing.

The counter-inauguration was held in a park near The White House.

Michigan Legislature to Launch Probe Student Activism on State Campuses

Ann Arbor, Mich. (Telex-CPS)- The Michigan legislature is launching an investigation of state universities centering around the University of Michigan here, where a play was shut down Sunday for nudity and a sit-in is set for today.

Wayne State University and Michigan State are also expected to feel the brunt of the probe, which resulted from concern over student activism on the campuses.

"People are sick and tired of shaggy-haired idiots interfering with the activities of good students,' said the state Senator who introduced the resolution establishing the probe, James G. Fleming of Jackson.

Senator Fleming said opponents of the probe are crying "witch hunt' to try and hide its real purpose.

Another legislator, Sen. Gilbert Bursely, was in the audience Sunday night when ten actors and actresses appeared on stage nude during "Dionysus in 69." The Senator conceded that "the dramatic techniques were most unusual and interesting. I enjoyed it; however the performance could have financial repercussions for the university.

Besides the special probe, school officials face upcoming budget hearings soon, as the legislature holds the pursestrings.

The director of the company performing Dionysus said he would challenge the constitutionality of arrests against the ten on charges of indecent exposure.

At noon today, a "non-disruptive sit-in" is scheduled for the office of student affairs to dramatize demands for abolishment of language, science, humanities, and social science requirements. Also under protest are the closed-door policy of the faculty assembly and the lack of student representatives on curriculum committees.

Dr. David C. Bischoff, Associate Dean of the UMass School of Physical Education, is a member of a team planning for future expansion and change at Wesleyan University.

Dr. Bischoff has been named visiting professor of Physical Education and consultant at the Middletown, Conn, University for the 1968-69 academic year. He retains his UMass post and divides his time between the two universities.

Planners at Wesleyan are working on a new blueprint for the school, which will become coeducational by 1970 and will expand from 1400 to 2000 students. Dr. Bischoff's planning responsibility is in the specific areas of consulting on programs and facilities in physical education and as an advisor on the potential application of physical education to the entire academic curriculum and in the general areas of residence halls, student union, dining areas and other areas of University planning.

A UMass faculty member since 1957, Dr. Bischoff has directed general physical education and graduate work at the UMass School of Physical Education. He served as a member of the New Concepts Committee that aided in the planning of UMass-Boston.

Williams Students Started Tuesday At Vassar College

This week 30 Vassar girls will begin a semester of study at Williams. The schools have taken the first step in what is expected to be a full coeducation program involving several other colleges.

The Vassar girls will be the first in the 175-year history of Williams to be full-time students on campus. At Vassar, the Williams students are among about 80 men from Colgate University, Trinity College and Williams who are enrolled with about 1600 women.

Three buildings, one an annex of Williams Inn and two former residences near the campus, will be used to house the coeds. A house formerly occupied by Coach Frank F. Navarro has been renamed Goodrich House, and will be the center of the women's quarters. Mrs. Frederick C. Copeland, Jr., wife of the director of admissions will have her office there and act as adviser to women students.

There will be no formal proctorial arrangements at the women's residences, but the coeds will elect officers who will enforce regulations. The girls will be sophomores and juniors, as are their Williams counterparts at Vassar, and will follow course schedules approved by both colleges.

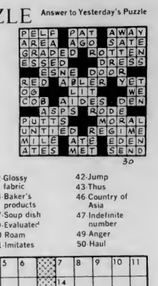
Amherst Notes Increase In Blacks' Applications



To encourage black students applying for admission, Amherst College, under the guidance of the Amherst Afro-American Society, has prepared a booklet entitled, "The Black Student at Amherst". As a direct result, the admissions office reports, applications from black students have risen from 18 at this point last year to 58.

Calvin P. Ward '70, president of the Amherst Afro-American Society, described the purpose of the booklet as "presenting our college from the prospective of the black student at a white school." Ward explained that the Society felt many questions a black student might have would go unanswered "in the neat, rosy pictures which college recruiters like to present."

The booklet provides a general introduction to Amherst and then answers such questions as, What is it like? "The big reason I stay at Amherst is that I know when I graduate I'll never ever feel that my background and my mind are inferior." How heavy is the workload? How tough is the competition? "It's a little frightening at first. . .But that fright and your ambition to succeed will take you a long way, often past the guy who doesn't think he has to sweat to make it.' What about social life? What do you do on weekends? and What's the town like? You can date white girls if you want - some cats do - but there will be about 40 black freshmen at Mount Holyoke next year; about a hundred at U.Mass.. The townspeople treat the brothers with neither condescension, paternalism nor bigotry; they are genuine.

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Coach Jack Leaman's hustling Redmen returned to Curry Hick's Cage last night and clobbered a favored Fordham team, 73-60, before a roaring capacity plus crowd of 5500.

The Redmen, now 9-4, pulled off the upset with a blend of scrappy defense, aggressive rebounding and clutch shooting. Fordham, previously ranked thirty-sixth in the nation, saw their season record drop to 10-5 before the home team onslaught.

UMass drew first blood in the game when Pete Gayeska notched a free throw, and Chapman followed with a spinning layup. The visitors moved out in front briefly on hoops by John Burik and Frank McLaughlin, but it was the last lead they held in the contest.

Gayeska's rebound shot and free throws by Joey DiSarcina and Chapman put the Redmen on top. Ken Mathias' outside popping then pushed the home team boys into a 17-8 lead with 10:15 left in the period.

Fordham charged back to within four on the efforts of Charlie Yelverton and McLaughlin, but DiSarcina's playmaking and Gayeska's rebounding kept the fans happy.

Near the end of the first half a nine-point string featuring the scoring of John Dreyer and Dick Samuelson moved UMass out to a 36-21 bulge. The Rams got two hoops to close the period and leave them at a nine-point disadvantage.

UMass won the game, though, when they burst out of the locker room to score 13 points in five minutes. Chapman and Gayeska were clawing the offensive board while Mathias, Ellerbrook and Dreyer poured in the points.

The Rams, behind 51-37 with 14 minutes to go in the game, tried to use a fast break to get back into the contest, but the Redmen countered with some beautiful steals and a controlled offense. Bill Mainer and John Zanzaleri canned hoops for the visitors, but the corner gunning of Ellerbrook and Chapman further increased the lead for the Redmen.

Down 60-43 at the eight minute mark, Fordham decided to employ a full-court press. The strategy backfired thanks to DiSarcina's ballhandling, however, and after a bundle of foul shots, the Redmen were up by 20 at 68-48.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - UMass shot 44 per cent as opposed to Fordham's 32 per cent. . .The Redmen also held a hard-earned 52-43 edge off the boards. . .

Chapman had his best night of the season, hitting 10 of 15 from the floor and two of three from the line in addition to grabbing 11 rebounds. . .

Gayeska, with 13 points and 20 big rebounds, was also in top form while Ellerbrook pitched in with 11 markers. . .Guards Burik and McLaughlin led Fordham with 14 and 13 points respectively. . . The Cage was filled to the brim with UMass: it had to be one of the biggest crowds within the history of the place.

Quakers Ice Redmen, 6 - 1, On Two Goals Per Period

Scoring twice in every period, the University of Pennsylvania rolled to an overwhelming 6-1 victory over UMass yesterday afternoon at Orr Rink before a large crowd of spectators.

Larry Walsh rated the star award for the night as he was sensational in the nets for the Redmen with 50 saves, 26 of them in the second period.

When Penn received back to back minor penalties late in the period, UMass applied the pressure but their efforts were in vain as Davis stole the puck from a Redman defenseman and easily beat Walsh on a solo dash.

Bader tallied a fluke goal early in the second period as he attempted a cross ice pass that a sliding Charlie Hanifan carried into the net as he bowled over Walsh.

After a constant barrage at the UMass net during a power play, Penn tallied its fourth goal with Tim Cutter stuffing in a rebound.

Jim O'Brien and Warren Baker squared off midway through the second period with the best blow being landed on the referee trying to break up the combatants.

Penn was very impressive in the middle session, outshooting the Redmen 28-4. Only the fine goaltending of Walsh kept the Redmen in the game.

Davis picked up his second goal of the game early in the third period on the power play. His goal came after the Quakers had two goals disqualified within seconds of each other.

Bill Todor banged in the final Penn score when he picked up an errant UMass pass to score unassisted.

Bob Madore broke the shutout string of Quaker goalie LloydSmith with less than two minutes remaining when his long backhander slid between the goalie's legs.

The month long layoff appeared to hurt the Redmen worst in their passing game - which was very sloppy. Also, the defensive support in front of Walsh had a hard time clearing the puck from in front of the net which cost the Redmen two rebound goals.

Action was rough throughout the game as the referees handed out 13 minor penalites and two major disqualifications. UMass drew seven of the minors and Penn had six.

The loss dropped the Redmen to a 5-7 card for the year while Penn is now 5-8, with five of the losses in the tough Ivy League.

Next game for the Redmen is Saturday, an away game at Williams. Next appearance at Orr rink for the Redmen will be against Amherst Feb. 15.

Little Redmen Edge Dartmouth, 61 - 57

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

A stale UMass freshman basketball team, obviously showing the effects of a six week layoff, overcame a late Dartmouth rally, and behind the late minute heroics of Mike Pagliara and John Bettancourt, defeated Dartmouth 61-57. The win kept the Little Redmen undefeated with a 6-0 record.

Plagued by turnovers, poor shooting and generally sloppy play, UMass found themselves in a tight second half duel. In fact the frosh were so cold that they scored only six points in the first 12 minutes of the second half and found themselves trailing by as much as five points with minutes to go in the game.

The little Redmen took an early substantial lead behind the scoring of Rich Vogeley and Pagliara. After three minutes UMass led by seven, 11-4. After a Dartmouth hoop by Paul Erland, UMass proceeded to run nine points to lead by 12 after eight minutes, 20-8.

It was now that the visitors started the long climb back. Led by 6'10 Jim Masker, who got key baskets in addition to blocking numerous UMass basket attempts, Dartmouth fought back to trail at halftime by only seven, 35-28.

The start of the second found UMass unable to connect on virtually any scoring tries as Dartmouth steadily chipped away at the lead and finally edged ahead for the first time, 42-41, with 12:53 to play.

Bettancourt kept the otherwise ineffective Little Redmen close with foul conversions and some fine outside shooting. However, with only 1:47 to play and Dartmouth leading by four, it seemed that the UMass frosh would disappoint a huge Cage crowd with their first loss.

However it was here that the frosh showed they had it in the clutch. Julius Erving hit a 15-foot jumper to bring UMass to within two at 1:33, and Bettancourt added a foul shot 25 seconds later to cut the deficit to one.

Dartmouth called a timeout and elected to try and freeze the ball. However, with 40 seconds left, Pagliara stole the ball and drove the length of the court for the score and the lead. The classy guard wasn't through with his heroics.

After Tom Austin blocked a Dartmouth shot, Pagliara was fouled with 28 seconds to go. He converted to give the hosts a two point 59-57 lead. The Indians came down with still a chance to tie the game, but Pagliara grabbed a rebound and, with 14 seconds to go, ended the Dartmouth upset hopes.

Bettancourt converted two last second free throws to give UMass a well-earned 61-57 win.

Boyden Steps Down From Trustee Chairmanship

Will Remain an "Active Board Member"

By RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Frank L. Boyden

BOSTON - In a University Board of Trustees meeting charged with sentiment Thursday, Frank L. Boyden of Deerfield announced his retirement as Chairman of that body, a position he has held for ten years.

The board broke into spontaneous applause following a short speech by Boyden in which he said "At times like this there are only two words you can say, and those words are thank you."

Boyden, who will celebrate his 90th birthday in September, will remain an active member of the Board of Trustees but said he felt it was time for a younger man to take over the responsibilities of Chairman.

One of America's foremost educators, he retired last Spring after serving for 66 years as Headmaster of Deerfield Academy, a school he came to in 1902 and built into one of the nation's leading boy's preparatory schools.

University President John W. Lederle honored Boyden with a statement read to the board. That statement reads:

"The contribution of Frank L. Boyden as member and chairman of this Board of Trustees spans the history of the University since it was a state college. He was first appointed by Governor Saltonstall in January of 1943. Except for a brief four-year period, he has served continuously ever since.

"The changes that have taken place during his tenure of service to date, and particularly during his chairmanship, have been truly fantastic. In 1942 -- the last year before his appointment- our enrollment was 1,410 and the annual state operating budget amounted only to $1,160,460. Before his first team as trustee had expired, we were no longer a State College, but a University.

"In the early fifties, during his second term, the University waged a successful fight to gain a measure of autonomy through enactment of the socalled Freedom Bill. This was one of the truly great turning points toward quality growth.

"By 1959, when he assumed the Acting Chairmanship, the University's enrollment stood at 6,131 and its budget as $9,532,629. He became Chairman in 1960.

"Under his leadership, there began a Great Decade of Progress. In 1962, the Autonomy Bill was passed. The Act was the single most important piece of legislation in our history. This was also the year of establishment of the Medical School. In 1964, a campus of the University of Massachusetts was authorized in Boston.

"From that time to the present, the University of Massachusetts has moved upward in quality and quantity until now it is taking its place in the nation among institutions of the first rank. This year, as Mr. Boyden leaves the chair, we have an enrollmeut of 20,111 and the state appropriated operating budget amounts to $41, 222,900. This is an almost unparalleled record of achievement in A merican higher education under the Board Chairmanship of one man.

"But beyond all of the accomplishments that shown on the record, I would like to add in behalf of each Trustee a personal note of deep appreciation for the brand of leadership Mr. Boyden has given to the Board simply because of the kind of man he is: rich in experience and wisdom, gentle, fair-

B.U. Drops 5 Course Load In College of Liberal Arts

By SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

Boston University's College of Liberal Arts (CLA) announced that it will move in the fall from a five-course to a four-course program, "the first large urban university in the nation to undertake this radical departure."

In substance, the change over means that a student at CLA, which has an enrollment of 4956 full-time students this year, will now take four courses, one of which will be a seminar of not more than 16 students, instead of the traditional five courses a semester.

"One of the prime motivating forces for the four-course plan is not four courses at all. It is to develop a system of seminars in which students may retrieve some of their lostness and may intensify their studies in an intimate and sharing situation," stated Dean Lee.

The seminars, meeting twice a week, will be supplemented by intensive outside work to balance the fewer classroom hours. Rather than being subject orientated, the seminars will deal with specific problems, such as urban affairs, war, and literature.

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has directed the Pentagon to work out a detailed plan of action for ending the draft when Vietnam expenditures can be reduced, the White House announced Thursday.

It was Nixon's initial step toward fulfillment of a campaign promise to seek an all volunteer military establishment.

The instructions sent to Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird were among 14 sets of directives Nixon dispatched Wednesday to eight government agencies seeking advice and recommendations on subjects ranging from interest rate ceilings to the future of the supersonic transport program.

The White House announcement said Laird "was advised of the President's conviction that an all volunteer armed force be established after the expenditures for Vietnam are substantially reduced, and was requested to plan a special commission to develop a detailed plan of action for ending the draft."

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon is "moving ahead on developing his thoughts and getting further recommendations" on his proposal that the Selective Service System eventually be eliminated.

The White House accouncement indicated a shift from the position Nixon took during his presidential campaign: "That when the war in Vietnam is over the draft should be ended."

Instead the White House spoke of moving to a volunteer armed force after Vietnam expenditures are substantially cut.

During the campaign, Nixon said the draft is not an efficient system for obtaining manpower in a time when conventional war is unlikely. He said if war comes in the future it is more likely to be guerrilla or a nuclear exchange.

Nixon said last Oct. 17 that the total cost of pay raises needed to attract an all volunteer army would be $5 billion to $7 billion a year, but he said this would be increasingly offset by savings due to a reduction in the turnover of military manpower.

Students Hold UChicago Building To Gain Teacher Hiring Power

CHICAGO (CPS-TELEX) - The University of Chicago's Administration building was occupied at noon yesterday by close to 200 students protesting the dismissal of a popular woman teacher.

The protesters are also demanding that students be given equal power with faculty on committees which make hiring, firing and tenure decisions.

Nearly 1200 students attended meetings Wednesday at which they decided to occupy the building the next day. They also decided to meet every 24 hours to determine the length of the occupation.

Besides reinstatement of sociologist Marlene Dixon, and 50-50 representation for students on faculty tenure committees, the students' conditions for ending their seige included a demand that all the secretaries and janitors whose work was interrupted by the sit-in be paid regular salaries.

A scant half-hour after the students marched into the building and sent the office workers home, the office of university president Edward Levi announced that the demonstration was "disruptive," and that participants were liable to disciplinary action. No one left the building.

Mrs. Dixon, over whom the dispute began, taught jointly in the department of sociology and the committee on human development, a graduate research agency of the university. Refusal by the sociology department chairman and faculty to approve her rehiring triggered anger among her students. Many accused the department of discriminating against her because of her sex or political beliefs. (Mrs. Dixon is a self-styled 'radical sociologist' and was one of a small group of faculty members who walked out of president Levi's inauguration ceremony last fall in symbolic protest.)

The students, who considered Mrs. Dixon an excellent teacher, told Levi they thought students should have equal say in such decisions about their professors.

Havana

(AP) - Prime Minister Fidel Castro charged Thursday that Cuban exiles in the United States were planning to sabotage Cuba's cattle industry with germ warfare. He said, "We hope above all that the Yankee bosses will prevent it."

Castro said his information came from a "counter revolutionary" who apparently is a prisoner after infiltrating into Cuba. He said the exiles planned "introduction of a disease in our cattle herds," but he did not elaborate.

Cuba has about 7 million head of beef cattle and gets badly needed foreign currency by exporting beef to Western Europe.

Sirhan

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Sirhan Bishara Sirhan and his mother will take the witness stand at his murder trial next Tuesday to testify about their finances, the defense said Thursday.

The judge then recessed the trial of the 24-year-old Jordanian, accused in the assassination last June of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy until 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Chief defense attorney Grant B. Cooper told a newsman he wants to prove Sirhan's "low economic standards." He contends Sirhan, "a poor man," was indicted by grand jurors of above average means, who don't represent a community cross-section, and that their murder indictment should be quashed.

In an effort to bolster his claim that grand-jury selection does not produce a community cross-section, Cooper called three Superior Court judges to the stand Thursday afternoon. All such judges are invited every September to nominate two persons for grand jury service the following year.

Shaw

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Prosecution and defense lawyers ran out of prospective jurors for the Clay Shaw trial Thursday, still lacking a 12th juror and two alternates after exhausting a record-breaking list of 687 persons in nine days.

Judge Edward A. Haggerty Jr. issued a special jury call and put process servers to work ringing doorbells and making telephone calls to round up 150 more veniremen. Fifty-nine prospects were excused Thursday.

Report Cites "Young People" As Major Makers of Violence

WASHINGTON (CPS-TELEX) - A preliminary report of the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence issued Friday said that young people provide the "thrust" of much of the group protest and collective violence in the ghetto, in the streets, and on the campuses.

"The key to much of the violence in our society seems to lie with the young", said the report which the Commission called "only tentative, a first look, and subject to revision."

The final report and recommendations are due in the spring after more investigation. "It may be.. with tomorrow's generation that much of the emphasis of our studies and the national response should lie," today's report said.

The observations about youth are among ten "Themes of Challenge" for Americans listed. Another takes note that "Violent protest today... has incurred in part because protesters believe they cannot make their demands felt effectively through normal, approved channels and that 'The System', for whatever reasons, has become unresponsive to them."

The report also mentioned "Complications" that arise from the "high visibility" of violence and social inequities through the mass media. Media impact may "aggravate" problems of controlling violence but media can also be "useful social agents... that may help to reduce levels of violence."

The Violence Commission was established last June by President Johnson "to undertake a penetrating search" for the causes and prevention of disorder. Under Chairman Milton Eisenhower, the Commission set up task forces to study historical and comparative perspectives, individual acts of violence, assasinations, firearms, mass media, law enforcement, and group violence.

The Commission will also study recent unrest among black students. Noting now that until a few years ago the extremely small minority of black students tended to be individualistic and mostly politically inactive. "The black power movement, however, coupled with substantial increases in the number of black students, some (of them) a vehicle for giving collective expression of their particular grievances" and identification with the overall black community.

minded and broad-gauged. It is within the expression of these qualities that he has shaped our forward progress and, at the same time, endeared himself to all of us: students, faculty, administrators and trustees alike.

"After such a long and distinguished watch at the helm, we cannot fault him for relinquishing the rudder. Fortunately, he will still be aboard as a most highly valued member of the crew. And so, we express our deep and lasting gratitude not only for his achievements, but also for just being himself.

"We are encouraged to know that his loyal and devoted service is not at an end. We look forward keenly to the great contributions he will make from this time forward as still new chapters are written in his record as one of America's greatest all-time figures on the educational scene."

As President Lederle stated, Dr. Boyden's service will not end with his stepping down from the Chair.

University Secretary Robert McCartney said Thursday night that Boyden is "intensely interested in the University" and hopes to move onto the Board's Government and University Relations Committee. In this capacity Boyden would serve as a prime spokesman for the University on Beacon Hill.

Boyden's vitality and energy are legend in Deerfield.

San Francisco State Strikers Vow Return in Spring Semester

SAN FRANCISCO (CPS-TELEX) - Student strikers at San Francisco State College held their final protest demonstration of the fall semester Thursday and said they will be back when classes begin again in February to make sure "the school will not function normally until our demands are met."

The strikers decided not to enter the central campus Thursday, despite indications that they might hold a rally similar to the one which resulted in 454 arrests a week ago.

Instead, about 1,000 persons picketed or stood at the main campus entrance for about four hours. Leaders of the Third World Liberation Front then announced they were "declaring today a tactical victory." "We've surrounded the police," said front leader Roger Alvarado, referring to about 200 police who massed on the central campus anticipating a rally.

Shortly after the students' victory announcement, the pickets began to leave the campus, moving out onto the street. That tied up traffic and police on foot and horseback began advancing toward the demonstrators, moving them up the street.

Several bottles and rocks were thrown at the police, who chased the students several blocks until they finally dispersed.

There were five arrests during the day, three during the chase and two earlier on campus, one on previous charges, the other for obscenity.

The strike leaders said they considered the day a victory because so many people picketed despite a Wednesday court order banning more than five persons from picketing at any one place. Black student union leader Bridges Randall said "It should be made clear that we were not cowed by the reactionary forces."

Besides the court order, Acting President S. I. Hayakawa has said anyone arrested from now on who had previously been arrested for campus disruptions will be temporarily suspended.

One strike leader said the students decided not to hold a rally on the campus because "it was a trap. There would be mass arrests or mass beatings and we decided we could accomplish just as much out here." He said the decision not to go on the campus was made Thursday morning after strike leaders saw the large number of police.

Police were also called to the Berkeley Campus of the University of California Thursday as about 2,000 persons marched around and through buildings chanting "On strike, shut it down."

The 2,000 students then began their march, moving around the plaza in front of Sproul Hall and through several buildings. Police returned to the campus at about 2:40 to form another corridor at Sather Gate but shortly after that the student marchers left to attend a strike meeting.

The Berkeley strikers are demanding creation of a college of ethnic studies, hiring of more non-white university employees at all levels, and admission of more non-white students.

Student Survey Finds Open House Enforcement Weak

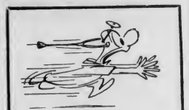
In light of this year's changes in the UMass open house program, a recent survey examined dormitory visiting on other New England campuses.

The survey was conducted by Drew B. Stergis, a junior, who completed the study as a project in advanced expository writing.

Information for the report came from the student government presidents of the universities of Connecticut, Maine, Rhode Island, and Vermont. Data on UMass program came from the research completed by Mr. Stergis for an article appearing in the January issue of seventeen magazine.

The study noted that in all of the colleges considered, the administrations set up guidelines for open house policies. But the amount of administrative control varies among the colleges.

The administrations of the universities of Rhode Island and Maine exercise strong control over open house procedures. The control is moderate at Vermont and weak at Connecticut, according to the student leaders.



Mr. Stergis said that administrative control is also weak at UMass. Under the current program, the students must submit proposals for administrative approval, but open houses are allowed every day and night.

Next, the study looked at the degree to which open house policies are enforced. Corresponding to the findings on administrative control, enforcement is strong at the universities of Rhode Island and Maine, moderate at the University of Vermont, and weak at Connecticut.

Enforcement is also weak at UMass, Mr. Stergis said. Dormitory counselors oversee the program, but, since the dormitories are "open" so much of the time, strict enforcement is not necessary.

According to the student presidents, stricter policies exist for women than for men at the universities of Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Vermont. Policies are the same for men's and women's dormitories at the universities of Maine and Massachusetts.

The last item in the study showed that student objection to existing open house policies is high at Rhode Island, moderate at Maine, and low at Vermont and Connecticut.

SIGMA PHI EPSILON

Sig Ep has grown tremendously since its founding in 1902, becoming the second largest national fraternity (164 chapters) and one of the largest on this campus. Size, however, proves nothing. It is the nature of the brotherhood that is the fraternity.

Of course Sig Ep has its campus leaders, honor students, and our athletes, but again this is not the true measure of a house. Sig Ep is a place where ideas and individuals are respected, where mature men, live work and, play, and where those who will not be stifled by a system belong.

Sigma Phi Epsilon often takes the lead in promoting new concepts for the improvement of the house, the fraternity system, and the University. The concept of houseparents rather than a housemother was tried first at Sig Ep. Our new, more progressive ideas about rush and pledging distinguish us from the rest of the Greek system.

As a freshman, and intelligent individual student, why not come down and see what Sig Ep can offer you.

America's migration from farm to city is giving the nation a second chance to work out a rational conservation and land use program.

This is one of the conclusions reached in a study of the disappearing U. S. rural population by migration research specialist Everett S. Lee of UMass. Dr. Lee, head of the UMass sociology department, did the study for the Center for Information on America with the help of UMass research assistant Jane Mervine.

A major conclusion is that much of the land being deserted by farm people in their rush to the cities is now available for development as green space and recreation areas to help make life more bearable for those in the cities.

Detailing the migration, Dr. Lee points out that in an era where nearly every other sector of American population has been on the increase, the U. S. farm population has been dwindling at the rate of from 5 to 6 per cent a year. In the 1930's it was about 32 million; today it is scarcely 10 million, a loss of more than two-thirds in little more than three decades.

Major causes are mechanized farming and improvements in soil fertility and genetics, the UMass sociologist notes. Since World War II farm output per man hour has been increasing by about 5 per cent per year and thus doubles every fourteen years.

Dr. Lee feels that this movement from the farm is forcing profound changes in the economic and social life of America. A major effect is "the return to nature of a significant part of the countryside," he writes.

He quotes one study that found the proportion of land in woods on the rise in almost all of the U.S. east of the Mississippi.

"Let Us Now Praise Famous Men"

THIS is the beginning line of a hymn sung countless times by thousands of Deerfield boys at the weekly Sunday night "Sings" presided over by Frank L. Boyden during his sixty-six years as headmaster of Deerfield Academy. The DAILY COLLEGIAN today joins in that chorus of praise as we note with a certain sadness the resignation of Dr. Boyden as Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees.

During those sixty-six years he transformed a moribund, 14-student country school into one of America's finest boys preparatory schools. In the process, not only did he build a fine school, he also built men. Today, Mr. Boyden's boys rank among the leaders of all fields of American life, from business to medicine, politics to entertainment, industry to the arts. He is still affectionately known to many governors, Cabinet officers and civic leaders as "the Head." Educators across the nation regard him as the un-disputed dean of American headmasters.

One of the ironic twists of Dr. Boyden's career is that he only intended to remain at Deerfield long enough to earn money to go to law school and thence into politics. His instincts as an educator were challenged, and his stay lasted longer than anticipated. The whole field of education has benefitted from his extended sojourn, as Deerfield -- and Boyden -- went on to turn out fine educators at every level from grade school teachers through headmasters and on to college presidents. He was helped in no small way by a native Deerfielder, the former Helen Childs, whom he married in 1907. She joined Deerfield's faculty in 1904 and did not retire until her husband did. When Smith College, her alma mater, awarded her an honorary L.H.D. degree recently, the citation read in part: "...who with some small help from her husband, built a great school."

Honorary degrees run in the family, it seems. Mrs. Boyden has received several herself and her husband has received twenty-five at last count. He received one from Yale in 1926 which praised him for "research into the hearts and minds of boys." He has received congratulations on some anniversary or other from each of the last four presidents of the United States. On May 10, 1967 he was honored at a White House luncheon given by President Lyndon B. Johnson. The President's citation read:

"The President of the United States of America awards this commednation to Frank Learoyd Boyden for distinguished service to the nation. As headmaster of Deerfield Academy, he has enriched the minds, guided the spirits, and uplifted the aspirations of several generations of young Americans. Through his achievements, his kindly wisdom and his commitment to human welfare, he has encouraged standards of excellence which have enabled America's secondary schools to become a continuing source of vitality in American education and quality in American life.

But Deerfield alone cannot claim Mr. Boyden's energies nor boast his talents, for he has served to date for twenty-two years as a member of the University's Board of Trustees. In 1959 he assumed the Acting Chairmanship of the Board, and he became Chairman in 1960. As President Lederle noted in his statement before the Board in Boston yesterday: "The changes that have taken place during his tenure of service to date, and particularly during his chairmanship, have been truly fantastic."

The President went on to note that in 1942, the year before Mr. Boyden's appointment, the State College had 1410 students and a budget of roughly one million dollars. By the time his first term expired, the State College had become the University. The growth continued at an accelerating pace up to the present. By 1959, there were six thousand students and a budget of $9.5 million. President Lederle says: "Under his leadership, there began a Great Decade of Progress." Fiscal autonomy, authorization of the Medical School, UMass-Boston, Twenty thousand students. This year's budget of over $41 million. "This is an almost unparalleled record of achievement in American higher education under the Board Chairmanship of one man."

But it is not merely a quantitative record that we are lauding today. For throughout his career in education, Mr. Boyden has insisted on quality over quantity. It is this insistence on quality that made Deerfield the outstanding pren school that it is today. Without Boyden, if it had survived at all, it could -- and probably would -- have become just another in the swelling ranks of mediocre secondary schools.

So too at the University has the Boyden insistence on quality made itself felt. It is just now beginning to be noticed. The world's finest architects design our growing campus. Thanks to competitive salaries achieved through the fiscal autonomy bill of 1962, the University is able to attract and retain outstanding intellects on its faculty. No one can deny that substantive progress has been made under his leadership, both qualitatively and quantitatively. We are fortunate in having him continue as a member of the Board, though no longer its Chairman.

But it is not so much the record we are praising as the essence of the man himself. His almost singleminded devotion to his schools. His wisdom. His kindness. His selflessness. His Yankee ingenuity and the Yankee twang. The cordial smile and extended hand when he sees an "old boy." The clap of his hands that can silence five hundred voices instantly. The wry wit. The quick anecdote. The vast experience of vast years. All this, . . and so much more.

For twenty-two years the University has benefitted by this vast experience. We thank him for it. And we sincerely hope we can enjoy its benefits for another decade or two.

INSIDE REPORT

Reappraising the ABM

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - Under prodding from a handful of Capitol Hill Republicans led by Sen. Charles H. Percy of Illinois, the Nixon administration is beginning an agonizing reappraisal of the Sentinel anti-ballistic missile (ABM) so extravagantly praised by President Nixon during the past campaign.

Although those campaign statements seemingly point to a secure future for the Sentinel, the project today is in some danger. Deputy Secretary of Defense David Packard has now begun a probing inquiry into all aspects of the ABM question.

Indeed, there is some possibility that this inquiry could lead to a shelving of the $5 billion program for deploying the Sentinel by 1971 and substitute instead a more modest and more general research and development program for a future ABM.

The reasons that this strange possibility exists are twofold: first Sen. Percy is mounting an anti-ABM campaign that could have considerably more impact on the Nixon administration than did complaints of Democratic doves on President Johnson; second, there are deep reservations about the Sentinel among key Nixon officials, including Secretary of Defense Milvin R. Laird himself.

Percy has poured his formidable energies into lobbying against the ABM, both in the Senate and the Administration, ever since the election. Besides buttonholing fellow Senators at every opportunity, Percy has presented his arguments to Packard and Lee DuBridge, Mr. Nixon's science advisor, and will meet again with Packard.

Percy is operating in a Capitol Hill atmosphere considerably less friendly to the ABM than it was during last autumn's defense appropriations debate when anti-Soviet sentiment was high because of the Czechoslovakian invasion.

Moreover, a few Democrats were skeptical about the Sentinel last year but voted for it anyway after President Johnson pleaded with them for something to bargain over with the Russians. Now, one or two may switch against it. Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma, the new Democratic National Chairman, is one such probable convert.

On the Republican side, the batch of moderate Republicans elected Nov. 5 are generally lukewarm about ABM spending. For instance, Sen. Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, named as a freshman to the Senate Armed Services Committee, mixes skepticism with that committee's traditional passion for new military hardware. As of now, Schweiker favors research spending but opposes deployment of the Sentinel.

Anti-ABM sentiment in the Senate is bound to be fanned this spring when the Armed Services Committee hears a parade of scientists testify against the effectiveness of the ABM--a highly unusual procedure just agreed to by Sen. John Stennis of Mississippi, the committee's new chairman (and a strong ABM advocate).

But no amount of Percy lobbying or scientific testimony is likely to actually defeat Sentinel appropriations in either house of Congress. Thus, the anti-ABM bloc on Capitol Hill really wants to influence the Pentagon's decision, nourishing seeds of doubt that already exist there.

Laird is a doubter. Although he does not share Percy's opposition to ABM systems in general, Laird as a Congressman felt then Secretary Robert S. McNamara blundered in approving deployment of the scientifically questionable Sentinel -- a "thin" coverage system-- as an alternative to the much more expensive full system. Rather than deploy an obsolescent system, Laird felt, research funds--small for now--should be appropriated for a more advanced full system.

Furthermore, one of the few high Pentagon officials reappointed by Laird is research chief John Foster, a pronounced skeptic about the ABM's value. In the White House itself, science advisor DuBridge is known to be something less than exthusiastic about the Sentinel.

Nevertheless, the odds remain on the side of the Sentinel. Lobbying pressures are such that a military weapons system once begun is seldom suspended. In addition, there is still validity in President Johnson's argument that plans for deployment of the Sentinel should be carried into future negotiations with the Soviets.

And Mr. Nixon's campaign utterances haunt the current reappraisal in the Pentagon. When the Senate first authorized deployment of the Sentinel last year, candidate Nixon called it "a major step toward candor and clarity."

To accept Percy's arguments and Laird's doubts, the President would have to eat those campaign words.

Iraq Executions Pressure Israel Reprisal

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel denied its jets attacked Iraqi troops in Jordan Thursday, but authorities in Tel Aviv were reported under mounting pressure to strike back if any more Jews are hanged as spies by the Baghdad regime.

Tension in the volatile Middle East increased after Baghdad radio broadcast a communique charging that seven Israeli planes struck at Iraqi units Thursday east of the cease-fire line with Jordan.

"Our antiaircraft guns shot down one attacking plane," the communique said. "It was seen with the naked eye crashing in flames over the occupied Syrian Golan Heights. There were no Iraqi casualties."

Newsmen on Israel's side of the line said they saw no sign of any unusual air activity.

The new charges came in the wake of Iraqi claims that Israel was massing troops to attack 20,000 Iraqi troops, stationed in Jordan since the June 1967 war, as a reprisal for the hanging Monday of 14 Iraqis, 9 of them Jews, convicted of spying in Baghdad and Basra.

Israel also denied that charge. Its defense minister warned Israelis to do nothing that would give Iraq an excuse to act against Iraqi Jews.

A wave of indignation over the spy executions in Iraq has swept Israel and caused reverberations in the United States and several European countries.

Israel has appealed to world opinion to prevent any more such executions and pressure on Prime Minister Levi Eshkel's government to save Iraq's Jewish colony was reported growing.

Survey Shows Freshman With Low Income and High Goals

Amherst, Mass. - Compared to their counterparts at other U. S. universities, this year's freshmen at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst tend to reflect a lower income background but at the same time tend to have higher aspirations toward post-graduate education, a national survey indicates.

The survey is the annual National Norms for Entering Freshmen compiled by the office of research of the American Council on Education.

In the income bracket area, for example, the survey showed that nationally, 60.5 per cent of this year's freshmen are from homes where the annual income is $10,000 and above. At UMass, the corresponding percentage is only 50.2. At the same time, the survey shows that nationally only 19.6 per cent of freshmen come from homes where the father is a skilled, semi-skilled or unskilled worker. At UMass, the figure is 26.1 per cent.

The study indicates UMass freshmen are more likely to pay their own way in college. Parental or family aid was listed as the main source of financial support during the freshman year by 60.9 per cent of those quizzed nationally, the corresponding figure for UMass was 56 per cent. Nationally, 23.9 per cent listed personal savings or earnings as their main support source as freshman; at UMass the percentage was 29.9.

The section on future educational plans revealed that 47.4 per cent of those surveyed nationally plan post - graduate study while at UMass the figure is over 10 points higher--57.9 per cent.

T. V. Proposed To Unify Campus

Instructional television offers students and teachers a different and new opportunity to couple the learning experience with personal involvement and immediacy.

Professor John Shepherd, director Division of Broadcast Services and Televised Instruction at the University of Oregon, is a consultant to the University for this year to study the potentials of a TV and broadcast system at UMass.

In a Collegian interview, Shepherd said, "The University of Massachusetts is rapidly changing from a small coordinating social system to a highly complex, relatively sophisticated city-state. People begin to sense this and fall out, particularly in a University as it grows.

Television can get around the problems of alienation if the University develops an effective communication system.

One of the potential uses of such an electronics system could be within the residential houses. Shepherd said, that, for example, if a student goes to a campus event and returns with the natural inclination to talk with others, most students are not interested in discussing something they weren't involved in. A dormitory TV system could broadcast or tape films discussions, guest speakers and performances and provide a means of "sharing" by supplementing and complementing the classroom experience within an informal environment.

Several UMass professors and students have authored books and articles recently published by the University of Massachusetts Press and other publishers.

PAPER WALLS: AMERICA AND THE REFUGEE CRISIS 1938-1941, an authoritative account of America's response to refugees from Nazism by historian David S. Wyman, shows that anti-Semitism, nativism, fear of Nazi subversives and unemployment closed the eyes of the American people, and the gates of their country to thousands of European refugees during this crucial period. By avoiding the familiar, simplistic condemnations of FDR, the State Department, and Congress, and by assessing the political and social realities in depth, Mr. Wyman makes clear that American immigration policy from 1938 to 1941 was no better and no worse than what the majority of the American people wanted.

A member of the history department at UMass, David Wyman received his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1966. He is presently at work on a second volume which will carry the history of America's response to refugees through World War II.

THE FACT OF FALL, a new collection of poetry by Stanley Koehler, was published by the UMass Press.

The poems collected in this volume show a poet in love with people and things. Part 1, which features the title poem, "The Fact of Fall,' includes "A Service for William Carlos Williams," and "Lines for a girl walking." Part II of the volume includes "From the Charing Cross,' and "The melons: Agropoli." The third part, titled, "Neutral Tones," features "Lists," "Your desk, by the window," and "A picture of herself."

A professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, Stanley Koehler has published poems in various journals, and is a co-author of A CURIOUS QUIRE (University of Massachusetts Press, reprint 1967). Mr. Koehler spends his summers as Director of the Chautauqua Writers' Workshop in Chautauqua, New York, and his winters as poetry editor of The Massachusetts Review, and as a teacher. Mr. Koehler lives in Amherst, Massachusetts with his wife, three daughters and two sons.

CULTURE AND CHANGE IN INDIA: THE BARPALI EXPERIMENT, is a study by Thomas M. Fraser, Jr. of a controversial community development project. The Barpali Project, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee in the Orissa region of India, was an experiment in modernizing a non-Western society through a series of change programs based on felt need, and self help.

A member of the anthropology department at UMass, Mr. Fraser is the author of RUSEMBILAN, A MALAY FISHING VILLAGE IN SOUTHERN THAILAND (Cornell University Press, 1960), and FISHERMEN OF SOUTH THAILAND (Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1966). He has served as a consultant to the U.S. Operations Mission in Thailand, and to the Agency for International Development. Mr. Fraser is presently doing field work in St. Vincent, West Indies.

The dramatic history of the struggles of New York City's unskilled immigrant workers to achieve union recognition is the subject of a new publication WHEN WORKERS ORGANIZE: NEW YORK CITY IN THE PROGRESSIVE ERA by Melvyn Dubofsky, published December 30 by the University of Massachusetts Press.

A native of New York City, Melvyn Dubofsky is a member of the history department at UMass and the author of a forthcoming history of the Industrial Workers of the World, as well as numerous scholarly articles on labor history.

Poems by two UMass undergraduates appear in the second edition of "Alkahest-American College Poetry," published this month by the Wesleyan University Press.

Two poems by P. R. Hallock, of Gardner, and one by Larry Mazel, of Andover, were selected for this issue from 1,384 poems submitted by 424 undergraduate poets from Maine to California. The magazine contains 51 poems by 37 poets.

Professor John H. Noyes of the UMass department of forestry and wildlife management, has prepared a directory of selected natural resource and associated planning agencies in Massachusetts.

"The Massachusetts Natural Resource Agency Directory," issued by the Cooperative Extension Service of UMass in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture, lists 41 selected agencies that are concerned with solving resource and planning problems.

The 58-page directory contains a problem-oriented index with agencies listed for reference purposes. The agency and organization listings are separated into those programs that involve broad implications for Massachusetts and those of a more specialized nature.

With each listing of agencies, is a brief statement of the purpose of the agency, a detailed listing of activities and appropriate addresses.

Copies may be obtained by writing Professor John H. Noyes, Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management, Holdsworth Natural Resource Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass.,

Seasoned Cast Highlights First Theatre Group Effort

BY RAY TAYLOR
Fine Arts Editor

The impending Roister Doisters production of A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS will feature many experienced and well-known actors at UMass.

In the leading role of Sir Thomas More featured is James Sargent a senior Communications major. He has appeared in many previous plays both for University Theatre and for R.D. Among these are, THE MARTYRED, THE BIG PARADE, and R.D.'s ONE ACT PLAYS of a few years back. Mr. Sargent speaks of Sir Thomas More as being a man of "monumental integrity with singular intellectual capacities. He is his mind." The part of More's wife will be played by Kathleen Atkinson, a senior English major. Miss Atkinson has had leading roles in two former R.D. productions, TOM JONES and BAREFOOT IN THE PARK, and appeared in the U.T. production of ONE WAY PENDULUM. She is also an undergraduate teaching assistant.

David Zucker, appearing in the role of Thomas Cromwell is a popular figure in UMass theatre. He can be remembered for his recent performances of the villian DeFlores in THE CHANGELING, and Moe Axlerod in AWAKE AND SING. Other plays in which he has appeared are MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT and BAREFOOT IN THE PARK. Mr. Zucker was also assistant director for TOM JONES, two years ago.

The part of Norfold will be played by Mike Walker, a junior transfer from the University of South Carolina. Mike is a member of Alpha Psi Omega national honor dramatic fraternity. His previous roles have included Mr. Smith in THE BALD SOPRANO, Diesel in WEST SIDE STORY, and Sky Masterson in GUYS AND DOLLS. Here he can be remembered for THE CHANGELING in which he played Vermandero. Mike is also highly skilled in technical theatre, having worked on lighting and construction for three years.

Robert Rotenberg will be seen in the role of Richard Rich. Robert finds this role easy to identify with for the college student for Rich is a young man searching for direction in life. Mr. Rotenberg recently directed a play at Holyoke Community College. He has worked on makeup for several productions and his roles include Landolph in ENRICO IV and Gower in HENRY V.

The Common Man will be played by Joseph Wilkins, a sophomore theatre major who has appeared in many productions on campus including HENRY V, in which he played the Constable of France and MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT. Last summer he appeared with the UMass Summer Repertory Company.

More's young daughter Margaret is played by Vere Drakeford a graduate student from Australia. Miss Drakeford completed her undergraduate work in her native country and in Canada. She has taught speech and drama on the high school level and is now seeking her M.A. in theatre. Miss Drakeford was the assistant director for the Childrens theatre production of RUMPLESTILTSKIN.

Waiting in Lines, Day after Day

BY BOB MANGIARATTI
Staff Reporter

Last Wednesday I went through that bi-annual ordeal known as course change day. According to my I.D. number I was scheduled to start at 8:30 a.m. in the main gym.

To my dismay at 8:30 sharp I found four to five thousand students packed into the stairways leading into Boyden gym.

Three and a half hours and four flights of stairs later I caught a glimpse of the entrance where a young man was carefully checking I.D. numbers. When I finally reached him he asked me why I wasn't there at the time designated for my I.D. number. He said he would let me in late only because he had a kind heart.

My next task was to get two add and two drop cards which of course would require another brief wait in line. Twenty-three minutes later I reached a table where two men were drinking coffee and talking to one another. They were talking about some guy named Smith and a hangover which was preventing him from helping them this morning.

I waited awhile and then said to one of them, "ahem, could I please have two of each?"

"Two of what?", he said.

"You know, add and drop cards.'

"Oh yea, sure . . . two you say . . ."

I received my cards and went to the economics table to add a course. Upon seeing the line I was tempted to take Chinese instead, where there was no line at all. I didn't though, figuring that my wise old advisor would not like the idea.

While waiting in line I met a girl I knew from last semester. She told me how she had sneaked up to the gym through the boys locker room and avoided the long line at the main entrance. I praised her for her ingenuity and said I would try it next year.

I finally made it to the economics table. It was very cluttered and staffed with one well dressed man who had a doughnut in one hand and a pencil with a broken point in the other.

I was about to say something when a lovely young lady on crutches hobbled in front of me.

She said, "You don't mind do you? My leg is too sore to wait in lines."

What could I say? She then stepped up and asked if she could drop Eco. 298 and add 125 with a discussion on Mondays at 1:25. The man said he was sorry but the only opening left was a special section meeting at 7:30 Saturday morning. She indignantly said no thanks, took her crutches, put them over her shoulder and marched towards Sociology.

Just then the man said, "Oh my gosh, its 1:15, I was supposed to be at lunch fifteen minutes ago. I'll see you later, kid.'

"But sir, I've been waiting in line . . .

Trustees Appoint Bromory Head Geology Department Immediately

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has named Dr. Randolph W. Bromery professor and head of the geology department.

Dr. Bromery, associate professor of geology at UMass since 1967, fills a post left vacant by Dr. H.T.U. Smith, department head since 1956, who will remain in the department and devote full time to research and teaching.

A graduate of Howard University Dr. Bromery holds an M.S. degree from American University and a Ph.D. from John Hopkins University. For 19 years beginning in 1948, he served as an exploration geophysicist with the Branch of Regional Geophysics of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Much of this service was supervision and conducting of low-level aeromagnetic and airborne radioactivity surveys along flight traverses totaling more than 750,000 miles in many parts of the U.S., Puerto Rico and Alaska, including parts of the Arctic Ocean.

He served as Branch of Regional Geophysics chief of data processing and as project chief on airborne survey projects in several areas of the U.S. until 1962, when he became chief of the New England and Eastern States Geophysical Program. In 1965, he was named branch chief-representative of the Branch of Regional Geophysics, Washington, D.C. office.

Dr. Bromery was a lecturer in Geophysics at Howard University and since 1966 has been U.S. Geological geophysical consultant through the U.S. AID program to the west African country of Liberia, where he directed airborne survey work. He is now a consultant to the U.S. Geological Survey, the state of Connecticut and the United Nations.

He received a Special Service Award from the U.S. Geological Survey in 1967 for work performed while acting as geophysical consultant for the Northeast Corridor Program. His publications include approximately 136 Geophysical Investigation Reports, bulletins and professional papers.

At the University he helped found and is now president of CCEBS, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students. The group helps black students and others with college potential to overcome financial and academic barriers to University careers.

UMass Grads Gain Peace Corps Vista Positions

Two UMass graduates have received Peace Corps assignments and two others have begun their VISTA volunteer service.

Richard A. Stevens, an Amherst native who holds a B.S. in physical education from UMass, is working in Costa Rica, training future physical education teachers.

Daniel J. Nolan, a 1968 UMass graduate with a degree in forestry, has been assigned to Paraguay. His duties will range from working with rural youth groups and teaching agricultural techniques to working in cooperatives, recreation, literacy, health education, and sanitation.

Another Amherst resident, Bruce W. King, will work with the Ozark Area Community action Commission in Springfield, Missouri for one year as a VISTA volunteer. King will be involved in recreation and cultural programs, as well as adult basic education and tutoring. He received a degree in psychology from UMass in 1968.

Volunteer J. Gans, who studied history at UMass was assigned to Warrenton, Virginia, with the Fauquier County Community Action Committee. Her activities as a VISTA worker will include assisting in recreation programs, organizing job recruitment and referral programs, and planning activities with the neighborhood center staff.

Machiasport Decision Due Next Week

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration indicated Thursday that an initial decision on the proposal for establishing an oil refinery at Machiasport, Maine, may be made next week.

New England members of Congress called the news very encouraging.

Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., conveyed a message from Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans that the action unit of the Foreign Trade Zones Board would meet "next Wednesday and hopes to reach a final decision at that time if possible." The trade board is considering Maine's application for establishing a foreign trade zone at Portland and a subzone at Machiasport, where Occidental Petroleum Corp. wants to build a 300,000-barrel-a-day refinery that would produce home-heating oil and gasoline for New England.

The first decision rests with the board's committee of alternates. The board is composed of the secretaries of Treasury, Commerce and Army. The committee is made up of assistant secretaries in the three departments.

Stans promised prompt action by the board after the committee makes its decision. He is chairman of the board. Noting that the committee of alternates met Wednesday on the Machiasport matter, Aiken commented in an interview: "I think they are really taking us seriously. There has been no attempt at stalling."

"This is the first encouraging thing that's happened on the Machiasport application," he said.

Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., said he was very encouraged by Stans' action.

"It indicates he intends to give it priority,' McIntyre said.

New England members of Congress had hoped for a decision on the Machiasport project during the Johnson administration and were angered when it did not come.

New England boosters say the Machiasport refinery would end the area's winter shortages of fuel oil and would reduce oil and gas prices by about 10 per cent.

Carefull Planning Needed To Check Population Problems

NORTHAMPTON, Mass - Space mission-like planning must be used to safeguard man's environment, believes a participant in a recent Smith College symposium on "The Impact of Human Expansion.'

Overpopulation, limited food supply, and air and water pollution were seen as the major roads to environmental disaster by the participants.

Speaking of a recent Apollo space flight, psychologist Dr. James Archer of the University of Chicago said: "Surely someone would have objected if one of the astronauts had decided to take his son along just for the ride.

"Obviously that life support system had to provide food, water and oxygen for as many man days as required by the duration of the mission. It should be equally obvious that the system had to provide for appropriate capturing and storage of waste products for the same man day duration.

"Yet, our earth is a space ship and every day we sneak a few thousand passengers on board and tax our life support system in unknown ways to unknown degrees and those decisions are probably irresponsible."

A strong advocate of birth control, Professor Archer believes we should be "concerned about the deterioration of our environment which will occur when our life support system is inadequate because we have more people than food, more people than our waste disposal systems can handle, more people than our wilderness areas can absorb and still be wilderness, and more people than our cities can support without becoming animal colonies.

"How curiously quaint we are," observed Archer, "when we wave legal responsibility for flood damages, for example, by calling them an act of God. We strip our watersheds of plant growth, build houses at the mouth of canyons, erect our cities on known flood plains, and pass the buck when we get wet. It seems equally quaint to describe a human pregnancy, especially if it is unplanned, as an act of God.'

The UMass football coaching staff has announced the forming of evening weight training sessions, open to any student. The classes will be conducted in the Boyden Building and any student interested in the program is invited to sign up at any time in the football office at Boyden.

UMass Publishes Bibliography

The UMass Bureau of Government Research has announced publication of A Selected Bibliography On Massachusetts Politics and Government, compiled by George Goodwin, Jr., chairman of the department of politics at UMass-Boston.

The 34-page publication is one of a series of basic source books in state and local government issued by the bureau. It lists over 300 works under six headings: history, biography, the demographic setting, state government and politics, local government and politics and publications recording the work of the state government.

Dr. Goodwin sees the publication as being of great use not only to students, but also to teachers, associations and librarians. This publication will serve as a guide for those writing in fields related to those included in the bibliography and also will encourage reading about Massachusetts government.

Crew Team Works Out For Spring Competition

For many sports-minded people, winter is reserved for basketball, hockey and for the outdoor stalwarts, skiing. But in the basement of Memorial Hall, the crew team is going through their paces six days a week with their eyes turned to the spring and crew competition.

The varsity crew program, under the direction of Coach Mike Faherty, is in full swing for the winter months. Monday, Wednesday and Friday, a rigorous program of weight lifting for an hour and 10 minutes, plus running in the stadium for 20 minutes.

Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, the team runs for two and a half miles and spends 20 minutes on the tank, a simulated rowing exercise.

The team is also concentrating on basically six weight lifting exercises. Heavy weights are being used to increase body weight, while more repetitive movements are being utilized in conditioning. Cromwells and rope jumping serve to strengthen leg muscles, while presses and power lifts are directed at back and shoulder development.

The pace will be kept up until March when the team goes on the water with the exception of final exams.

The freshmen are following basically the same schedule with practices Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Kurt Betchich succeeded Faherty as frosh coach this year. Betchich rowed three years in high school at Belville, N.J., and two years at UMass. At UMass he stroked the frosh and jayvee boats and was captain of the frosh team.

Coach Betchick is looking for a few more rowers to supplement his good frosh nucleus. According to Faherty, there is a possibility of having two frosh boats.

The schedule for this spring has not been finalized yet. There will be three home meets, starting with Temple. The first cup regatta will be held at UMass May 3, with competition between the Redmen, Williams, Holy Cross, URI and the University of Virginia. A permanent trophy will be awarded to the winner.

The team will also be racing in the Kerr Cup Regatta and the Dad Vail in Philadelphia. The Harborow Regatta will be held in April with such schools as Wesleyan and WPI competing. The club has also scheduled Notre Dame for a home meet April 9. The spring vacation will terminate with a controlled scrimmage with Boston University.

Of the 25 upperclassmen on the varsity and the junior varsity crew teams, there are two seniors, eight juniors and 15 sophomores. A new shell is due to arrive in March along with shovel blades which are new to UMass.

The All Yankee Conference teams have been named. UMass placed two members on the football first team, defensive back Bill Frye, a 5'9 senior from Turtle Creek, Pa., and Tom York, a 6'1 junior from Bedminster, N.J. York will also be the co-captain of the 1969-70 Redmen.

UMass will have two men in both the open 50-yard dash and 45-yard hurdles. In the dash, Walter Mayo and Dave Marble will compete for the Redmen. Marble has already seen action in the K of C meet while this is Mayo's first race of the season. In the hurdles, Marc Lefever and Gerry Spellman will go for the Redmen. Both hurdled in the K of C meet of January 11.

Coach O'Brien feels "The performances will be better than in the K of C meet. In the two mile relay the experience gained by Donaldson and Wayne in the relay two weeks ago and the addition of the recouperating Hoss will hopefully overcome the loss of Evans."

"In the mile relay," said O'Brien, "I hope the arrival of Hasselbaum will decrease our time of 3:31.2. One of the toughest mile relay teams in New England, Tufts, who has run 3:25, will be in our heat.

Grapplers To Meet Central Connecticut

The UMass wrestling youth movement will be most graphically shown tomorrow when the Redman grapplers will send out an all sophomore lineup against Central Connecticut. The freshman wrestlers will also travel to New Britain for a meet.

Central Connecticut is only in its second year as a varsity wrestling team, but the home squad has made great strides in those two years and have to be rated a favorite over the younger Redmen.

Another reason for Central Connecticut's favorite role is that this is the first meet for UMass in about a month and a half. The Redmen, according to Coach Homer Barr, are "not in good shape at all after the layoff," Barr added, "We will not be at our best because of the layoff. This isn't an excuse, just reality."

Easily the outstanding Central Connecticut wrestler is 145 pounder Harry Marchetti. Marchetti is a transfer from perennial NCAA wrestlering power Oklahoma and is the defending New England champion in his weight division. Marchetti was also voted the outstanding performer in last year's New England Championships.

Three other wrestlers, in addition to Marchetti, are unbeaten for Central Connecticut this season. They are 152 pounder Peter Browne, Dave Detrich in the 160-pound class and Gary Rosenthal in the 137 division.

Central Connecticut was fifth in the New England meet and placed sixth in this year's Coast Guard Invitational. Obviously this is a tough test for the 5-2 Redmen.

The sophomore lineup was necessitated somewhat by a dislocated elbow incurred by unlimited performer Glenn Cummins, and the decision by heavyweight star Tim Perkins to have an operation. Barr said of Perkins, "He settled us down in a couple meets and gave us needed help in the heavyweight division.

Barr summed up his team's chances by saying, "We, by all rights shouldn't win down there, what with the layoff and the injuries. However, we have to show well to prove we are making progress and improving. This is a growing up meet."

Rush Signs Three Year Pact With Pats

BOSTON (AP) - Clive Rush and Patriots' president William H. Sullivan Jr., who had met in New York for the past two days to iron out the details told a news conference in Boston yesterday that the contract was for three years. The terms were not disclosed. Rush said his first job would be to select "the best possible staff of assistant coaches."

Asked if he planned to keep any of the current Patriots assistants, the new head coach said he had made no decisions at this time and planned to talk with all of them individually to see how they would fit into his own plans.

Gymnasts Host Evenly Matched Army

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Tomorrow should prove to be a testing day for the gymnastics team as they meet Army at 7:30 p.m. in the Boyden Auxilary Gymnasium. The freshmen will also do battle with the Black Knights at 4 p.m.

According to Coach Erik Kjeldsen, the meet against Army is one of "three critical meets." Pointwise in the meets which each team had had so far this season, the two teams are about even. Army's best score was 150 against Springfield last week.

The best score for the Redmen is 153 against Southern Connecticut, but in meets which the Eastern League judges have scored, UMass' best is 152 against Penn State a week ago.

Kjeldsen hopes to pull his team together, and with each man holding his own, the Redmen stand a chance to win. But the Army scores are close enough to the UMass scores, that if one Redmen falters, and the Army does not, then the Redmen could lose.

The UMass lineup will remain basically the same, but Coach Kjeldsen says, "the team is a little thinner than I would like because Norm Vexler's shoulder has not come around." Vexler was injured in an earlier meet, and he will be out of the ring and high bar competition.

Scott Stover will be competing in the horizontal bars, and his addition should beef up the competition on the horizontal bars and vaulting.

Also competing on the high bar will be Norm Seibert, Joe Reed and possibly Vexler. The coach says that this will be "the strongest team ever" in this event. Army also fields a strong high bar team and this competition could be pivotal.

Coach Kjeldsen estimates that his team will have the edge in the floor exercise. At the Penn State meet, the floor exercise team posted a 27.4 score, which is the highest event score UMass has had.

Co-captain Mike Kasavana

On the side horse, rings, parallel bars and long horse the two teams stack up about even. Army could possibly have a slight edge on the high bar.

If the Redmen can get off to an early lead, they could win, or, rather pessimistically, be in trouble.

Redman Swimmers Compete Against Univ. of Vermont

Coach Joe Rogers swimmers will face a tough contest tomorrow at 2 p.m. when they meet the University of Vermont in Boyden Pool. The freshmen will also be swimming against UVM at 4 p.m.

Three years ago the Redmen won over Vermont, but the last two years, UVM has been the victor by only one point. The two teams are fairly evenly matched this year. The meet should prove to be a good contest between the Redmen and the Catamounts, and either team could emerge the victor this year.

Mark Miller will be swimming in the 200-yard free style event. Dick Donahue, a strong swimmer in the 200-yard butterfly, will be competing in that event.

Dave Larson, who was out in the first part of the season, will see action tomorrow in the diving event. Al Northrup will be swimming in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Co-captain Flip Morton and Jeff Senior will be competing in the 50-yard freestyle. Co-captain Bob Asquith will see action in the 200-yard backstroke and the 200-individual Medley.

SOCCER HONORS

Dick Meyer, Steve Blanchette, Rick Matuzcak and Bill Sanborn received All-Yankee Conference Soccer honorable mention.

Track Delegation To Compete in BAA

Eighteen varsity and five frosh trackster will represent UMass in the 80th annual Boston Athletic Association Track and Field Meet in Boston, tomorrow. The runners and field men will compete in three relays and six open events.

This annual c[lassic] begins its 1969 edition at Nor[th]eastern's cage in the afternoon with the field events. Competing in their first competition of the year will be Dave Schlakka, Ed Arcaro, and Bill Wilen in both the shot put and the 35-pound weight.

Nearby, UMass will have four men in the open high jump. Of the three varsity jumpers, John Ariensen, Paul Nyman, and Cal Carpenter, and the one frosh jumper, Ed Shaughnessy, only Carpenter has been in competition this season with a first place to his credit in the Huntington YMCA meet of December 26.

Joining the weight men and high jumpers at Northeastern will be broadjumpers Dick Dyer and Dave Canterbury. The two will try to improve on the fourth and fifth place finishes they grabbed at the recent K of C meet.

At night the scene of the meet switches to Boston Garden's 11-lap track and the running events. The first event will be the varsity two-mile relay with Bill Donaldson, Ron Wayne, Paul Hoss, and Diego Gonzales representing the Redmen.

Coach Ken O'Brien says that this team should turn in a better showing than they did at the K of C meet. "Donaldson and Wayne are now experienced at the indoor half on the boards and Gonzalez, who has been running anchor, has been running well. Hoss will be making his comeback after a cross-country injury. He will be replacing Dave Evans in the relay while Evans replaces Hoss on the knee injury list."

In the varsity mile relay, Bob Hasselbaum, Steve Chase, Gerry Spellman, and again Gonzalez will make up the Redman team. Except for Hasselbaum, who was injured, the other three runners made up the K of C mile relay along with Evans. The Little Redmen will also have a mile relay team entered with the four individuals yet to be named by Coach O'Brien pending a time trial.

Two members of the varsity relays, Wayne and Hasselbaum will also be entered in open events. Wayne will compete in the open New England 880. The race should prove a little short for Wayne who is used to the mile and two mile. Hasselbaum is entered in the New England 440. Hasselbaum was a finalist in last year's outdoor New England 440, and he placed third in last year's

BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

UMass, playing its best ball of the season, hits the road again tomorrow when it travels up the thruway to Syracuse for an 8:30 p.m. contest. The game will be played in Manley Field House, "the house that Bing built," which seats 8200.

Syracuse is suffering through a disasterous 4-12 season under first year coach Roy Danforth. Fred Lewis, the recruiting specialist who built the Orangemen into a powerhouse a couple of years ago, bailed out last year when his charges fell to an 11-14 season.

Graduated from that group are Vaugh Harper, George Hicker and Richie Cornwall, who presently ply their trade in the EBL. Syracuse also lost the sophomore stars of last year's team, Wayne Ward and Ernie Austin due to academic problems.

The Orangemen have a wealth of talent, however, and they have been impressive in victories over Brigham Young and Penn State. In fact, they've only lost to powerful La Salle and Holy Cross at Manley.

Bill Smith, 6'11 sophomore center, has been Syracuse's leading scorer and rebounder averaging 17.4 points and 10.5 rebounds. Smith is a former high school All-American from Rochester, and his prep school battles with St. Bonaventure's Bob Lanier are legendary.

Smith is joined up front by Bob Kouwe, a 6'4 senior with a 13.6 norm, and Gerry McFaddier, a 6'4 jumping jack who transferred from Dodge City Junior College.

John Suder, one of the best free throw shooters in the country, and Bill Case, a great outside shooter, are the backcourt men. Suder stands 6'2 while Case goes about 6'4 and can work as swingman in the forecourt.

Senior guard Frank Hamblen and sophomore gunner Bill Finney are the top reserves. Reserve center Dave Aldrich and Dave Harmon, another JC transfer, are also getting plenty of playing time from Danforth.

Coach Jack Leaman's men cannot afford to be overconfident in this one despite Syracuse's poor record. The Orangemen have been pitted against some of the best in the country, and they are always tough at home.

UMass will leave tonight for the upper New York state city, stay over there tonight and return after the game tomorrow night.

Three years ago Dave Bing lead Syracuse to a 114-72 rout over the Redmen. That 1965-66 group of Orangemen rang up a 22-6 mark and went to the final of the NCAA Eastern Regionals in which they lost to Duke.

TWO FROM THE BENCH - Dick Samuelson, left, a reserve center, and John Dreyer, right, a forward, are both key substitutes for Coach Jack Leaman's hoop team.

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

Usually given second billing because of a varsity game, the unbeaten UMass freshman basketball team will be the feature attraction tonight when they meet the New Haven College frosh at 7 p.m. in the Cage.

The Little Redmen will go into the spotlight of being the top game of the evening tonight fresh from their sixth straight win. The Dartmouth win Wednesday was the second close game in a row the frosh have pulled out of the fire. It also gets UMass off to a good start in their second half.

The New Haven team the Little Redmen are facing tonight is currently .500 with a 5-5 record. Their wins include victories over Eastern Nazarene, Monmouth, Salem State, Newark State, and Laurel College. New Haven has been beaten by some strong opposition including Yale, Fairfield, Kingsley Prep, Quinnipiac and St. Thomas More.

New Haven is coached by an alumnus, Gary Liberatore, who was a small college scoring great. He has inherited a team, however, whose tallest man is only 6'2.

The leading scorer for New Haven has been 6'2 Tom Fortune. The Bethel, Conn., native is averaging around 19 points per game. The rest of the starters include 6'1 Robert Rossi from Schenectady, N. Y., 6'1 Jim Stonick from East Haven, Conn., 6'2 Nick Crismale, from Union City, N.J., and 5'10 Kevin Sheehan, from East Haven, Conn.

Second in scoring for New Haven, is a 5'8 substitute, Jim Pascarella who is averaging 14 points a game. The talented East Haven, Conn., native is said by New Haven sources to be a deadly long range shooter.

Against Dartmouth, UMass was not, obviously, at its best. The reason was relatively easy to pinpoint: a six week layoff. It showed most graphically in the Little Redman shooting as the usual sharpshooting frosh were throwing them up at a low 40 per cent.

Julius Erving had his first off night hitting only four of 10 shots while big Tom Austin was able to can only one of nine. These two are not going to shoot for those figures very often.

Bill Kesgen put in his first playing time against Dartmouth and the 6'5 forward proved he would be a key performer for the UMass frosh, in the remainder of the season. Coach Peter Broaca used Kesgen both at center and forward and showed he is tough off the boards in addition to displaying a good shot.

So tonight the frosh will get top billing. They have deserved it after their impressive showing thus far. And performers getting their first starring role like big audiences, so plan to attend.

REDMEN RANTINGS - UMass President John W. Lederle was an interested spectator at Wednesday's contest with Fordham and paid the winning Redman locker room a post game visit . . . The UMass prexy spoke to the team, congratulating Jack Leaman's charges on their success thus far this season . . . Lederle was lucky he got in to see the game . . . An estimated 200 people were locked out of the Cage, as the packed antique could not contain another body . . . Wonder how many will be disappointed Wednesday when there is the big, big, big, big Boston College game . . . And finally the Springfield papers may have noticed there is a fine basketball team at UMass . . . Columnist Gerry Finn, who was filling in since top basketball writer Jerry Radding thought the Springfield-Amherst epic struggle was a bigger game, termed the Redmen "a team with NCAA or NIT aspirations" . . . How right he is.

Puckmen Journey To Williams For First of Three Road Games

By WALT STACHURA
Senior Reporter

Beginning a schedule of three consecutive road games, the UMass hockey team travels to Williamstown tomorrow for an 8 p.m. encounter with Williams College.

By all indications, tomorrow's game should be a close, hard fought tilt.

Williams has only a 1-8 record, but the Ephs have played well in most of their games.

A look at the mutual opponents of Williams and UMass show how closely the two teams are matched. Williams lost to Penn, 7-2, while UMass went down, 6-1, Vermont beat the Redmen 4-1 and the Ephs 5-0. One other common opponent shared by the two teams is Bowdoin which UMass has split two ond half of the season. Eddie games with while Williams lost twice to the Polar Bears.

Leading scorers for the Ephs have been center Garv Bensen and defenseman Charley Knapp with eight points a piece. Other strong performers for Williams this season are center Skip Comestock and wingers Jim Stearns and Peter Thorp.

UMass will be looking for revenge as last year Williams ripped the Redmen, 6-3 at Orr Rink. With this seasons game being played at the Ephs' home rink, conditions will be that much tougher for the Redmen who have won only one game away from the friendly confines of Orr Rink.

In preparation for tomorrow's game, the varsity scrimmaged the freshmen yesterday. However, Coach Jack Canniff commented that conditions for a scrimmage are far different from an actual game and that the team will come around after getting a couple of games under their belt.

Canniff said that one new player has joined the squad for the second half of the season. Eddie Riley, a forward from last year's frosh team, will start playing as soon as he gets his skating legs back after the half-season layoff.

PRESIDENT JOHN W. LEDERLE will be the first in a series of University administrators to be available Tuesday afternoons to meet with students in the Student Union. (See story below).

Faculty Senate To Recommend University Planning Committee

By MARK SILVERMAN
Friday Issue Editor

The Faculty Senate will recommend to President John W. Lederle that a three-man committee be established to "devote full time to the task of University planning."

A list of 12 candidates for the Committee will be approved by the Faculty Senate Feb. 12 before submission to the President for final approval. At least one of the three members will be a "junior" faculty member (an instructor or Assistant Professor).

The Committee members would take a year off from all University responsibilites. In explaining the need for a full time committee, a Faculty Senate spokesman stated, ". . . the future academic development of the University. . . is of such urgency that no further delay can be afforded in the creation of a long term plan.

Dr. William C. Havard, Chairman of the present Faculty Senate Committee on Planning, told the DAILY COLLEGIAN, "The new committee will be free from all other University responsibilites simply because you can't design a comprehensive planning program on a part time basis. Our committee couldn't do the job because of the great time limitations; also, we want professional assistance for planning with substantial financial support."

"We will make the existing committee," he continued, "into a sort of laison with the three-man committee. The big group will include some student members and they, along with faculty and administration members, will bring suggestions from their constituencies to the attention of the three-man committee.

Havard said he hopes that, with all their time devited to the planning committee, the three members will be able to "come up with the blueprint for the future which the University so desperately needs right now."

Amherst College Elects New Trustees Chairman

Oliver B. Merrill, Jr., a partner in the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, has been elected chairman of the Board of Trustees of Amherst College.

The Board elected McCloy honorary chairman - he is the first to be so named in the College's history - and trustee emeritus.

Merrill graduated from Amherst and earned his law degree at Columbia University. Following a year as secretary to U.S. Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone, he became associated with Sullivan & Cromwell, and since 1937 has been a member of the firm.

In 1953, amherst alumni elected Merrill to a six-year term on the Board of Trustees, and in 1961 he was named a life member. He had earlier served six years on the Executive Committee of the Alumni Council and two terms as chairman of the alumni organization.

American Airlines President Denies Lobbying Charges

The president of American Airlines, George A. Spater, denied charges made in the Jan. 31, column Inside Report by Rowland Evans and Robert Novak that American Airlines lobbied for action in the Transpacific air route case. "American Airlines was completely surprised by President Nixon's Jan. 24 decision to reopen the Transpacific route case and had not "lobbied for" or recommended such action by the President," Spater said.

Also the Evans and Novak column accused American of contacting politically influential law firms to pressure the Nixon Administration. To this Spater said, "No one in American Airlines has been 'scouting' for a law firm with Republican connections; and, specifically, American has made no contact with the firm of Royall, Koegel and Rogers. We have also ascertained that this firm has no knowledge of any approach by American."

American Airlines was said to have contacted this law firm whose member's included William P. Rogers, the Secretary of State.

Administrators Available To Meet Students Tuesdays

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, in co-operation with the Administration, has moved to open a new line of communication to the student body.

Every Tuesday afternoon, beginning tomorrow with President John W. Lederle, one of the top Administrators will be in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union between the hours of 12 and 2 p.m. All students are invited to take advantage of this time to discuss relevant ideas and dissatisfactions directly with those in charge.

The major participants in the program will be President Lederle, Provost Tippo, and Dean Field. They will each appear one afternoon a month. Filling open dates will be the Deans of the Colleges of the University.

The following tentative schedule is:

Chicago U. Students Sit In To Protest Teacher's Firing

CHICAGO (CPS-TELEX) - University of Chicago students continued their occupation of the campus administration building last night, waiting to see if school officials would seek a court order to have them removed.

The University administration has consulted its legal staff and the courts for information and advice about an injunction and its implications. It may seek one today, according to one of the school's attorneys.

The number of students inside the six-story gray stone building fluctuates between 100 and 500.

The peaceful sit in began noon Thursday, triggered by the sociology department's refusal to rehire Mrs. Marlene Dixon. But protesters agree the sit in is really a dramatic continuation of their efforts to make changes in their education.

The students suspect that bias against women and radicals, along with over emphasis on publishing rather than teaching, was involved in the decision not to rehire Mrs. Dixon.

Four Colleges Take Action To Change ROTC Program

The growing dissatisfaction with ROTC military training was reflected in action taken the past week at Yale, Dartmouth, and Western Maryland Colleges.

The Yale College faculty Thursday voted to strip its Reserve Officer Training Corps program of academic credit, giving it status of an extracurricular activity, and military officers who teach ROTC will no longer carry the title professor.

The faculty at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H., has limited ROTC credit to two courses, warning that unless changes are made in the program by Congress it will eliminate all credit. Faculty status will be granted only to the senior officer of each ROTC department.

ROTC was made elective at Western Mayland College, a decision that had been postoned because contracts between the school and the army had required a certain number of enrollees.

The faculty of Cornell University this month will consider a basic revision of its ROTC program and will make recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

Making the indoctrination and drill training phases an extracurricular, non-credit activity was urged by a special study commission in January.

Amherst College Faculty Approves Of Rules Governing Women Visitors

The Amherst College faculty has unanimously approved a change in the rules governing women visitors to college residences. The College Council, made up of representatives from the student body, faculty, and administration, submitted a report on parietal hours and offered the recommendation which the faculty supported.

The new system will allow each of the fifty residential units - dormitories and fraternities - to adopt its own parietal regulations to meet certain responsibilities. These are: "consideration for women visitors, consideration for fellow residents, and meeting legal responsibilities."

Each unit will submit its proposals to the College Council for review. The system will go into effect as soon as a unit has fulfilled the procedures established for assuming self-government.

At their winter meeting the College trustees also approved the proposal and authorized the changes pending faculty action. In its statement, the Board emphasized "the importance of compliance with the law' and reserved the right to take "appropriate action in the case of conduct which, in its judgment, reflects on the good name of the College or interferes with its primary educational aims."

The Board also requested the College Council to submit "an annual report as to the operation of the proposal."

Under the previous system, women were allowed in the residences only during certain hours established by the College Council.

In discussing the need for parietal hours, the College Council's report stated, "the real question for the College would seem to be whether, based on its own experience, formal parietal hours are most consistent with Amherst's educational purposes.'

The Council summarized its views as follows: "We conclude that the best way for an educational institution to proceed in this as in other matters is to educate not to impose, to ask serious questions of those who think they have the answers . . . This reasoning leads us to believe that a context in which individual residential units determine their own conditions for the entertainment of women guests promises to be the most moral and the most responsible institutional arrangement which Amherst can adopt."

Williams College and Wesleyan University approved a similar procedure in which the responsibility for establishing and enforcing visiting hours for women rests with the individual houses and dormitory units.

NES To Hold Confefence For Tutorial Program

At 8:30 p.m. in the Norfolk Room, today and tomorrow, and in the Nantucket Room, Wednesday and Thursday, in the Student Union there will be a conference concerning the N.E.S . tutoria' program for this semester. This conference is sponsored and payed for by the Martin Luther King Council.

Letters have been sent and information tables have been set up to gain an adequate response from those tutors who worked last semester and those who wish to involve themselves this semester. Tutoring starts Feb. 10, but the N.E.S. Coordination Committee has only 50 new tutors and very little knowledge of what will be the activity of those students who tutored last semester.

The Conferences have been set up so a tutor can attend the night of the day he tutors or any night he is free between the 3 and 6 of Feb. There will be talks on the program and tutoring advice. It is also an effort to discover how effective each experienced tutor feels his effort.

Their turnout of tutors so far thi s semester has been disappointing. The King Council and N.E.S, as one of its new initiatives will try to eliminate this disappointment on all sides and make tutoring a more personal experience.

N.E.S. has its center coordinaters while the King Council will establish bus coordinaters and advisers in urban education on a daily basis. A more personal contact is desired so the tutor may be more effective and motivated in this work.

This importance may have been overlooked last semester. In most cases no practical estimate can be made on how effective educationally this program may be. What N.E.S. hopes to do at the very least is the creation of concern in tutors to motivate the tutees toward education if not to educate literally.

Shaw Trial Resumes Today To Choose Alternate Jurers

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - The prosecution and the defense have a new list of 150 names from which to choose two alternate jurors when the conspiracy trial of Clay Shaw resumes Monday in Criminal District Court.

Selection of the alternates and disposal of one motion must be finished before the prosecution unfolds its case. A jury of 12 men was completed Saturday.

Asst. Dist. Atty. James Alcock said he expects to make opening remarks Tuesday. He is the chief court spokesman for Dist Atty. Jim Garrison's account of a New Orleans-based conspiracy to assassinate President John F. Kennedy.

The prosecution has refused to state clearly if it intends to link the alleged conspiracy and the assassination.

Meanwhile, a Washington, D.C. judge says Garrison must make clear by Wednesday his effort to link the two if Garrison expects him to declar e the Kennedy autopsy records relevant to the trial.

SC Art Prof. To Lecture On Old Whale Bone Box

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - An early medieval whale bone box will be the subject of a lecture at Smith College Thursday (Feb. 6).

Miss Amy Lou Vandersall, assistant professor of art, will speak at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall. Sponsored by the art department, the illustrated lecture is open to the public.

"The Franks Casket," now preserved in the British Museum, will be Miss Vandersall's topic. The narrative scenes carved on the box are drawn from ancient history, Teutonic myth and the Bible. Included in the scenes are Titus' capture of Jerusalem in 70 A.D., Romulus and Remus, and the Adoration of the Magi. Runic inscriptions explaining the scenes encircle the panels. The casket measures 9 x 7-1/2 x 5-1/8 inches.

According to Miss Vandersall, "Although the casket has been written on extensively by scholars of language and literature, it has never been thoroughly studied by art historians." In her lecture, she proposes to examine the traditional date and provenance from the point of view of art history. She also plans to discuss the identification of the subjects and the purpose for which the casket was carved. The lecture is based on recent research on the casket by Miss Vandersall soon to be published.

Miss Vandersall, an authority on medieval art, joined the Smith faculty in 1966. The previous year she was assistant professor at the Rhode Island School of Design. A graduate of the College of Wooster, she received the M.A. degree from Mount Holyoke College and the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Yale University.

Members Sought For Home EcAssociation

BY SUE GERSON
Wednesday Issue Editor

The School of Home Economics is sponsoring a drive during February 3-10 to recruit members into the college chapter of the American Home Economics Association (AHEA).

The AHEA is a national organization whose purpose is to improve the quality and standards of individual and family life through education, research, cooperation programs and public information.

Senator Urges Older Generation To Unite With Young People

Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York, who filled the vacancy created by the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy, yesterday urged the older generation "to make common cause" with young people and "reform the practices that inspire dissatisfaction."

Speaking at the State University College of Buffalo, Senator Goodell said the younger generation's views have been "misinterpreted" as anarchistic. "Those who sit in comfort and complacency, who are blind to the screaming needs of our time, are the passive anarchists (and) the ones most guilty of destroying, bit by bit, the potential of a meaningful and healthy society."

Careers In Air Science Open To Eligible UMass Students

The Department of Air Science is now interviewing students for admission to its two-year program leading to a commission in the United States Air Force. Students who, as of September 1969, will have two years of academic study remaining are eligible to apply. The two years can be undergraduate, graduate, or a combination of both.

Career opportunities exist in flying, the sciences, engineering, research and development, management, computer technology, education and in many other fields that correspond to your university studies.

While enrolled you will receive financial assistance of $50.00 per month (tax free).

Flight instruction is provided to those who apply and qualify for pilot training. You can also obtain a private pilot's license at the same time.

Deferments for graduate study are normally available.

Interested students may contact the Department of Air Science in Dickinson Hall or call 5-2437 for further information.

We May Lose Again

Students and others who are low on cash have usually relied on buses for interstate transportation. But since 1966, young people have realized they could fly for about the same cost, with a tremendous savings in travel time and comfort.

A student in New York City can ride the bus to Atlanta for $29.35 and 21 hours of bus time. A flight costs $3 less on an airline offering a 50 per cent youth fare, or only $11 more at the two-thirds fare on others. The flight takes less than two hours, and features stewardesses and refreshments.

The advantages of air travel are obvious, even to bus line officials. Concerned that students are no longer leaving the driving (and profits) to them but to the airlines, they challenged youth fares. Leading the fight was Trailways Bus System.

A court ofer required the Civil Aeronautics Board to listen to the bus companies' complaints, and last week a CAB examiner ruled that the youth fares are indeed discriminatory against adult passengers who must pay full fares. Under CAB procedures, the cut-rate fares will be abolished unless a petition requesting a review of the decision is filed by Feb. 22. Major airlines, and possibly the National Student Association, are expected to file such a petition soon.

American Airlines, which originated youth fare, believes the fares encourage air travel and should not be dropped. Thirteen other carriers supported youth fare and 10 either opposed them or didn't take a position during the CAB investigation.

The decision, filed by CAB examiner Arthur S. Present, held that fares generally should be offered on an equal basis. He rejected the argument that the low fares were needed to generate air travel by young people and to fill empty seats.

We feel that this ruling, whatever the rationale behind it, is definitely not in the best interest of either the student passengers or the airlines, and very shortly we will be informing the NSA that we fully support any action they may take in this matter in behalf of students.

For those students who wish to make a more personal protest, they may do so by writing to the Civil Aeronautics Board at 1825 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009. And for those who do not have time to write, Western Union now has a 15 word telegram for 90¢ which may be sent to any congressman in Washington from anywhere in the United States.

If this ruling takes effect, bus companies may note some improvement in business, but the loser as usual will be the student who is already hard-put to meet the rising cost of education.

"All I Ask Is That The Other Two Judges Be Completely Neutral"

Do You Care?

This has been the theme for the upcoming elections, Thursday, February 6th, for the Central Area Council: "Do you care?" Last year, when the University threatened to standardize room rents for the campus, Central Area banded together for the first time. If an Area Government had existed, chances are this confrontation would never have taken place. Do you care?

And this year, when Mills House was used by Afro-Am, many Area residents felt that they had been cheated out of what was rightfully theirs. Next year, the facilites in Mills are going to be twice as expensive, twice as improved. There is going to be a giant ball room, a snack bar, a game room, a library and so much more. Do you care?

And how about those parking assignments. Haven't you ever wondered how some people get their stickers? Area Council is going to control that too, and maybe even pay - yes pay - house officials. Maybe create a Residential College. Maybe establish co-ed dorms. Do you care?

INSIDE REPORT

Bipartisan Rainmaking

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - No sooner had President Johnson announced his decision Dec. 19 in the malevolently contested Transpacific air route case that two major airlines--American and Eastern--began a quick search for Republican rainmakers.

They were shrewdly looking ahead to the prospect that President Nixon, once in office, might well wipe out his predecessor's decision awarding lucrative air routes to Hawaii and the Orient. And that is precisely what happened on Jan. 24, in an atmosphere polluted by suspicion that decisions by the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) and Mr. Johnson might have been influenced by "rainmakers"-lobbyists on airline payrolls and lawyers with airline accounts with supposed political power.

Actually, neither American nor Eastern succeeded in their first audacious efforts to secure rainmakers in the new Administration. But the incident confirms that the rainmaking syndrome afflicting the regulatory process is fully bipartisan in nature.

Under the Democratic regime, American's payrolls were brimming with LBJ cronies. Although a CAB examiner's decision reached after nearly three years of scholarly deliberations awarded American nothing, the politically-conscious CAB itself handed the line a rich harvest of routes to Japan through Hawaii.

However, acting on a State Department recommendation, President Johnson sharply disappointed his old buddies at American by killing the board's award of the Tokyo route because of protests from Japan. Thus, American joined the list of disappointed airlines lobbying for a reopening of the case by Mr. Nixon. Discreetly, it began scouting about for another law firm.

Its choice: the Park Avenue firm of Royall, Koegel, Rogers and Wells. Whatever this firm might lack in aviation industry experience is more than made up by its potential as a Republican rainmaker. Superb in their Republican credentials, the firm's partners include William P. Rogers, Mr. Nixon's Secretary of State.

When American made its proposal, the Rogers firm, immediately realizing the potential for scandal, firmly declined.

But American was outdone in the quest for Republican influence by Eastern, an airline sadly lacking in Democratic rainmakers. It may well have suffered for that lack. Recommended a rich collection of badly needed routes to the South Pacific via Hawaii by the professional examiner, Eastern was shut out of anything at all by the board itself. Thus, more than any other airline, Eastern stood to gain by a reopening of the case.

In view of this, an Eastern emissary discreetly explored the prospect of hiring none other than the Wall Street firm of Nixon, Mudge, Rose, Guthrie, Alexander & Mitchell, another highly reputable firm--perhaps somewhat deficient in aviation know-how but surpassing even the Rogers firm in political clout.

Apart from Mr. Nixon himself, another senior partner--John Mitchell--is the new Attorney General and one of the firm's young lawyers, John Sears, is a White House aide. In addition, the firm has just opened a Washington office to be run by partner Leonard Garment, who will be handling some extra-governmental chores for the President.

Just as the Rogers firm did, the Nixon firm wisely ruled out participation in so blatantly political a case. But that does not for a moment mean that the airlines will be totally without rainmaking resources in Richard Nixon's Washington.

For example, Washington offices of some of the airlines include staffers who volunteered their time for the Nixon campaign last year. Their boards of directors easily include as many key Republicans as key Democrats. Furthermore, top airline executives were generous last fall in their contributions to the super-expensive Nixon campaign.

Indeed, these rainmakers for airlines that did not fare well under President Johnson's Transpacific decision have pestered Nixon aides for the past month for a reopening of the Transpacific case. While acknowledging that the dark suspicions surrounding the case invited reconsiderations, Nixon men are bracing themselves for a poisonous stretch of Potomac infighting.

There is a lesson here. The Transpacific case, more than any other recent decision to come befor a regulatory commission, points to the need of reforms--possibly radical reforms--in the basic operations of the quasi-judicial regulatory agencies.

Congress Awaits Action On School Desegregation

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional civil rights backers from both parties are serving notice on the Nixon administration. They will fight any retreat in federal efforts to desegregate Southern schools.

And they are watching warily to see how the new administration will respond to Sen. Strom Thurmond's request for further review of an important case involving federal desegregation standards for textile firms seeking fat defense contracts.

Predictably, Republicans emphasized their praise and Democrats their concern in assessing Secretary of Welfare Robert H. Finch's two-way action in the case of five Southern school districts facing a cutoff of federal funds.

Finch last week upheld the Johnson administration's decision that funds should be stopped to the districts, which have failed to develop desegregation plans. But he permitted a 60-day period in which the districts still could qualify to get the funds retroactively.

Six liberal Republican senators issued a statement calling Finch's action "a most generous approach - too generous in any other situation but the one which faced the new administration" because the deadline came so soon after it took over.

But they said that school districts should be told that standards will be strictly enforced by this administration.

The statement was signed by Sens. Jacob K. Javits and Charles E. Goodell of New York, Hugh Scott and Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania, Edward M. Brooke of Massachusetts and Clifford P. Case of New Jersey.

WMUA To Air New Radio Show

"Omniscope," a fast-moving half-hour radio variety program, is catching on quick at UMass - as it has on many other well-known campuses across the nation since its release in February 1968.

Heard over WMUA Radio each Monday at 6:30 p.m., the show presents a captivating parade of celebrity interviews and on-campus features. Musical interludes - majoring on the sounds that are "in" with today's young adults -- keep it flowing.

"Omniscope" has featured such popular guests as Herb Alpert, Al Hirt, The Serendipity Singers, Vance Packard and David Brinkley. There have also been round-table discussions by well-informed young people on current issues, interviews with outstanding campus personalities and specials on a variety of controversial subjects.

Each "Omniscope" segment includes a brief, non-sectarian religious emphasis -- usually in a discussion format -- speaking to the needs of the college-age young adult.

Stations scheduling "Omniscope" automatically become members of the Omniscope Network and eligible to submit materials from their campuses for the program.

Weather Bureau Seeks Volunteer Storm Spotters

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Weather Bureau is seeking more volunteer storm spotters and a public better educated in tornado survival techniques as a means of cutting down the death toll from twisters.

Weather Bureau representatives will push "Project Skywarm" by talking up the need for tornado preparedness plans at meetings with public safety officials in areas where tornado danger is highest, said Cressman.

UMass Professor Publishes Essays

Quadrangle Books of Chicago has published "Economics of Dissent," a collection of the major writings of Ben B. Seligman, U-Mass professor of economics and director of the Labor Relations and Research Center.

The work is the fourth book brought out in the past year by the UMass economist. The 35 essays have been arranged by the author in four major categories. The first deals with economic premises and preconceptions and the last three analyze the American institutions of business, government and labor.

The collection represents 25 years of research in economics and the American labor system. Prof. Seligman has studied at Brooklyn College, Columbia University and the New School for Social Research. He has been research director of the Retail Clerks International Association, a Guggenheim Fellow, an associate fellow of the Institute for Policy Studies, a lecturer at Brooklyn College and an affairs analyst for the United Auto Workers.

The book reflects Prof. Seligman's concern with the humanistic side of economic theory - not only with the premises and preconceptions of economic thinking but also with the manner in which economic ideas may be applied to society's economic problems.

'Yellow Submarine' Departs From Ordinary Visual Art

By SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

The "Yellow Submarine" is a rapid-fire cartoon adventure in the fantasy life of Pepperland and other locales. Usually when one hears the term "cartoon" it immediately conjures up thoughts of Walt Disney and his little bouncy animation.

Such is not the case with this Apple Production. They have employed the basics of old-form cartoons but this hour and a half length movie has departed into its own unique class, a new visual art form.

Throughout "Yellow Submarine", music and lyrics from "Sgt. Pepper", "Magical Mystery Tour", and some others are used. Even if one is not an avid Beatle fan he will probably enjoy it nonetheless. Also throughout the movie is a constant punning banter among the Beatle characters themselves.

"Submarine" takes one through sieges by the hoards of Blue Meanies under the command of His Blueship and his faithful companion Glove. All these evil folks shudder at love, music, laughter and anything that might connote happiness. Nowhere man is another of the many encounters one will make on this little trip. The submarine passes through the Sea of Green, the Sea of Holes, the Foothills of the Headlands, and many other vivid and bright places. Much originality is used in depicting the in habitants of these sites and their activites.

This little cartoon adventure about the salvation of Pepperland from the terrorist occupation of the Blue Meanies is purely fun and fantasy. It is simply a tremendous visual side trip from the ordinary.

By WALT STACHURA
Senior Reporter

WILLIAMSTOWN - Winger Whit Knapp's late third period goal enabled Williams College to capture an exciting 5-4 hockey victory over UMass Saturday night at the Williams College hockey rink.

Knapp's goal snapped an inspired Redmen comeback attempt which brought UMass into a 4-4 deadlock after being down by a goal going into the final period.

Tom Babson produced the tie with a goal six minutes into the period. He scored from a scramble in front of the Williams net with Tom Peters and Joe Brebbia drawing assists on the play.

Babson's goal fired up the Redmen and they kept the puck in the Williams end of the rink but were unable to score. After a heavy attack on the Ephs goal, Williams center Skip Comestock picked up a loose puck at center ice and made an excellent pass to Knapp who slapped the puck past UMass goalie Larry Walsh.

The Redmen made a last ditch attempt to tie the score by pulling their goaltender with about a minute left in the game. However, the Ephs almost put the puck into the empty net as the final seconds ticked off the clock.

UMass started the game as if they were going to blast the Ephs right off the ice. Paul Riley opened the scoring when he knocked home a rebound of a Bob Madore shot.

Nineteen seconds after, Jim O'Brien netted the second UMass goal with a 10ft. slider into the corner. John Hartnett drew an assist on the play.

O'Brien put the Redmen back on top late in the opening stanza with his second goal of the night as he deflected in a Doug Powling blue line slap shot.

The Ephs dominated the action in the second period and grabbed a 4-3 lead by the end of the period. Gary Benson and Kevin Sullivan tallied the Williams goals that set the stage for the thrilling final session.

The loss dropped the Redmen record to 5-8 and dimmed their chance at a .500 season. Williams is now 2-8-1.

BLUELINE BANTER ... 17 minor penalties were called during the game with eleven coming in the rough and tumble third period.... The road woes of the Redmen continue as they are now 1-5 away from Orr rink.

Williams goalie Key Barstow made the saves of the game when he stopped Jeff Sanborn point blank and then Joe DiCicco on the rebound of Sanborn's shot. . Barstow had only 14 saves during the game while Walsh had 23 for U-Mass.

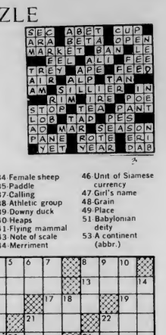
Gymnast Lose Heartbreaker to Army

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Playing before a standing room only crowd which featured a cheering section of Cadets, the gymnastics team went down to defeat at the hands of the army, 152.13 - 152.00 Saturday night. The defeat was not only stunning, but also a shock, for the Redmen had led in every event, and the crowds were beginning to sense a victory. But the high bar performance of the Redmen was below par, and Army's strength according to predictions was in the high bar event.

The Redmen [illegible]ed off to an early lead in the [illegible]r exercises with Co-captain Dick DelGallo posting the highest score for the Redmen, 8.90. Three other Redmen posted scores above 8.00, Billy McAuley, 8.40; Joe Reed, 8.50 and Norm Vexler, 8.13, despite a shoulder injury which has been bothering him. Co-captain Mike Kasavana had a 7.87. Although the Redman lead was slim, 25.8 to 25.4, it was a start.

The Redmen increased their lead in vaulting with an event score of 24.09 - 22.12 for the Army for a two point lead. Frank Dean and Vexler scored 8.13 and 8.03 respectively. Rich Reilly and Ed Jones each scored above seven.



DelGallo turned in a strong individual performance on the still rings, his specialty, with a 9.13, the highest single score for UMass of the evening. Reed and George Seibert both had good performances posting 8.96 and 8.43 scored respectively. After this event, the score stood, UMass 76.41, Army 73.66.

Vexler, Reed and Steve Cary placed for the Redmen in the long horse vaulting event. Cary's second vault brought him a 9.10 and brought his teammates out to congratulate him. The Redmen upped their overall score to 102.05 against 99.61 for the Army.

The Army outscored the Redmen by a very narrow margin in the paralled bars, 26.29, for the Redmen and 26.56 for the Army, but UMass was still leading, 128.34 to 126.17. Cary produced a beautiful performance for a 9.10 score.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - Sparked by floor general Joe Di Sarcina, the UMass Redmen raced to an 84-63 rout over Syracuse before 2,836 unhappy fans at Manley Field House Saturday. It was the third straight win for the surging Bay Staters, giving them a fine 10-4 mark and setting the stage for Wednesday's duel with Boston College.

All five starters were in double figures for the Redmen but DiSarcina's ballhawking and quarterbacking stood out. The senior co-captain also had one of his better days point-wise, tallying 14 markers.

The Orangemen, now 4-13, were able to stay close for most of the first period. Senior Bob Kouwe's deadly outside shooting had Syracuse in front 21-20, with 6:06 to go despite the strong offensive rebounding of Peter Gayeska, Ken Mathias and Dennis Chapman.

A followup by John Shockre, two free throws by Mathias, a Shockre foul shot and a Mathias rebound then pushed the visitor's into a 27-21 lead. Guards John Suder and Ernie Austin, just recently eligible, countered with jump shots, but two buckets by Ellerbrook, a jumper by Mathias and two free throws converted by Shockre put Umass on top, 35-27, with 2:42 remaining in the half.

Huge centers Gayeska and Bill Smith traded muscle and points, then once again the visitors with DiSarcina at the controls ran off a string of points capped by Dick Samulson's rebound shot to give the Redmen a comfortable 44-31 halftime margin.

Syracuse's attack could do no better against the UMass zone in the second stanza. Charity stripe shots by Smith and Suder shot pulled the Orangemen to within eleven, but Chapman and Ray Ellerbrook took to the boards to bring the lead back up to 15 at 57-42 with 12 minutes left.

A few minutes later free throws lifted the visitors into a 20 point margin as Chapman and Mathias found the range from the line. Syracuse went into a press which was doomed to failure with DiSarcina handling the ball. The speedy backcourtman's dribbling and passing set up numerous easy layups for his forecourt mates.

With 7:05 left in the contest, it was all over but the shouting. The once high-flying boys from Upstate New York were beaten in every phase of the game as UMass led, 68-46.

Coach Jack Leaman was able to give his entire bench some playing time. John Dreyer, in seven minutes of action, scored seven points and picked off four rebounds.

The Red Raiders, displaying some bruising rebounding, and some rather "not talk about" good shooting virtually cleaned up in the last few minutes. Their hustle kept UMass' lead above 20 and accounted for the final 84-63 verdict.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Both clubs were off from the floor, UMass making good on 42% of their attempts and Syracuse hitting 34% . . . The all important battle of the boards again went to the Redmen, 65-54 . . . They've only been outrebounded in two games so far this season, against Evansville and Boston University . . . All five starters tallied double figures, in the balanced attack. Ellerbrook again paced the winners with 17, followed by Mathias who complemented his fine rebounding with 15 markers . . . Luckily clutch foul shooting was not needed as the Redmen could only average 53% from the charity stripe . . . Jack Gallegher suffered a badly bruised shinbone at the Friday afternoon practice. He was unable to make the trip and will not be available for the B.C. game . . . Samuelson sprained an ankle in the second half at Syracuse, but should be all set for action Wednesday night.

Runners Excell in BAA

BOSTON - Led by sophomore Cal Carpenter's first place in the New England high jump, the UMass track team turned in a successful showing at the BAA track meet in Boston, Saturday noon and night.

Carpenter led UMass' four high-jumpers with a leap of 6'4". Placing third in the event was freshman Ed Shaughnessy who scaled the 6'2 mark. In the weight events, Ed Arcaro led the shot-putters with a heave of 49'6" and Bill Wilen was top Redman performer in the 35 lb. weight with a 47 foot toss.

Following the field events, the running events began at seven o'clock in the Boston Garden with UMass entered in the first event, a two mile relay. This race was a handicap event with four teams allowed to start a few yards in front of the five teams on the starting line.

UMass, starting from the back had Ron Wayne run the first leg. Wayne, who ran his half mile in 1:58, handed off to senior Paul Hoss running his first competition after coming off an injury a week ago. Hoss still managed a 2:02.8 half and handed off to Bill Donaldson.

Donaldson, running his fastest half ever (1:58), fought off a challenge from a URI runner and gave anchor man Diego Gonzalez the baton in seventh place. Gonzalez ran by two runners and was catching a third when the race ran out. He was timed in 1:58.2 and the team placed fourth overall.

UMass' varsity and frosh mile relay teams both placed second in their relay heats. The varsity squad was led off by senior co-captain Bob Hasselbaum, who battled from fourth place to first in 51.9.

Steve Chase ran the second leg and stayed in first with a 51.9 quarter. Following Chase, Jerry Spellman, who also hurdled at the meet, took the baton and clocked off a 51.6 quarter but was passed at the end by a Tufts runner. Diego Gonzalez anchored the Redmen in 50.7 pulling away from third but unable to catch first.

The frosh team of Vern Hatch, Arnie Morse, Don Dunsky, and Al Mangan grabbed second also behind Tufts. Mangan, running a 52.8 quarter caught two opponents in his anchor leg.

UMass had five runners in open events. Hasselbaum sped into first place in the last straightaway to win his heat of the New England 440 in 50.5 seconds, placing fourth overall in the event.

In the New England half Ron Wayne ran 1:58.1 to place fifth. Dave Marble and Walter Mayo both ran 5.6 in their 50 yard dashes. However, Mayo won his heat and Marble placed third thus being eliminated. Mayo placed fourth in his semifinal heat. JDF

Mermen Defeat Vermont

The Redmen swimming team set four records in their meet against the University of Vermont Saturday on their way to posting a 55-49 victory.

The outcome of the meet was up in the air until the last event, the relay, which Co-captain Bob Asquith, Jeff Senior, Mark Miller and Co-captain Flip Morton combined to win in 3.23:4. The seven points from this win broke the tie and gave the Redmen their first win of the season.

Asquith also won the 200-individual medley and the 200-yard backstroke, in addition to swimming on the winning relay team.

Mark Miller broke the record in the 100 event which had been set in 1942 by finishing in 50.9. He also finished the 50 in 22.9.

Dick Donahue turned in a strong performance in the 200-yard butterfly, finished in 2.17:5 . Dave Larson won both the high and low diving board events.

Grapplers Downed By Strong Central Conn. St.

Running into a balanced Central Connecticut, the UMass wrestling team was defeated 23-14 Saturday at New Britain, Conn. The loss was the Redmen's third against five wins.

UMass was forced to come from behind after the first half of the dual meet. At 115 pounds Nick DiDomenico was defeated 9-7 by Dan Riccio, but the Redmen came back in the 123 pound class when Phil Davis won by forfeit.

Central Conn. went back into the lead, when in the 130 pound division, Phil Garber defeated Howie Kaplan in a tight one, 7-5. UMass dropped further behind when the 137 pound class was forfeited to Central Conn.

Highly regarded home star Henry Marchetti had a little too much for Bob Freeman, as he came from behind in the third period to win the match 10-7. Freeman was leading at one time 3-0 but Marchetti gained three escapes and three near falls to wrap up his victory, and remain unbeaten.

At 152 pounds Pete Browne had too much for UMass' Mike Brauner as Brauner was defeated 8-1. However, it was now that the Redmen started the long road back.

Bob Williamn brought UMass still closer with a 9-4 decision over Jim Demaree in the 177 pound class. But, the following last two matches took the Redmen down to defeat.

In a high scoring duel, UMass' George Zguris was finally decisioned by Central Conn. 191 pounder Andy Capozzi, 10-6. The home win was clinched when Ed Trengrove defeated Jim Callaghan in the unlimited match.

The defeat, though a tough one, showed that many of the UMass sophomores were coming of age. It also, however, underlined a main weakness of the team, that being the inconsistency of the heavyweights.

Hayakawa Favors Autonomy In Financial Aid Cutbacks

WASHINGTON (CPS-TELEX) Acting President S. I. Hayakawa of San Francisco State College told the house higher education subcommittee Monday that withdrawal of Federal financial aid from disruptive campus demonstrators should be a perogative of individual school administrations and not a requirement set by Congress.

Asked by subcommittee chairman Edith Green (D-Ore.) if he thinks "revolutionaries" have a right to expect financial assistance from "the society they seek to destroy," Dr. Hayakawa said no. But he added that "there are difficulties in applying this principle."

The testimony refers to amendments to higher education legislation enacted by the last Congress that require a university to cut off federal loans and grants to students and teachers convicted of a crime involving use of force, disruption, or seizure of school property so as to disrupt studies.

Some educators have criticized the amendments because they dilute an institution's autonomy in dealing with its students and because the rules are unfair to needy students. And, since the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the U.S. Office of Education have been ambivalent about enforcing the new provisions, college administrators have experienced confusion and the difficulties Dr. Hayakawa mentioned.

Can S. I. Hayakawa Save American Higher Education?

BY PHIL SEMAS

SAN FRANCISCO (CPS) - Samuel Ichiya Hayakawa is being held up as the saviour of American higher education as we know it.

Not only has he been lionized by the San Francisco press and Gov. Ronald Reagan, which was to be expected, but Time, Newsweek, the New York Times, and the Washington Post have all been singing his praises.

Most recently, the Gallup Poll said the acting president of San Francisco State College was the most respected educator in America in 1968 - a singular achievement since he did not come into prominence until after Thanksgiving.

What kind of man is S. I. Hayakawa? Is he really as successful as Gov. Reagan and the mass media would have us all believe? And is he the messiah who will show academic administrators how to deal with student unrest?

FIRST ACTION

Dec. 2 was the first day of classes at San Francisco State College under the Hayakawa administration. His first action that day was to rush out to a sound truck being used to urge students to join the strike and demand that he be given the microphone. When the students refused, he ripped out the wires on the truck.

That set off a scuffle in which Hayakawa lost the red tam-o-shanter which had become his trademark. He began hopping up and down, demanding his hat back, and screaming "I'm the president of the college.'

That was just the first of many indications that Hayakawa may not be entirely stable.

On Dec. 13, the bloodiest day of the campus conflict, he appeared smiling at his press conference, a red and white Hawaiian lei draped around his neck. He read some telegrams from his "fans," told reporters he was optimistic because he has "a good digestion," and that being president was "the most exciting thing that's happened to me since I was 10 years old and went on my first roller coaster ride." Few reporters who witnessed that day's bloody battle in which one policeman and several students were badly injured could have been as excited as President Hayakawa - or had his good digestion.

Given these rather intemperate actions and statements, why does the press continue to portray S.I. Hayakawa as a great man? Hayakawa is being praised primarily by editorial writers and columnists who have never been on the campus or seen Hayakawa in action. With the exception of a couple of local right-wing radio commendators, the reporters who have been covering the crisis have little respect for Havakawa.

PRESS TREATMENT

At his first press conference as president, Hayakawa was asked a tough question by a black reporter from KDIA, an all-black Oakland radio station. Instead of answering the question, Hayakawa demanded to see the reporter's

Senator Harrington Recommends De-centralized Administratrations

BOSTON (AP) - Sen. Kevin B. Harrington (D-Salem), co-author of the Willis Harrington Report on Higher Education, says the State college system is heading for "disaster" unless separate board of trustees are set up for some State colleges.

"Don't wait until one of our buildings on a state college is fire-bombed," he told the Committee on Education Monday.

The Willis Harrington report recommended a single board of trustees for 11 state colleges. But Harrington now says the pressure to decentralize college administration is too great.

Boston and Salem State Colleges would have separate trustees under his bill. His reference to firebombs came after he described recent turmoil at San Francisco State.

"We have one board of trustees trying to set up uniform standards and administer funds for the entire state," he said. He added that Salem State has 4000 students on its campus and predicted the Boston Branch of the Univ. of Mass. would soon require its own trustees instead of the "Amherst oriented trustees" who now oversee it as well as the Boston campus.

Rep. Michael J. Daley (D-Boston) asked that separate trustees be established for Boston, Salem, Bridgewater, Westfield, and Lowell State Colleges.

"These colleges have grown up," he said, "the young people in these State colleges can establish no sense of identity with an invisible board of trustees."

He predicted campus violence or unrest unless the legislature brought the administration closer to the student body.

Sen. James A. Kelly (D-Oxford) opposed both bills, calling them "self-defeating". He said it could lead to a situation where each State college could ask for their own set of trustees.

Rep. Joseph D. Early (D-Worc.) asked that Worcester State College be included in Daley's list of colleges that should have their own trustees.

A number of Harrington's former colleagues on the Willis-Harrington Commission and top higher education officials in the state claim that a bill he is sponsoring to create separate boards of trustees for Boston and Salem State Colleges is an attack on the very system he helped to launch.

Answering the charge that the proposed change would lead to destructive and wasteful competition, Harrington pointed out that any budget requests would still have to go through the Board of Higher Education, which could exercise the necessary control.

Sen. Kevin B. Harrington told the Committee on Education Monday that separate boards of trustees should be set up for some state colleges.

Israelis, Iraqis Disagree Over Fate of Israeli Jets

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Israeli planes went into action over Jordan Monday touching off rival Iraqi and Jordanian claims that the forces of each shot down two aircraft.

An Israeli spokesman in Tel Aviv denied that any planes were lost. "Two jets went into action today and two returned," he said.

A military spokesman in Baghdad said 14 Israeli jets struck at Iraqi forces of the Saladin Brigade in Jordan and said Iraqi ground fire brought down two planes aflame in Israeli-occupied Golan Heights. Baghdad radio said one Iraqi soldier was wounded slightly in the alleged attack.

About 20,000 Iraqi troops have been stationed in Jordan since the June 1967 war.

A Jordanian spokesman in Amman said three Israeli jets had circled over Jordanian positions in the Irbed district. He said groundfire downed one near Tiberias and the other on the Golan plateau.

At this point, Tel Aviv said only two jets had struck across the Jordan River and both had returned to the base.

The Israelis said their planes were sent over Jordan shortly after an army patrol was fired on near Neve Ur, a border settlement nine miles south of the Sea of Galilee.

The Czech Students: Anatomy of A Movement

By NICK JANKOWSKI

PRAGUE (CPS) - There are few similarities between the Czech student movement and the Movement in America. There is no war in Vietnam for the Czechs. They have a draft, but it does not bother them. Their educational system is archaic, but no one seems to mind. There are strong reasons for dropping out of Czech society, but no one does.

The most immediate and significant reason for these differences is the presence of the Russians. The reality of that presence pervades every move, every action by Czechoslovaks. For some students it is cause for action. Most recently, it meant suicide by fire for Jan Palach. For others, it is reason to remain quiet, to support "our leaders." The Czech student movement vacilates between these feelings.

YOUNG MOVEMENT

Their movement is young, born a year ago and making its debut into politics Nov. 17. That day is remembered in Czechoslovakia as International Students Day - the moment in history the Nazis closed the universities 29 years ago. In 1968, that day was the inception of a three-day national student strike.

It was the most significant political action by Czech students in twenty years.

The reasons for the November strike centered around frustration over the country's political situation and the desire of students to do something about it. Six weeks before that day the "Prague Radicals" began planning.

Dissatisfaction with the Dubcek regime had been growing since press credentials. Many other reporters who have asked unfriendly questions have been given similar treatment.

Hayakawa's most famous run-in with the press came when he was interviewed on KQED, the local educational television station. Before the interview, the station's news staff presented coverage of that day's events. Hayakawa then angrily attacked the reporters for having "reported my enemies but not my friends' and "trying to discredit my motives," suggested that they should be like other TV stations and not ask "hostile questions," and finally stormed off the program.

None of this seems very dignified for a college president, but all Hayakawa's idiosyncracies might be forgiven if he were an effective administrator who was moving to solve the problems of San Francisco State. He is not.

NO CONSULTATION

Hayakawa was appointed by the state college trustees without any consultation with faculty or students. He was chosen because he agreed with Reagan and the trustees that the college's problems were basically being caused by a few "anarchists" and that the campus should be kept open by any means necessary, including massive deployment of police force.

He, then, is a symbol of the impotence of the campus against the power of the trustees.

One would have expected that his first effort would have been to win the good graces of the faculty. Instead, despite repeated requests, he did not meet with the faculty senate until he had been in office for two weeks. He said he hadn't had time, yet he found time to consult almost daily with representatives of Gov. Reagan and the trustees.

When he did meet with the faculty senate it was not for discussion, but to lecture them for "deploring the method of my selection" instead of giving blanket support to his efforts to keep the school open. Later he appointed close friends to top administrative posts without any consultation with the faculty.

If Hayakawa had little support among the faculty, he was positively hated by the student strikers. One might have expected him to try to build bridges to the student government, the most moderate of the groups supporting the strike.

HITS STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Instead, he singled out the student government for special criticism, alluding to alleged irregularities (as yet unproven) in their election and misuse of the $400,000 budget under their control.

When the state attorney general's office finally investigated the student government's handling of its funds, they found only two possible irregularities; a $150 check used by a black student as partial payment on a gun (this, it turned out, was the student's salary check) and a $400 speaker's honorarium paid to the Rev. Cecil Williams, a local black leader who signed the check back over to the BSU. Hayakawa objected to this because it was more than he had ever gotten for a speech.

Even by Ronald Reagan's standards, Hayakawa cannot be considered a success as president. He has by no means restored order or the normal educational processes on the campus. In fact, things have gotten worse. Consider:

--When Hayakawa took over, most of the faculty were supporting President Robert Smith's administration. Today the American Federation of Teachers is on strike, only about half the faculty seem to be teaching their classes, and student attendance is only about 30 percent.

--When Hayakawa began telling people how he could speak for the non-white community, local black leaders, who stayed out of the crisis before, began pouring onto the campus to express their support for the students' demands.

--Violence escalated rapidly during the first two weeks of Hayakawa's administration and the escalation would have continued if the AFT picket line had not been so successful at keeping class attendance low.

NO PARADISE

The campus over which Hayakawa presides is by no means a paradise of truth, justice, and opportunity. Hayakawa arbitrarily denied tenure to two faculty members who had supported the strike, despite the recommendations of their departments, and talks seriously about "due process taking care of the radical student problem."

At San Francisco State College a girl can call a policeman a "bastard" and be arrested immediately, but Hayakawa can destroy private property (sound truck wires), a college employee can threaten a striking professor with an axe, or football players can beat up strikers - and there will be no arrests.

There is only one way that men like S. I. Hayakawa can be seen as saviors of higher education: by their repressive policies they may bring about a revolution that will result in some of the changes that are so badly needed.

Mrs. Green, who favors mandatory aid cutoff, took note that implementation of the policies has not followed congressional intent. "We may have to straighten this out," she said.

Dr. Hayakawa also outlined the situation on his campus, which is now quiet between semesters but recently has been under seize by militants and under guard by riot police.

Outside the hearing room after the morning session, Dr. Hayakawa was jeered by 10 George Washington University students who shouted "Fight White Racism" as he began a filmed interview. They were quickly hustled away by capitol police. A statement they had handed out called Dr. Hayakawa a "willing lackey of the racist state administration in California."

The controversial president came off sounding more liberal, rational, and reserved than he has in most of his west coast performances since he was named acting president eight weeks ago. He defended radical faculty members, saying "You cannot fire a professor because he is a radical. There is such a thing as academic freedom, you know."

He defined academic freedom as the right of teachers to teach and of students to learn, which he has enforced with "police presence" on the campus.

But, restoring order is only the first step in solving unrest, he said. "Several things must be accomplished if we are to end the current trend toward confrontation and violence. We must reassess many of our educational objectives and administrative systems. We must modernize quickly and on a vast scale to make the entire system more responsive to the times and to the needs of our young people." Discipline, he added, should be in the hands of students and faculty. "In a sense, the issues behind most present troubles are valid."

But Dr. Hayakawa criticized the hard-core student activists on campus, accusing them of "moral flabbiness" for "trying to obtain martyrdom on the cheap without suffering the consequences" because they want amnesty in advance. He credited the "skill and devotion" of the San Francisco police with keeping violence in January at a minimum. Clutching his plaid tam o'shanter that he had worn when he yanked wires from a loudspeaker during a campus rally recently, he blamed the mass media for making "dramatic action against authority" so attractive to young people.

Rep. William J. Scherle (R-Iowa), who introduced the aid cut-off amendment during floor debate to "put starch in the backbone of weak" administrators, lauded Dr. Hayakawa. "I only wish we had more presidents with guts like you in putting down these demonstrations and riots," he said.

UMass School of Education Dean Dwight W. Allen last Thursday invited the state's school superintendents to join the University in building "foundations for a new model of institutional education which recognizes and even capitalizes on the need for social relevance and continual change."

Addressing Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents members at a Shaker Farms Country Club luncheon meeting, Dr. Allen explained some of the changes now underway at the University School of Education.

"Since September all of our courses and all of our programs leading to degrees or credentials have been the subject of a school-wide planning effort," he said. At the heart of the changes is the notion of social relevance, he added, explaining that "We at UMass are trying to build programs which not only recognize the need for constant change but which would place educational institutions in a position to anticipate and foster needed reforms in society."

Crucial to any educational change is coordination of change in the three main educational areas: curriculum, teacher training and school organizational structure. "If we wish to change one we must pay close attention to the others," he noted.

Another key concept in educational innovation is the creation of alternatives. "In all three areas, and in all of the programs the school offers we hope to create a great diversity of possibilities to be implemented, evaluated, revised and tried again," he explained.

He stated that the UMass School of Education "must rely on the public schools and their expertise to aid us in revising and implementing any new alternatives that might be worthwhile, just as the schools may be able to rely on us for help in designing and testing new programs."

"Unless the mutual ambitions and ideas of the School of Education and the public schools are actively realized in a creative partnership, it is all too likely that we shall each remain isolated in our own separate worlds of theory on the one hand and practice on the other," he said.

Registry Explains Procedure For Obtaining Photo License

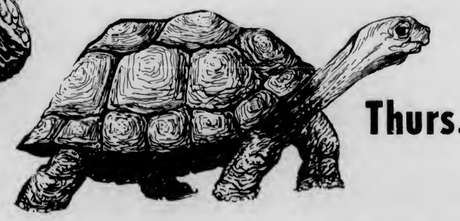
A form will be sent to each licensee by mail from the Registry of Motor Vehicles prior to the expiration date of present license. The fee will be noted on the renewal application form. The form must be filled out with all questions answered and signed in ink by the applicant. It must then be taken in person by the licensee to a Registry office.

An examiner will inspect the application and if it is in order, he will conduct an eye test.

If the applicant passes the eye test, the examiner will process the form. The applicant's photo will then be taken and will appear on the license which will be presented to him on the spot. The whole renewal process will require about five minutes at the Registry counter.



Licensees are advised not to make any alterations in the printed information on the face of the application they receive in the mail. They should report any needed changes to the Registry when they appear. However, changes of address should be noted on the reverse side and on the stub of the application.

Applicants who are not now restricted to wearing eyeglasses but who know that they do need them should wear them for the examination.

Richie Havens to be Featured At Winter Carni Coffee House

Richie Havens,perhaps the newest member of the folk-singing elite, who is heading towards even greater fame, will be the feature attraction of UMass WINTER CARNIVAL 1969 coffee house, "Snowed Inn."

Havens ill appear at "Snowed Inn" with Boston folk singer Jaime Brockett at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. on Saturday, February 15.

Richie Havens was born on January 21, 1941, in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn, New york. At fifteen he ventured into the world of music by organizing a group called the "Gospel Singers." He left home at sixteen and after a series of jobs ranging from Western Union messenger to yarn winder, moved to Greenwich Village where he sang for about three years, gaining a fervent following.

It wasn't until his first album, however, that he began to receive serious attention. His second record album, "Something Else Again," brought him important bookings around the country and established him as a truly significant performer.

Havens has appeared at both Fillmore East and West in New York City and San Francisco, Expo 67, and Cafe Au Go Go and the Village Theater in New York and on the Tonight Show.

Jaime Brockett, appearing with Havens, is well known on the Boston coffee house circuit. He was voted the best male performer and the best new performer in the sixth annual "Broadside Magazine" Boston folk music poll, taken last spring.

The admission price for either show at "Snowed Inn" is $2.00. Tickets are on sale at the UMass Student Union box office.

RICHIE HAVENS will be the feature attraction of WINTER CARNIVAL 1969, which opens on Sunday, February 16. Havens is scheduled to appear with Boston folksinger Jamie Brockett on Saturday, February 15 at 7 and 10 p.m.

McGovern Demands Reduced Offensive

WASHINGTON (CPS-TELEX) - Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) Monday reiterated his call for an immediate end to all military offensive operations in Vietnam as he opened a "Mobilization" of Concerned Clergy and Laymen.

He declared that "Our present military strategy is needlessly killing young Americans and wasting billions of dollars.

Senator McGovern made two military suggestions: consolidation of U. S. troops in easily defended positions and an immediate reduction of manpower from 500,000 to 250,000.

The Senator stated "We have starved crucial sectors of the American society to keep the military animal well-fed. . . .the shortage of talented dynamic teachers and professors takes a heavy toll in American classrooms."

Worse yet, he said, the threat of the anti-ballistic missile system is so great that if it were realized it would deplete the budget to the extent the war annually does now.

Part I
What Direction For Higher Education?

BY CHARLES MUSCATINE

(Editor's note: From the turmoil at Berkeley came the faculty report, "Education at Berkeley," which in turn has become the most hailed (and criticized) document in higher education. Here, in an article written originally for IBM, the man who headed the committee that wrote it, gives his views on what is wrong with the universities and what can be done about it.)

The student disturbances at Berkeley in 1964-65 were soon recognized by the nation's best university administrators to be something more that Berkeley's peculiar problem. Along with the prayerful shudder and the hope that "it can't happen 'ere" came the realization that it might, And it did. Demonstrations, sit-ins, teach-ins, the growth of student "activist' organizations, and the emergence here and in Great Britian of nationwide student movements have made it perfectly clear that the Berkeley incidents were only early and spectacular symptoms of dislocations and tensions in our whole system of higher education.

While this is widely understood in the academic community, there are still many trustees, alumni and interested citizens who cling to the simpler and more comforting idea that the commotion on campus has been brought about mainly by a handful of bearded "kooks" with radical political aims. If the administrators of our colleges would expel these miscreants - so the argument goes - peace would be restored: "If they don't want to learn, they have no business on campus.'

But look a little deeper into the situation - listen for a moment to what the students are saying - and you will find that political turmoil feeds on educational failure. Look behind the vocal and photogenic characters who seem always in front of the cameras. There you will find a great number of clean-shaven and well-scrubbed young people, many of them with no particular political ideology, who have also come to feel that they don't like what the university has to offer. No one would want to expel them nor have they anywhere else to go but to another campus with similar defects. It is their answering sympathy and their frequently overt support for the activists that make possible a student movement and signals that something is massively wrong with the educational establishment we have created.

Granting that campus protest is often directed against broader social defects, we cannot cure the disease in any case by trying to remove its gaudier symptoms. Insofar as the university is defective and improvable, we had better listen to students. The alternative, already discernible in some institutions, is to let it degenerate into an expensive four-year detention camp for those of our young people who lack the spirit to object.

The majority of students who want university reform are not asking for pie in the sky. The wildest schemes come mainly from a few who are interested in radical education reform to implement radical politics. But the majority of activist students, including some of our most notable rebels, see it the other way. Student politics, they feel, is their only means of exerting pressure to improve their own education. What they want is very much what we should want for them: an education that is relevant to the lives they are going to lead and the problems they are going to face; an education that is useful, interesting, self-developing and lasting.

Much of college education does not tend in this direction. Students who do not march or "sit-in" express their disappointment in a high dropout rate - which would be higher were it not for the draft - and in a restless mobility, moving from campus to campus in search of an education. Without denigrating a number of excellent schools, one can still assert that American college students find far too few of their needs and desires satisfied by the present curriculum. While they need recognition as individuals and training as independent thinkers, they get little personal guidance. What they do get is a standardized set of lecture courses and recitations, where the material is often boring, the student anonymous, and the professor either out of touch with his profession or represented by an underpaid, overworked assistant. Even students who might accept this kind of university, this mechanized training-ground for the upper reaches of the labor market, and who might placidly endure a lack of mental and personal cultivation, are unhappy - disturbed by the increasing pressure for grades instead of learning, and by the galloping obsolescence of the information they are asked to memorize. Small wonder that many suffer nervous breakdowns (10 percent of the students on one large campus sooner or later appear at the psychiatric clinic!).

Can anything be done to improve our universities? If so, what? Fortunately, our best administrators have already launched an unprecedently deep examination of the problems in a multitude of studies, conferences and experiments. In the remainder of this article I shall attempt to sketch what the university of the future may be like, as its outlines emerge from current thinking.

It may be called the new university even though it will preserve distinct similarities to the old - it will have been gradually and consciously redesigned to face three great new facts of its existance: (1) the emergence of knowledge as power in our society, and thus of the university as a primary center of power; (2) the accelerating rise in our educational expectations for all, along with the increase in population; (3) the communications revolution and the inescapable oneness of the world.

A "new generation of students" in the midst of this new environment is apparent to almost everyone. A new generation of professors may be less apparent. As sociologist Daniel Bell recently observed, the professor is now in the center of a "post-industrial" society which places the heaviest reliance on his intellectual capacity for innovation, consultation and guidance.

In a single recent month the Berkeley faculty gave up to Washington a governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It had previously contributed the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and numberless part-time advisers. Along with the recruiting pressure from business and industry, the professor today - especially in the natural or social sciences - faces socially legitimate demands on his time that were inconceivable only a generation ago. Even "pure' research can become rapidly involved in the welfare of our cities, our nation, of the human race. As a result, the old ivory-tower ideal of detached, disinterested, campus-bound, exclusively student-oriented scholarship is extremely difficult to attain. Although the new professor has a new command of theoretical knowledge and practical experience to share with students, he has much less time to do it.

Teaching, particularly undergraduate teaching, therefore suffers neglect. But there is no promise of reform in the current cry to "get the teachers back to teaching" if one implies the usual classroom routine. Research and public service have undeniable social claims, and it is unlikely that the best of our scholars who enjoy increasing prestige, power and mo bility, will ever again be within the reach of mere administrative coercion. Rather, the new university will have to work out a new concept of teaching that brings professors and students to gether less routinely and relentlessly, but with greater meaning for both.

As to the problem of numbers, more than half of our high school graduates will in the near future be going on to college. Our present university structure - designed long ago for a small, elite student body and a campus-bound faculty - is simply not geared to meet the challenge to quality posed by these numbers. It is not merely a matter of financial resources, though they will have to be drastically increased. It also involves the increasing variety of students and the variety of things they know and think and need. In a world visible and available as it has never been before, more of the same old thing, even if we could pay for it, would not be enough.

What the new university will teach will be powerfully dictated by the new condition of knowledge itself. Most fields of natural and social science are now changing so rapidly that information and technical procedures become obsolete almost before they can be taught. There are already whole groups of professors in our technical faculties who are themselves obsolete as scholars. The new university will be governed by an axiomatic drive to withstand obsolescence. Periodic retooling of both alumni and faculty will be common. New subjects and whole new fields and departments will appear in (while others disappear from) the catalogue. But more revolutionary will be the attempt to beat obsolescence by emphasizing whatever kinds of learning survive change.

UNSTABLE FACTS

Emphasizing principles rather than facts has been fashionable educational theory for a long time; but it has been scanted in practice by the seductive short-term salability of facts and by our typically American preference for the concrete and measurable over the intangible. Now that facts are becoming less stable, we will be freer to get to the roots of the habit of learning itself. A new kind of university curriculum, once confined to a few small and expensive "progressive" colleges with hand-picked students, will become possible - indeed, necessary.

No responsible scholar will scorn the best available facts, but the new curriculum will eschew "coverage" of a field in favor of emphasizing its deepest conceptual grounds. These may be revealed by philosophical analysis of a field, or by special applications of its discipline to reveal the range and interrelationships of its methods. The new curriculum will thus discard the "survey" course in favor of the "problems" approach. Survey courses have a fatal tendency to be superficial: They supply outmoded answers rather than live questions, and tend to offer the student a smorgasbord that is stale and low in nourishment. The problems approach - in which the scholar takes his students into a real problem of current interest to himself - more readily interests the professor in teaching and gives the undergraduates a sense of what a real scholar or scientist does. Instead of memorizing some predigested and packaged simplification called Introduction to Psychology or Economics or World History or City Planning, the student learns how a psychologist or economist or historian or city planner goes about his business. He becomes at once aware of the difficult but fascinating interrelations of knowledge.

Another basis of the new curriculum will therefore be a new respect for our increasing knowledge of the process of personality development and the nature of motivation. The university will follow and depend upon new developments in the primary and secondary schools to lead the student as early as possible to self-respect, and to a capacity for self-motivation, self-direction and independent discovery.

A third curricular basis will be the candid thirst of the new student for straight and honest answers, for a sense of real participation in the world's work. The new curriculum will offer him a whole range of opportunities to collect data, to check theories against observation, to expand his experience. It will offer these opportunities not only in the conventional field-study subjects such as geology and biology, but in social sciences, engineering, law, fine arts, and in a range of educationally valuable activities - some including travel or work for pay - which at present cannot even be administered or evaluated through conventional university machinery. Stop the Murder

The barbaric hangings of members of the Jewish community in Iraq has shown the world once again the state of terror and insecurity in Jews living in Arab countries.

Since 1948 Jews in Arab nations have been persecuted and forced into abject poverty. Now, with the Arab mobs in Baghdad calling for blood, the specter of genocide has risen. The world, as it has recoiled in shock from the hangings, should also remember that in World War II many Arab leaders collaborated with the Nazis against the Allies. Now it seems possible that Jews in Arab lands may be subjected to an "ultimate solution." Even so fierce a "hawk" as Moshe Dayan has stated that Israel must not retaliate against Iraq lest the entire Jewish population of that nation be murdered.

The free world stood by once, in World War II, and let Jew-haters destroy the Jewish community of Europe. It turned a deaf ear to the plight of refugees and let the Nazis slaughter six million Jews. To-day the United Nations can stave off a possible repetition of this atrocity in the Middle East.

The Jews of Iraq, Egypt, Syria and other Arab nations have no loyalty to these countries which are bent on the eradication of Israel and Jews. Naturally, the Arab governments regard the Jewish community as disloyal. This dangerous situation could easily be solved if the U. N. would organize the removal of all Jews in Arab nations to Israel. Israel is committed to accept all Jews fleeing persecution, and is the only nation in the world, except America, where man need feel no fear because he is a Jew. The Arabs would lose nothing, since the Jews are not an integral part of the economy or national character of their states. The danger of genocide would be removed, and the free world would not have the onus of another Holocaust on its shoulders

Sheriff Nixon

WASHINGTON - At his first Cabinet meeting last week, President Nixon - the most powerful figure in the Western world, with an awesome array of responsibilities - pointedly took time out to talk about law and order in the District of Columbia.

The crime-ridden capital city, he told his Cabinet, ought to be the law-and-order showcase of the nation.

Moreover, Mr. Nixon did more than that. He ordered staffers to draft a hurry-up anti-crime package for the District which may well carry a price tag of $1 million, then disclosed at his first press conference Monday that it would be ready by the end of the week.

Although details are still being ironed out, faster and surer justice is at the heart of the Nixon program: more U. S. District Court judges, more Assistant U. S. Attorneys, a major reform in bail-and-bond procedures.

The explanation for Mr. Nixon's devoting so much time to law enforcement in a single city can be found in the 1968 Presidential campaigns, where both candidates - but particularly Mr. Nixon - some times seemed to be running for sheriff. Candidate Nixon (and other Republicans) specifically harped on crime in Washington, implying that the Johnson administration was to blame.

Now, with bank robberies here running at an unprecidented pace, the President is obliged to move quickly.

Contributing to this haste were the protest demonstrations of the extremist "crazies" of the peace movement that marred Mr. Nixon's inauguration. He was dismayed and angered at the catcalls, sticks and stones directed against his motor cade. While saying nothing publicly, he made no secret to White House insiders that he regards such demonstrations as unconscionable.

A Day Lost

For the past two years, something has given me great cause for aggravation. The subject of my distress is registration day. The lost day of every semester, when we have to "hurry up and wait" in long lines amidst scores of other crusaders, who prepare to launch a large offensive every forty-five minutes on a small band of clerks, barricaded behind small tables and armed only with rainbow colored cards jammed into a manila firing envelope. Each envelope containing such necessary ammo as grades, schedules, lab charges and a pink card, which must be signed by the attacker to make his capture complete.

It has occured to me, that we could eliminate the wear on the gym floor, hours of clean up for the janitors and a complete day of the semester, to say nothing of an hour of aggravation for every student on this campus, if the university were to discover, that all of the cards packed into that manila folder could just as easily have been mailed out beforehand. For those interested in returning to our campus the little pink cards could be inaguarated to abolish this "lost day" and save it for another day of work or play at our own homes.

Praise For Nixon

To the editor:

The editorial of January 30th was quite typical of the common UMass anti-Nixonite. He is President for ten days, and is already accused of being no good. Blunt? Yes, quite. But my bluntness does not compare with the outrageous, prejudiced attitudes of many anti-Nixonites with whom I have encountered, while at school, I never viewed one television campaign address made by the President which was not rudely and continually interrupted by hisses and boos of gloating "students" who sought to hold everything from appearance to a slight slip of the tongue against him, while he talked for a half hour without podium and notes. But when Vice President Humphrey came on the tube, not a sound was heard--is it that the Nixonites were considerate???

And for dissenters who object to the President's choice for a running mate, just look at whom President Johnson chose! And before him, look at whom Kennedy picked!! What I seek is that every American give our President his deserved fair chance. And mean it.

More On Jello

To the editor,

I read Donald Epstein's letter to the Swingshifter in the Registration Day issue of the MDC, and am thinking of his comment and other remarks about dining common's food. It seems that everyone always notices a superabundance of jello. I would just like to say that I've eaten almost every meal at the dining commons for three semesters and I don't ever remember having eaten any jello there. I always seem to find enough else to choose from that I don't ever notice its presence.

On Exhibition at Smith College Library First Couple Woodcuts and Engravings

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - An exhibit, "Adam and Eve Woodcuts and Engravings,' is now on view through Feb. 15 at Smith College's William Allan Neilson Library. It is open to the public.

Bibles, herbals, primars, histories and other volumes from the college's rare book collection have been opened to display illustrations of "the father and mother of mankind.'

Three incunubula are included in the exhibit: two editions of the "Nuremberg Chronicle' ' and "Buch der Kunst," an illustrated moralistic treatise printed in 1491. Incunabula are books printed from 1450 through 1500, the first 50 years of printing.

The first man and woman are shown on either side of a stylized apple tree, each holding a forbidden apple. The wily serpent is entwined around the trunk of the tree with an apple in its mouth and a tiny crown on its head. The second scene shows an angry angel chasing Adam and Eve out of the Garden of Eden. Both illustrations are delicately touched with color.

Infirmary To Supply Rides For Southwest Students

Beginning today, transportation will be available between the Southwest Area and the Infirmary for students who find the trip difficult because of illness. This service is being made available for a trial period of three months in response to student request and will be resumed in the fall if it seems to be meeting a real need.

Trips will begin at J.F.K. lobby at approximately 7:50 a.m. and continue at approximately 20 minute intervals until 9:50 a.m. In the afternoon, the same service will be available between 2 and 4 p.m. Patients at the Infirmary may also use this service to return from the Infirmary to the Southwest Area.

This is scheduled, not emergency, transportation and is authorized at present only between Southwest and the Infirmary. Campus police will continue, as in the past, to answer emergency calls.

American Students Invade Europe In Search of Summer Employment

American students in increasing numbers are invading Europe each summer, not to travel as tourists, but to work.

The students - from colleges in all parts of the country - work because they want to meet people, learn a foreign language and simply get to know a country as it really is.

Bruce Johnson, a Stanford senior, worked for a computer management company in Germany last summer. "It was one of the most valuable experiences I've had,' he says. "When you travel through a country you see the face put forward to tourists. When you work in an office, you get to know people. You discover what a culture is really like."

Bruce admits he had a difficult time adjusting to German work schedules the first week. "They work steadily and with less frivolity than Americans. But once you get used to the pace you can accomplish a great deal. I made a point to take sandwiches to work every day and I made some wonderful friends over lunch.'

To help American students get jobs in Europe, the International Work Exchange has prepared a directory listing job opportunities in each country and telling students how to arrange jobs. The publication, which contains no advertising, is available for $3 from the Publications' Division, International Work Exchange, Post Office Box 240, Palo Alto, California 94302.

In addition to listing specific job opportunities, the book also supplies information about organizations which arrange jobs for students. One popular program, for example, provides a student with a guaranteed job, room and board , and air transportation to Europe in one package deal.

Ross Allen, who edited the European job directory, says he contacted more than 100 diplomatic personnel throughout the world in preparing the book, "We have developed what we believe is the most comprehensive guide available to summer jobs in Europe.'

"We have summarized on a country-by-country basis the visa and work permit requirements, the types of jobs available and who to contact to get a job. We don't guarantee our book will get anyone a job, but we believe it should be a tremendous help to anyone unfamiliar with the European job market.'

Diane Wilson, a University of California coed who spent a summer as a secretary in London, says: "There is a special satisfaction in holdin g down a job in a foreign country that you don't get working in your own home town. You really feel independent. You know you've accomplished something. And . . . well, I don't think there is really any other way to truly understand a country."

MLK Social Action Council Will Present Open Meeting

Approximately three-quarters of a million dollars for endowment of salaries of professors and instructors has been willed to Mount Holyoke College by Lavinia Rose Wilson, Class of 1901, who died on Oct. 2, 1968, Acting President Meribeth E. Cameron announced.

A native of Granville, Mass., Mrs. Wilson lived in Hartford for many years. Her husband, the late Albion B. Wilson, was a graduate of Dartmouth and was a Hartford lawyer. The residue of Mrs. Wilson's estate is to be divided equally between Mount Holyoke and Dartmouth Colleges.

Mrs. Wilson was a descendant of Jonathan Rose, one of Granville's first settlers. Following the death of her husband, she published a history of Granville, written by her husband.

Greeks Presenting New Image Stressing Academic Growth and Cultural Involvement

Plans for Fraternity and Sorority Park have been progressing very rapidly over the past few months. Most of the construction on the new houses will start in the early spring. As of now there are twelve houses that will be finished by next January. Most of the houses will cost between 250 to 400 thousand dollars.

Along with the growth structurarally, the fraternities have grown in many other ways. The Pledge Programs of the different houses are being revamped from the traditional hazing and Hell Week approach to a more sane and more relevant to the fraternal ideals of brotherhood. Instead of hazing there will be more emphasis on scholarship, social training and individualism. "Hell Week" will be replaced with a "Help Week' that will compose of services that will help in the betterment of the house, the University, and the community. The Greeks have used their time to help such causes as the Heart Fund, Muscular Dystrophy, the ABC Program and others.

On a more academic level the different houses have invited distinguished faculty and administration members to discuss the problems that confront the nation and the University.

Because of these and other developments, the image of noninvolvement, which in the past characterized the Greek system, is dying. The progressive thinking and vitality of the houses working together has opened up a new and better life for the fraternity system at the University.

Smith Presenting Forum Of Religious Expression

An avant-garde dancer will be among participants in a "New Vistas in Religious Expression" forum at Smith College.

Frances Alenikoff, dance soloist and choreographer, will perform a dance titled " 'My heart lifted my feet and I danced' - Worship in Dance" in Sage Hall, room 2, at 4 p.m., Feb. 5. The forum, sponsored by the students' Religious Association, began yesterday and will conclude Wednesday. It is open to the public.

Miss Alenikoff has toured fo. consecutive seasons since 1959 in the United States, Canada and South America. On Broadway, she choreographed and directed the dances performed by the Aviv Dancers in the Josephine Baker Show. Off Broadway, she choreographed Stravinsky's "L'Historie du Soldat" and danced the role of the princess. She has appeared on television in the "Today" show, "Look up and Live," "This is Our Faith" and "Pacific Panoramo."

"The Bread is Rising - and Other Recipes for the Future of the Church" will be the topic of the Rev. Richard Mann of Emmaus House in New York City. He will speak at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 3, in Wright Hall on the ideals, vision, style of life of Emmaus House and on the future of the Church.

Rabbi Jack Bemporad will lecture in Wright Hall at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 4. His talk, "Towards a Contemporary Liturgy," will deal with some of the recent innovations in Reform Judaism.

Director of the Commission on worship of the Department of Adult Education of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, he was born in Italy. Rabbi Bemporad was a Fulbright scholar at the University of Rome and ordained a rabbi in 1959.

The final event of the forum will be a panel discussion held in Sage Hall at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 5. Members of the Five-College Community will serve on the panel with Father Mann.

A good cry cleanses the soul

After all is shed and done, your soul may be saved ... but your contacts need help. They need Lensine. Lensine is the one contact lens solution for complete contact care: preparing, cleansing, and soaking.

There was a time when you needed two or more different lens solutions to properly prepare and maintain your contacts. No more. Lensine, from The Murine Company, makes caring for contact lenses as convenient as wearing them.

Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the eye, reducing tearful irritation. Why? Because Lensine is a compatible, "isotonic" solution, very much like your eye's natural fluids.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated the improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and in some cases can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Lensine . . . the *soul*ution for complete contact lens care. Made by the Murine Company, Inc.

Texas Congressman to Speak At Smith on Discrimination

Congressman Henry B. Gonzales, U. S. Representative for the 20th congressional district of Texas, will deliver the 13th annual Alice M. Holden lecture at Smith College.

"Across the Tracks: the Third Minority" will be the subject of his lecture. He will speak at 8 p.m. next Tuesday in Sage Hall. The public is invited to attend.

Gonzales became the first citizen of Mexican descent in 110 years to be seated in the Texas Senate when he was elected to that body in 1956.

With another antisegregation senator, Abraham Kazen, Jr., he attracted world attention with the longest filibuster in the history of Texas. The two senators, speaking against ten "race" bills, held the floor alternately for a total of 36 hours. Eight of the bills were defeated.

Gonzales first entered Congress through a specia l election to fill an unexpired term in 1961. He was re-elected in 1962, 1964 and 1966. In 1967, the Legislature of the State of Texas reapportioned the districts so that the 20th district was reduced to the heart of San Antonio.

Born in San Antonio, Gonzales is descended from early Spanish settlers in northern Mexico. According to a 1958 article about him in Coronet, "During his boyhood, Gonzales had ample opportunity to see racial discrimination in action. He was called a 'greaser' and barred from many places reserved 'for whites only'."

Because of the Depression he had to leave the University of Texas just short of receiving a B.A. degree in engineering. Later he was graduated from St. Mary's University School of Law where he received a n L.L.B. degree. Instea d of practicing law, he took a job as juvenile probation officer. After military service in World War II, he became chief probation officer of Bexar County, Tex.

The Alice M. Holden Lectureship was established in 1952 in memory of Miss Holden, an alumna of the college and, for 29 years, a member of the department of government at Smith. It brings to Smith College each year an outstanding person who has made a singular contribution to American political life.

Professor to Talk On Rousseau, Marx

The influence of Marx and Rousseau upon today's society will be the subject of a lecture at Amherst College next Tuesday. Dr. Iring Fetcher, Heuss Visiting Professor at the New School for Social Research, will speak on "criticism of Modern Society and Ideals of Community in Rousseau and Marx" at 7:30 p.m. in the Babbott Room.

Fetcher will attempt to show that much of Marxism takes its roots from the French philosopher and writer Jean Jacques Rousseau, and that these ideas are still alive today.

Fetcher, one of Germany's most distinguished professors of political philosophy, is from the University of Frankfurt. He has written o n Rousseau (primarily in German), published extensively on contemporary politics and on Marxism and has edited Marx's works. He is currently editing a history of political philosophy.

Mount Holyoke Trustees Vote In Favor of Open House Policy

The Mount Holyoke College Board of Trustees voted two resolutions Sunday at a special meeting in New York City that will lead to changes in certain social rules which the students have sought for many months.

The resolutions grant students permission to entertain male guests in the residence halls during the open hours of dormitories and authorize the establishment of a Faculty-Student Committee to suggest regulations for the use of alcoholoc beverages on campus which are consistent with the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and which the students will take the responsibility of enforcing.

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Meeting

Tuesday, 6:30 p.m.

S.W. Office

According to Acting President Meribeth E. Cameron, the resolutions resulted after trustees were persuaded that the AD HOC Committee on Student Affairs, consisting of faculty and students, and set up by the Trustees on Nov. 9, 1968, had made a thorough analysis of the questions involved and had carefully weighed the alternatives; further that their recommendations were both wise and appropriate for this community.

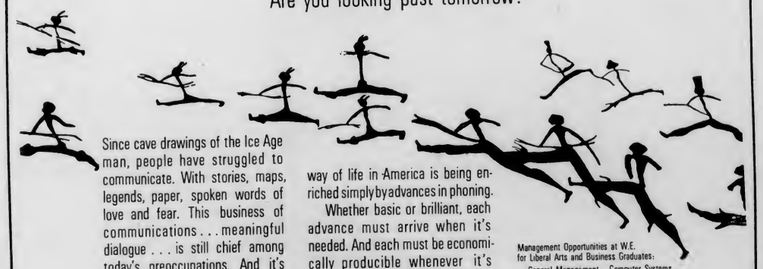
In recommending that the maximum time for visiting hours for male guests be the open hours of dormitories and that, within those limits, each dormitory determine its own visiting hours by a 2/3 vote, the Committee noted:

"1. We believe this alternative provides the optimum way of giving a student a personal and private place in which to entertain guests while engendering the minimum inconvenience and invasion of privacy to roommates and dormitory mates.

"2. We believe that the Mount Holyoke student has the maturity and judgement to apportion her time effectively between social and academic activities.

"3. We believe that the dormitories will set responsible parietal hours which will promote the best interests of the students both socially and academically."

It also noted the following specific advantages:



1. The atmosphere of the campus would be more attractive for male guests and thereby the possibilities for successful campus social activities would be increased, and

2. There would be the possibility of eliminating the weekday-weekend dichotomy.

In reporting on the consumption of alcoholic beverages, the AD HOC Committee on Student Affairs pointed out that in the short time available, it considered it unwise to choose among the various alternatives it discussed and to develop a detailed set of regulations.

"The Committee believes that student sentiment should be further tested before details are formulated. Furthermore, the Faculty has important interests in the area of social regulations and should be further consulted. It is responsible for the maintenance of standards of behavior appropiate to an educational environment.

Are you looking past tomorrow?

Since cave drawings of the Ice Age man, people have struggled to communicate. With stories, maps, legends, paper, spoken words of love and fear. This business of communications . . . meaningful dialogue . . . is still chief among today's preoccupations. And it's one we at Western Electric, indeed the entire Bell System have worked at since 1882.

Cable, microwaves and satellites have brought nations face-to-face across continents and oceans. Closed-circuit TV helps educators penetrate barriers of slum and tar-paper shacks. In fact, our whole way of life in America is being enriched simply by advances in phoning.

Whether basic or brilliant, each advance must arrive when it's needed. And each must be economically producible whenever it's needed. At Western Electric we specialize in production and logistics. It's our job in the Bell System ...to help men overcome communication barriers with dependable service at low cost. To this end we need an ever increasing number of new fresh ideas. Your ideas. Ideas that look past tomorrow.

From Prague:

August. Students and the general public were upset over the secret meetings with the Russians, the witholding of information on negotiations, and the threat of increased censorship in the press. Others were disturbed that Smrkovsky, one of the eight members of the Central Committee of the Czechoslovak Communist Party and a "progressive," was not invited to attend the meeting in Kiev between the Committee and the Russians. People felt a forboding in the air.

MOTIVATIONS CLEAR

The motivations for student action were clear. The methods were not so. Prague radicals opted for a mass demonstration through the streets of Prague, Bratislava, and other university towns. More conservative students hesitated about a demonstration because of the warnings issued by Dubcek and fear of confrontation with the Czech police. They argued that with a blood bath, the government would likely crumble and the Russians would inevitably step in with their personal replacements. The Prague radicals accepted these objections against a demonstration.

Simple acceptance of the reasons against a demonstration hardly seems very radical. But the values and definitions used in America do not fit so neatly into Czechoslovakia. The situations are immensely different. The enemy of the Czech students is not as much a repressive, unresponsive government as is the case in America. Rather, the enemy is Reality. So there is not the same eagerness to engage in open conflict with the government. And the consequences of a tangle with the Reality were noted in August.

Some people were dissatisfied with Dubcek, Svoboda, and crew. At the time of the strike a minority student faction was pushing for a public denouncement of these men. The effort failed to rally much support for issuance of a declaration, but it did clear the way for a later differentation between personalities and issues.

Earlier this year, at the height of the Smrkovsky controversy, Prague radicals concluded that he was not worth a strike. But the issues underlying his removal were more important. These issues - the clandestine maneuver to oust a governmental official and the unannounced agreements with the Russians over the management of the country - were clearly worth a fight.

As it turned out, on Jan. 13, Smrkovsky voluntarily accepted a lower level post, in deference to a progressive Slovak, Peter Colotka, for the position of chairman.

PROFS BACKED STRIKE

Professors almost unanimously backed the strike, at minimum through silent assension, but often through participation and leadership. The groovy ones conducted "anti-seminars." As expected, the medical school professors and the aging professors from other departments were reluctant to risk their positions and their "futures" through participation in such an affair. As for administrators, they do not exist as such in Czechoslovak universities; professors divide up the tasks.

The most significant cooperation was between the students and the workers. The 900,000-strong Metal Workers Union issued a supportive statement of the students' ten demands. There were token work stoppages throughout the country. Some factories blew their whistles to indicate support. Since the strike, this worker-student alliance has strengthened into what may become an open opposition force to the Czechoslovak government.

American students have never developed a working relationship with governmental authorities. Nor have Czech students. But they have at least communicated with their country's top leaders. Student representatives met frequently with Dubcek during the strike. On Jan. 3, students met with Slovak Communist chief Gustav Husak, the man behind the anti-Smrkovsky campaign.

There is a semblance of student unity in Czechoslovakia. Much of it comes from the common enemy. It also springs from absence of a political history. There is, for example, no Young Socialist Alliance, no SDS, no Trotsky groups, no DuBois clubs.

Even without ideological factions, there are clear differences in approach tactics. Ivan Reus, vice chairman of the student Youth Organization, is conservative by Prague standards. He was opposed to a demonstration during November. He was opposed to a strike over Smrkovsky. And he stressed after Jan Palach's immolation that he is opposed to open conflict with the government.

SUICIDE NOW

The movement at that moment lost its vehicle for protest. But there are always other vehicles; the fifteen-member student suicide ring is that vehicle now.

Americans reading the Western press may have noticed a surprising absence of violence from most of the actions occuring during August. One British pacifist weekly, PEACE NEWS, exaggerated this phenomenon to the extent that the Czech people were made to look like the long-awaited nonviolent army.

NO COMPROMISE

Prague radicals, on the other hand, initially argued for a mass demonstration in spite of government threats; they were not enthusiastic about Smrkovsky as a leader, but took strong issue with the procedure for his removal. Prague radicals have been active in the creation of an external pressure force to push for their demands; they are opposed to what they call the "unity of compromise."

The Czech student movement is a movement yet untouched by ideology. There is no Marx, Lenin, Debray, or Guevara on the shelves of the political students. Mao Tse-tung is not liked, let along appreciated or read. There is one copy of Marcuse's ONE DIMENSIONAL MAN in the country. The absence of work, by western ideologues, is somewhat understandable in a communist country. But more appalling is the scarcity of translated material about the Russian Revolution, about Marxism, about communist revolutions.

There is little student interest in Cuba or the Cuban revolution. No posters of Che Guevara in every other student room as at American universities. Almost no one knows of Fidel's speech of August 23, approving the Russian invasion as "historically necessary." The Cuban Culture Center stands unstoned in the heart of Prague, English translations of Fidel's speech displayed in the window.

CLOSED COUNTRY

Part of the answer to this vacuum of literature and information is that Czechoslovakia, until recently, has been a closed country. Travel abroad was tightly controlled prior to January 1968. People also react negatively to things forced upon them, so it is understandable that grammar school catechisms on Marx and history time tables on Russia do not remain for long in the memory.

Czechoslovakia is a small country, too - smaller than Illinois in area. Smallness often produces egocentrism. Czechs thought of themselves as the "belly button of the world" between January and August. "They were the ones going to the moon," in Kavel Kovanda's works. That centricity vanished after August. Now People, especially students, are going through a period of reflection and a-looking around.

What tomorrow will bring depends on the strength and determination of the new student-worker-intellectual alliance, on the middle-of-the-road Czechoslovak government, on the pervading Russian Reality, and finally, on the students who have decided to die. Part of the problem is maintaining the momentum of the people, keeping them from returning to the apathy common before January 1968. Jan Palach re-energized the Czechs for the moment. For how long.....no one knows.

"The Devil-God and Dr. Faustus" Performed This Week-end at Smith

"The Devil-God and Dr. Faustus," an adaptation of Christopher Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus," will be presented by the department of theatre and speech of Smith College on Feb. 7, 8, and 9 in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre in the Center for the Performing Arts on the Smith campus.

The production is under the direction of Martin Kushner, a graduate of the Yale School of Drama, presently teaching Improvisational Theatre and Direction Techniques at Smith. It will employ actor training methods developed by Jerzy Grotowski at his highly acclaimed Polish Laboratory Theatre. The graduate acting students at Smith, who play the major roles, have been working with gymnastics, acrobatics, and new resources in physical and vocal expression just for this production. It promises to be quite unlike any theatre you have ever seen.

Performances will be at 8 p.m. Friday, 2 and 8 p.m. on Saturday and 2 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets are $1.50 and are available by mail order from Jan. 27 through Jan. 31 by writing to the Theatre Box Office, Theatre Building, Smith College, Northampton, Mass. 01060. Mail orders should include a stamped self-addressed envelope and a check or money order payable to Smith College.

Box office hours for the purchase of tickets by phone or in person are 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 4 to 5:45 p.m., Feb. 3 through Feb. 8 and one hour before all performances.

New Art Building For Mt. Holyoke

A three-story $2 million art building will soon be a reality on the Mount Holyoke College campus.

The Board of Trustees has authorized the College to proceed with working drawings for the 45,650 square foot structure and it is expected that groundbreaking will take place early after Commencement. Tentative date for completion is September 1970.

Amherst Increases Tuition, Room, Board For Next Semester

Amherst College has raised its overall fee for the academic year 1969-70 by $200. Beginning in September 1969, the comprehensive charge for tuition, fees, room, and board, will be $3,400.

President Calvin H. Plimpton explained that "ever increasing costs" will raise the college's budget from this year's $8,800,000 to $9,211,000 for next year.

Cited as partially responsible for the increased budget, were a new music center, a scientific center to be opened early this year and expanded use of the computer center for students, as well as for the faculty and administration.

Plimpton stated, "The Trustees assure those students now receiving scholarships and other forms of financial aid that future assistance will be adjusted to compensate for these increased charges. There may also be parents whose sons do not now receive aid but whose budgets will be affected by this increase; they, too, may apply for financial assistance."

University Health Service Offers Marriage Counseling

Marriage counseling is now available to students through the Mental Health Service. This is in response to the results of a survey of married students and their spouses which showed that a significant number expresses a need for help with both individual and marital problems. It is now possible for spouses who are not students to receive help for marital difficulties if the husband and wife come in together.

The survey revealed that over 5% of the respondents said they had marital problems for which they needed help. An additional 10% indicated that they possibly might need help. Wives, both student and non-student, expressed a somewhat greater need than did the husbands.

In addition to individual appointments for each couple, group marriage counseling will be held on Monday evenings. For an appointment, call the Mental Health Service at 545-2337.

MHC Trustees Approve Black Culture Center

The establishment of a Black Culture Center for the Mount Holyoke community was authorized by the Board of Trustees of the College at a special meeting in New York City Sunday afternoon. The trustees feel that such a center will provide a valuable addition to the educational and social facilities of the College.

The proposal was supported by members of the AD HOC Committee on the Multiracial Community of the College. The committee consists of students, faculty and administrators.

Temporarily the center will be located in Woodbridge Hall, a vacant white frame house which served as a small student residence hall for many years.

It is expected that the center will provide a site for art, music and other cultural programs which the Afro-Americans may wish to sponsor for the benefit of the entire College community. It will house the library collection of the Society and provide rooms for tutoring, conferences, and social gatherings. The center will be open to the entire College community.

Members of the Afro-American Society hope to utilize the center as a congenial place for black students that will provide them with a change from the social environment of the predominantly white College community. It will also facilitate social exchanges among black students of the neighboring colleges.

Leaman Sees No Changes For Top Ranked Eagles

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

About two weeks ago, the UMass basketball team hit a low point that seemingly could only get worse. But instead of that, the Redman hoopsters have come back to the point where they are in position to become number one in New England.

The Redmen had gone into the Christmas holidays with a 7-0 record and high hopes of padding that slate in the five games before second semester. However, UMass ran into a buzzsaw in the persons of Evansville and Tennessee Tech, a chopper in the person of Boston University and a well-performing unit in the person of Northeastern to drop four in a row.

With successive games against Providence, Fordham, and Syracuse, along with Boston College it seemed that the rosy dreams of December would turn into nightmares.

But like it is always said, the rest is history. UMass took Providence on the road in what had to be one of the finest UMass performances in years, and have routed highly regarded Fordham and Syracuse, a team that despite a poor record is always tough at home. Boston College is, of course, here Wednesday and that now shapes up as a battle for top rating in New England.

UMass coach Jack Leaman, who has rapidly become one of the top young coaches around, didn't concoct any magic formulas to bring his team back. "All we did was go back to work," said Leaman. "We took stock of ourselves and realized it was a case of playing poor defense. We are a better team now because we have started to play defense."

Leaman also thought the long layoff between the Evansville Tourney and the Boston University game hurt a lot. The coach stated about that B. U. game, "That was a big disappointing surprise.' However he added, "I think overall we have played as I expected. The team has done well and will still improve.'

The third year Redman mentor was not hard put to find the high point of the season thus far. "We beat Providence," said Leaman, "And we beat them down there. When you don't do that very often."

Leaman has gone with the same lineups, essentially, and the same offensive and defensive alignments all season. He dones't expect to change overnight for the B.C. game. "Basketball is a game of execution," said Leaman, ' and if we can do what we do better than what they do, we can win."

"I don't believe in changes just for changes sake, he went on. "We'll have no secrets. We'll use the same things we have always used. Unless Pete (Broaca, Leaman's assistant) comes up with a fancy new defense, we'll have no changes."

Leaman is looking forward to the B.C. game. "This is a big thrill playing for number one on Wednesday. No UMass team has been this close before."

Though still a premature thought there is the possibility of a post season bid for the Redmen. Leaman said of his team's chances, "I would think we would have to win 17 or 18 and beat either B.C. or Holy Cross. And even then we would still have to hope."

REDMAN RANTINGS-B.C. coach Bob Cousy must be getting forgetful what with his advancing age and impending retirement . . . Following his team's victory over Holy Cross Saturday, the former hoop immortal was asked what were his team's next two tough games . . . Cousy answered Rhode Island and Fordham . . . For the multitudes of people who are intending to attend the Wednesday game, may be you could help a fellow fan by sitting close together as possible to allow for the maximum number of people to attend. . . And maybe you could help the team by making some noise for a change

Frosh Drop Meet to Army

The UMass freshman gymnastics team, despite fine all-around efforts by Doug Salsbury and Tony Vacca, fell to the Army Yearlings, 125.25 to 113.60 Saturday.

Rich Innis and Tom Cannell were also standouts. The Little Redmen performed superbly on the rings, the longhorse, and floor exercise, but were outgunned on the sidehorse, parallel bars, and high bar.

UMass did best on the floor exercise, as Tom Amaro, Dave Gernest, John Calabria, Salsbury and Vacca all scored well.

Coming off a long layoff, though, it was still a solid effort for the Frosh.

Young Hoopmen Keep on Winning

A duel of undefeated teams Wednesday, was reserved this weekend when the UMass and Boston College freshman basketball teams gained victories. The Little Redmen trounced New Haven College 93-69, while the Eaglets defeated Holy Cross 70-57.

UMass, winning its seventh straight, blew open a relatively close game with a 58 point second half. Leading the explosion was sharpshooting guard John Bettancourt. Bettancourt canned eight of eight in the second half, enroute to a game high 23 points.

Also playing a big role in the frosh win was forward Rich Vogeley, who in perhaps his finest performance to date, hit on 11 of 15 field goal attempts, while scoring 22 points. He also took down eight rebounds.

The taller Little Redmen were too strong off the boards against the outmanned visitors. Coupled with a 51% field goal percentage UMass was never seriously threatened, although leading by only 11 at halftime.

Frosh coach Peter Broaca singled out, in addition to Vogeley and Bettancourt, Chris Coffin and Mike Pagliara for good performances. Coffin scored 12 points while also grabbing 10 rebounds, while Pagliara, while not scoring his usual quota of points, performed his field general chores well.

Leading the New Haven scoring was Crisnale with 15, John Stonick and Jim Pascarella with 12 each and Fortune and Rossi, both with 10.

Frosh Matmen Triumph Sat.

The UMass freshman wrestling team won the first two matches and went on to score a 25-18 victory over the Central Connecticut frosh Saturday at New Britain, Conn. The frosh remain undefeated.

Pete Thompson got the Little Redmen off to a good start by outpointing his 115 pound opponent Godowsky 8-6. Bill Riccio then won a forfeit at 123 pounds.

John Goldberg brought the home team back by decisively outpointing Bruce Lawandowski 9-2 in the 130 pound match. At 137 Central Conn. got still closer when Jester defeated Joe Miroglinole 4-1.

Bob Wickwire decisively kept the Little Redmen in the lead by overwhelming Bercouteh 9-0 at 152 pounds, following a UMass forfeit at 145 pounds. Chick Merkle at 160 pounds increased the lead with a 3-2 victory.

AlCava had a little too much for his opponent at 167 as the UMass frosh won 5-2. KeithSandler and Bob Whithnelen both dropped matches at 191 and unlimited divisions but Bob Cadawalladee's win at 177 pounds iced the UMass victory.

The frosh as well as the varsity have a tough one today with Springfield at Boyden.

Scanlon Promoted To Position As Assistant Dean of Students

BY RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Gerald Scanlon, Coordinator of Student Activities, has been promoted to the position of Assistant Dean of Students. Announcement of Scanlon's promotion was made yesterday by Dean of Students at UMass, William Field. According to Field the new Assistant Dean's duties began February 4. Scanlon will also retain his position as coordinator of student activities.

In an interview with the DAILY COLLEGIAN Dean Field stated that Scanlon's promotion was made because "He (Scanlon) has demonstrated time and time again his respect for students and their organizations and is well equipped to work with them."

Dean Field also said that Scanlon's promotion was as much a move by the students of the University as well as the Administration. "It (the promotion) is something the students have done in respect for the man," "and is a measure of respect in a very real sense," he continued.

As to the new position itself and Scanlon's role in it, Dean Field stated that Scanlon would be relied on for "advice and planning of future student activities" as well as counseling. Dean Field stated that the whole area of student activities on campus had increased in importance recently and that Scanlon's promotion is an attempt to "recognize it as a major area of concern."

Scanlon is a 1950 graduate of UMass and came back to the campus in 1964 from a housing authority job in Holyoke to assume the position of Assistant Manager of the Student Union.

Faulty Equipment Blamed
North Korean Claims Based on Pueblo Log

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) - The Pueblo's navigator denied Tuesday that the intelligence ship intruded inside North Korean territorial waters but conceded that the ship's own log showed such intrusions. He blamed faulty equipment for the log entires.

Lt. Edward R. Murphy Jr. told a Navy court of inquiry that 11 of the intrusions claimed by North Koreans at a news conference last September were based on recordings made by the ship's main navigational device, called a Loran system.

But Murphy, the ship's executive officer, said the device made consistent errors of as much as five miles and that Pueblo navigators had to compensate for such errors in determining the ship's actual location.

"I unreservedly comment that at no time between the day we got under weigh on 11 January, 1968, to the day of the capture of 23 January, 1968, did the USS Pueblo violate the 12-mile limit claimed by North Korea," Murphy said.

Murphy, first Pueblo crewman aside from skipper Lloyd M. Bucher to testify publicly, was followed to the stand by Lt. Stephen Harris, who was in charge of the ship's intelligence section. Harris earlier testified five hours secretly about what the Navy described as classified information.

Murphy supported Bucher's statement that the ship was "heavily outgunned" and backed up each of Bucher's decisions. Bucher also had denied intruding into North Korean waters.

Six intrusions claimed by the North Koreans were based on erroneous entries in the Pueblo's position log by one of his subordinate navigators, Murphy said. Others were based on markings that appeared as identified location fixes on charts the Pueblo was using at the time of her capture, Murphy added.

UCLA Student Strikers, Police Erupt in Violent Confrontation

BY JOE BARTL
College Press Service

BERKELEY, Calif. (CPS) - A two-week-old student strike at the University of California campus here erupted into a violent confrontation between students and police Tuesday.

About 60 police were called to the campus to break up picket lines blocking campus entrances at the intersection of Bancroft and Telegraph Avenues and at Sather Gate. There were 21 arrests and police, strikers, and bystanders were injured in the rock-throwing, club swinging melee.

During the day approximately 350 demonstrators marched through campus buildings, breaking windows and ripping fire extinguishers off the walls. Several classes were disrupted by the marchers.

Police were first called when several non-strikers were beaten with sticks and umbrellas as they attempted to go through a station-ing the strike and then sent to a nearby hospital.

The violence began at about 2 p.m. when plainclothes police arrested a striker off the picket line and were attacked by the crowd. Approximately 40 campus policemen and sheriff's deputies charged the crowd, beating several strikers and making several arrests. Some strikers threw rocks and cans at the police.

Several other police-student battles broke out when the strikers attacked other plainclothes policemen.

About 60 policemen swept the campus searching for the marchers but by this time the line had broken into many small groups.

At this point Sheriff's deputies waded into one crowd with their clubs swinging, scattering people in all directions.

A few minutes later the crowd surged into the street, stopping traffic at Bancroft and Telegraph. A bonfire was started but it remained small. The crowd dispersed at about 5:30 p.m. when strike monitors cleared the intersection.

The strikers, led by the Third World Liberation Front, a coalition of non-white student groups, are demanding creating of a third world college, hiring of more non-white university employees at all levels, and admission of more non-white students.

Yesterday afternoon Pres. Lederle chatted with students in the Colonial Lounge to begin a series of such meetings between students and administrators. Next Tuesday the University's Provost, Oswald Tippo will be featured in the Colonial Lounge from noon to 2 p.m. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom).

BY RICHARD STORY Education Editor

University President John Lederle began a series of meetings yesterday with students by spending two hours in the Colonial Lounge fielding questions from the floor and holding forth on the state of the University to the small group which stopped in to see him. Approximately 30 students came through in the course of the session - the first of a series that will bring other high administrative figures into the open once each week.

The President responded to questions about teaching and the quality of education in general, stressing the emphasis which he places on teaching as an aspect of a quality university. Good teaching is encouraged, he maintained; and all members of the faculty are encouraged in their efforts to develop effective classroom techniques.

Even without a detailed knowledge of the exact requirement structures for the various units of the University, President Lederle discussed in a general way the situation which he would like to see in the several schools and colleges: his own general orientation would favor a reasonably free and non-constricting system of requirements.

In another line, discussing the over-all state-wide system of higher education, he had some sharp criticism to level against those in the legislature who accuse him of "empire building" here in western Massachusetts. His vision is state-wide, he said; and his actions are always devoted to the cause of furthering the total educational enterprise of the Commonwealth.

In response to the recent faculty action which urges him to free some members for full-time academic planning, he replied by saying that the best minds of our campus would be welcomed in this "service" task - academic planning is an important business that should not be slighted, he assured his listeners.

Another First At UMass; Dutch Language Courses

Beginning in the Fall of 1969, this university will have another first to its credit. At that time, the University will have the only program in Dutch letters and language on the eastern seaboard. Administered by, and under the direction of, the Department of Germanic Languages, the program will begin with courses teaching Dutch, and will then move to include the study of Dutch literature and culture.

Emphasis will be on literary texts; and the director hopes that interested students will, as soon as they are proficient in the language, study and examine Dutch literary masterpieces in the original. Starting on a modest scale, it is hoped that the program can be expanded to include graduate and undergraduate seminars, a course in Dutch civilization; and can become a permanent subdivision of the German Department.

During academic 1969-70, two language courses are to be offered: Dutch 126 (1), Elementary Dutch conversation, reading, grammar and composition; and Dutch 146 (11), Accelerated elementary Dutch. In addition, Dutch 267, a course of masterpieces in translation will be offered.

The program in Dutch is a four-college cooperative effort; and has been recognized and aided by both the Dutch and Belgian governments with subsidies to form a seminar library. Diplomatic representatives of both governments have pledged their full cooperation.

Dr. Eric M. Beedman is to be the director of the program. He holds an A.B. in English and Comparative Literature from the University of California, Berkeley, and a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature from Harvard. Prof. Beekman, who comes from Amsterdam, and for whom Dutch is the native language, has published articles on, and translations of, aspects and figures of Dutch literature.

He has also written the first book-length examination of the prose words of one of the foremost of modern Flemish poets which, though written in English, is now being considered for publication in Holland.

Written inquiries should be addressed to the Department of Germanic Languages, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

UMass Student Injured in Car Train Collision

A 21-year-old University of Massachusetts student was injured yesterday in a collision between his car and a Vermont Central Railroad freight train at a grade crossing on High St., Amherst.

According to police, the operator of the car was traveling north on High St. and was in collision at the crossing as the train of more than 100 freight cars was nearing the Amherst station.

Police identified the student as Stephan Olivo of Agawam. He was taken to a hospital in Northampton, where officials said he was in satisfactory condition.

Officers said Olivo's car was demolished.

Gov. Sargent May Attack UMass Med School Budget

The UMass Medical School in Worcester is likely to be a primary target for budget slimming by the new Sargent Administration.

Costs for the school and hospital have risen from the $70 million original estimate in 1967 to $124 million. This increase combined with the inflationary trend may bring the cost of the complex to over $140 million.

A number of possibilities are being considered. Plans for the medical school could be abandoned altogether. Or Sargent could back the increasingly costly plans for a first class medical teaching complex, which its dean, Dr. Lamar Soutter, insists is essential.

One increasingly popular proposal is to have a two-year state medical school. This would probably eliminate the need for a teaching hospital, and allow the medical school to work out a small-scale teaching program with the Worcester area hospitals.

Some Sargent advisers would like to see the governor dump the medical school plans and expand state subsidy for medical students.

Massachusetts has an arrangement with the University of Vermont Medical School, for Massachusetts medical students to attend that school with a $2500-a-year subsidy for each student. However, that cost is rising.

Because the state needs more doctors, Soutter maintains, it must have its own medical teaching facilities.

Medical schools in Boston do not have their own hospitals, but their teaching staffs are part of the hospitals they use. Soutter says the four hospitals in the Worcester area do not have teaching space or teaching staff capabilities.

Soutter believes eliminating the hospital "would be the end of the medical school."

The teaching hospital's architects, Ritchie Associates of Brookline, have stopped work on their plans, pending state guarantee of payment.

Dr. Soutter willingly admits the medical school project is "terribly, terribly expensive," But he believes it cannot be done cheaply if it is to be worthwhile. (Original Story from Boston Globe)

Nixon, Degaulle Secret Letters Form Basis of Nixon Parisian Visit

PARIS (AP) - A secret exchange of letters between President Nixon and Charles de Gaulle form the background and basis for the visit Nixon will pay to the French capital in the next few weeks, it was learned today.

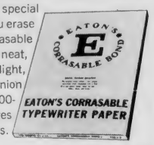
French officials, who are planning in terms of a Nixon trip the first part of March, were hopeful that a meeting between the two presidents would represent a major turning point in the troubled relations between Paris and Washington.

Authoritative sources said the U.S. leader wrote to President de Gaulle Jan. 11 declaring he was looking forward to "talking directly" to de Gaulle about problems facing the Western community.

Nixon, the sources added, promised "to take into account France's advice" on the resolution of these problems.

De Gaulle said he would "be happy to discuss any questions you want," the informants reported.

One of the reasons French officials are placing so much emphasis in private about a visit by Nixon is that they expect Nixon will make Paris the first stop on a European tour.



They see in this a sign that Nixon might alter the long-standing "special relationship" between London and Washington which has bedeviled America's relations with de Gaulle.

The sources recalled the practice since World War II for a U.S. president to consult first with the British prime minister before meeting other allies. They say they understand Nixon - in a significant change - has discouraged British Prime Minister Harold Wilson from flying to Washington before the President's European visit.

Part II
What Direction For Higher Education?

BY CHARLES MUSCATINE

(Editor's note: From the turmoil at Berkeley came the faculty report, "Education at Berkeley," which in turn has become the most hailed (and criticized) document in higher education. Here, in an article written originally for IBM, the man who headed the committee that wrote it, gives his views on what is wrong with the universities and what can be done about it.

RADICAL REAPPRAISALS

The modernity and global obligation of the new university will not diminish its need to preserve tradition and explicate the great monuments of our culture. But each work of art changes the whole tradition, and each age changes the meaning of all previous ones. The university will surely have to reconceive history and reevaluate cultural monuments at a pace commensurate with that of the changes in our lives. This history of science and technology, and the aesthetics of engineering and of new media will have to be given their rightful attention. The new university will radically redefine the proper limits of our culture, and give profound attention to what might now be called the "non-Western" and the "non-white" in human civilization.

What will be taught depends a great deal on how it is taught, and it is fortunate that some expedients forced on us by economy can make good sense as education. If learning is not to be a matter of routine detention and indoctrination, the new university will not be bound by the rigid, wasteful equating of credits and class "contact" hours, and the lockstep routine of uniform courses and examinations. Some studies need much class time and formal lecture periods; others need more outside reading and reflection, or independent research. There are uses for a whole gradation of intermediate teaching arrangements - tutorial, preceptorial, seminar, discussion, field study alone or in groups - that are now beginning to get large-scale trial. The new university will offer, and this is one advantage of its great size, a new variety of learning methods along with its catalogue of new subjects.

The student's curriculum will be very flexible, closely adapted to his abilities, needs and interests. Its planning will depend in part on giving him as much responsibility for it as possible, and in part on supplying him with highly informed guidance at each important turn. To provide faculty time and energy for this crucial part of the enterprise, many unessential courses will be eliminated, along with the mindlessly routine examining, grading and police work that now go with them. There will be no time to treat students as bad children. They will be treated as adults. The student will "take" fewer courses - depth rather than coverage being the object - and be examined only in those central to his curriculum. Here he will be guaranteed a decent minimum of exposure in small classes to professors who will know him and his work deeply and personally and be able to judge it fairly. Like the European student, he will have the free run of (and often be advised to attend) the great lecture courses. But while someone will always be around to answer questions, no one will spend the energy on taking attendance or giving quizzes.

Despite the fact that the new professor will have less time for routine teaching, the teaching power of the campus will be vastly increased with a radical change in the conception of who CAN teach. In the first place, the campus will tap the enormous teaching capacity of the student body, including the undergraduates. As Dr. Harold Taylor has remarked: "If the teaching program is turned around the considered as a learning program by the students with such help as the faculty and other students are able to give, then a new role for the student body as a whole is immediately suggested."

The potent truth that teaching is a superb way to learn will make better capital of the university's graduate students. In the past, graduate assistants have been more exploited than educated by their teaching experience. The new university - backed by the Federal Government, as a matter of national policy - will supply virtually all graduate students continuous fellowship support. In exchange it will receive periodic teaching service that clarifies the student-teacher's ideas, enlarges his knowledge, and tests the basic assumptions of his discipline. Under the problem-oriented approach he will be helping to teach his specialty as a junior professor in a "seminar" rather than merely drilling textbook material in a "section." If he is headed for a professorial career, his own graduate work will include studies oriented toward problems met in teaching.

A second new source of teaching power will come from the community. Concentrating on fundamental learning, the university will more and more relegate the final stages of professional education to the professions themselves, the special institutes and the training programs of corporations and government agencies. But even for its central enterprise the university will call for assistance on the wealth of highly educated individuals surrounding it in the community. Brought back to the campus one or two nights a week, first for orientation and then to act as part-time lecturers, seminar leaders and advisers, these individuals will get pleasure and refreshment from sympathetic contact with young people while they give them vital help.

ROTE LEARNING AND RECORD-KEEPING

As as yet incalculable amount of assistance will come from new technology. To the extent that rote learning is desired at all, it will surely be mechanized, as will record-keeping, scheduling and the like. Television and the computer will be omnipresent as auxiliary tools; but it is doubtful whether the university would survive their becoming central to the learning process. The library is certain to be transformed into a mechanized information - storage - and - retrieval agency with instantaneous national and international resources. The campus architecture will require a few very large auditoriums (middle-sized classes are uneconomical) and many more small laboratories, studios and seminar rooms. There will be fewer lecterns and more round tables.

In sum, the content and teaching methods of the new curriculum will powerfully answer the students' search for relevance and for personal recognition, and will counter the professors' flight from the mechanical classroom routine with opportunities for a kind of teaching closely related to their activities in research and public service.

Queens Students Stage Sit-in Against Restricting Recruiters

NEW YORK CITY (CPS) - The Queens College student activities committee will review school policy that keeps military and controversial corporation recruiters off campus to satisfy conservative students who sat in at the placement office Monday.

The College had an open recruitment policy until September 1967 when threats of violence forced the new regulations, which state that controversial recruiters can come on campus only in a forum set-up requested by at least 10 members of the academic community. The military refuses to participate in forums because of the debate that takes place.

The head of the placement bureau closed his offices when he heard of the impending sit-in, but re-opened them when the conservative students demanded the same right to cause disruption that black militants had recently.

In early January, students in a special help program called SEEK demanded control over their own affairs. They demanded the ouster of the white SEEK director.

Monday SEEK'S advisory panel recommended that the director be replaced by a minority group member and that the program be changed so that students have a greater voice.

Baha'i Club Speaker to Discuss Religion and Human Development

Dr. Daniel Jordan...

The second speaker in the UMass Baha'i Club seried "Religion: Relevant to What?" will be Dr. Daniel Jordan, who will speak on the relevance of religion to human development. Dr. Jordan is a professor of education at the UMass School of Education. He also serves as director of the CCEBS Tutorial at the University.

Dr. Jordan received a Bachelors of Music from the University of Wyoming, with a major in Applied Piano. As a Rhodes Scholar, he was awarded BA and MA degrees in Composition, Theory and History of Music from Oxford University, England. A second MA and a PhD in Human Development were received from the University of Chicago. Among his special awards has been a Phi Beta Kappa Key.

Dr. Jordan won considerable acclaim for his doctoral thesis entitled "Metamorphosis of the Owls," and experimental ballet which provides empirical evidence of Dr. Carl Jung's theory of the universal subconscious. In this thesis, Dr. Jordan has combined the two incredibly divergent fields of his academic experience--music and human development--into a singularly fused instrument for diagnosing mental illness by analysing one's response to the total aesthetic experience of the ballet.

Dr. Jordan is perhaps better known locally for his involvement with a race relations course originally titled "The Fire Next Time." The course, now entitled "Educational Perspectives in Race Relations," was formulated by Dr. Jordan and his colleagues in the School of Education to sensitize UMass students to America's greatest social problem--racism.

Dr. Jordan is also quite active in the American Baha'i community, presently serving as vice-chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States. He resides in South Amherst with his wife and their two children.

U Chicago Demonstrators Make Additional Demands

CHICAGO (CPS) - University of Chicago students occupying the school's administration building, added six new demands to their original four as conditions for ending their 6-day-old demonstration.

The occupying forces, who entered the building last Thursday, demanded: 1) The rehiring of sociologist Marlene Dixon, who was not approved by the sociology department in what students say was descrimination against her sex and political views; 2) 50-50 student representation on all faculty committees with power to hire, fire and grant tenure; 3) Amnesty for students involved in the occupation; and 4) Full pay for the secretaries and custodians whose work was interrupted by the takeover.

These original demands were called "not negotiable" by the students.

Three of their new demands, they say, are negotiable. They are: 1) Establishment of a suppressed studies department, which will give courses on discrimination against blacks, women and workers; 2) A requirement that 51 per cent of all new professors and students at the university be women (and, in connection with this, that the university's still-existing nepotism laws be abolished. Nepotism laws are those which forbid the school to hire a wife if her husband is employed there, etc,) and, 3) that all university files be made public.

An additional three demands were passed by a mass meeting of the students involved in the occupation - a fluctuating number ranging from 150 to 300 student - as matters of principle, they were:

1) An end to the university's destruction of buildings in the south campus area it owns, mostly populated by blacks. The students also asked that "constructive construction" with the community in mind take the place of the present renovating plans; 2) A day care center for children of faculty members; and 3) Admission of black and third world students, and workers, to the university.

A similar sit-in at Michigan State University in East Lansing ended 2-1/2 hours after it began when police told them to leave. They had been protesting the univeristy's refusal to rehire an assistant professor of psychology who said he had been fired for his liberal teaching policies.

$1.5 Million Counterfeit Bills Seized, Nephew, Uncle Arrested

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - Secret Service agents and police seized more than $1.5 million in counterfeit bills Tuesday in a predawn raid described as "one of the largest seizures in our history." Two men were arrested.

Special Agent in Charge Robert Mampel ranked the seizure as the third or fourth highest, trailing a $4 million seizure in January of 1968 in New York City and one of about $2 million in 1963 in San Francisco.

Mampel said the counterfeit ring began operations here in January of 1968, and that bogus $20 bills appeared in Columbus the same month.

Other bogus bills were passed in Port Huron and Detroit, Mich., and Los Angeles, Calif., in denominations of $10, $20 and $100 bills described as "average to good."

Arrested were 28-year-old Lawrence Whitt of Oakland, Calif., and his uncle, Jack G. Whitt, 44 of Columbus. Both men were arrested in an unidentified Columbus motel when they tried to sell $50,950 in phoney bills to a Secret Service agent.

After the arrest, agents raided the home of Jack Whitt and uncovered the remainder of the money and printing equipment.

Agents said only a "very small" amount of the money had been circulated before the seizure.

Lawrence Whitt was charged with possession of $50,950 counterfeit $10 and $20 bills, and with attempted sale of counterfeit money. He is being held by the U.S. Marshal under $20,000 bond.

Jack Whitt is charged with manufacture of over $1 million counterfeit $10, $20 and $100 bills and with possession of the same $50,950. He is being held under $5,000 bond.

Resurrecting 18 Year-Old Vote

BY JOHN ZEH

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The history of efforts to lower the voting age is full of frustration and failure, dating back to 1942 when Sen. Arthur Vandenberg introduced the first recent resolution to extend the franchise. In that session, Congress lowered the draft-induction age to 18, but refused to lower the voting age.

Since then, more than a hundred similar resolutions have been bottled up by the nation's lawmakers. Despite President Eisenhower's support in 1954, a proposed Constitutional amendment lowering the voting age failed by five votes. In the last session of Congress, well-meaning liberals let another bill die without a fight after President Johnson spoke up favorably but too late.

The 18-year old vote issue has also been raised at least once in each of the states, but the voters have consistently said no. Only in Kentucky and Georgia have efforts been successful.

The long struggle for the 18-year-old vote has also been marked by lack of organization and resources. There has been no nationwide movement at the grass-roots level to demonstrate youth's initiative and influence like those when Negroes and women sought the franchise.

"The nub of practical politics is that without assurances from organized college-aged groups that 18-to-21 year-olds really want the franchise, chances of passage are dim," Sen. Jacob Javits has said. Young people have decided to take his advice seriously.

In the last month two groups have formed to start a nationwide push for passage of laws lowering the voting age. One, begun by students from the University of the Pacific in California and launched on a television special with Joey Bishop, is called LUV (Let Us Vote). It claims chapters on more than 200 college campuses and 1,500 high schools.

Another handful of young people, from the National Education Association (NEA) 's student affiliate, have formed a Youth Franchise Coalition. With the support of other student groups, they claim to be the first national organization working toward the 18-year-old vote.

Sen. Javits and West Virginia's Sen. Jennings Randolph (who has fought for the lowered voting age since 1942) have written their Congressional colleagues seeking support for the new effort.

The Coalition has invited representatives of some 200 organizations and all members of Congress to attend a strategy session in Washington Feb. 5.

The Coalition's campaign to lower the voting age will aim at passage of a Constitutional amendment and changes in state statutes and charters. Dirck Brown, an early Coalition leader, explains that an effort at the state level will make ratification of the new Constitutional amendment easier. (Three-fourths of the states must ratify amendments to the U.S. Constitution.)

A petition drive will be conducted and a national youth conference will be held to dramatize the interest in a lower voting age. The Coalition also wants to develop a speakers' bureau and a stable source of information on the subject.

"For the first time," says Jim Graham, campus affairs vice-president of the National Student Association, "we're going to go really hard on this issue. This will be no kiddies' brigade."

One of the "back issues" of past campaigns that the students hope to redefine is the "Old enough to fight, old enough to vote" argument which has had wide emotional appeal in wartime.

"Apparently it takes war to open the eyes of America to the injustice she does her young men," R. Spencer Oliver of the Young Democrat Clubs of America has said. "It is surely unjust and discriminatory to command men to safrifice their lives for a decision the y had no part in making."

Now, with the Vietnam war, the argument takes a new twist. "Some people feel if you're old enough to vote, you ought to be mature enough to know not to fight," says NSA's Graham.

Sen. Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) feels the lower voting age is "more pertinent now than ever before, because youth is better equipped to exercise this responsibility."

"The 18-year-old has emerged, in this new world of learning and information-gathering, far more ready for responsible citizenship than the 21-year-old or even the 24-year-old was in my day," says Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming. "In fact, I'd take my chances with the 18-year-olds in the political saddle today instead of their parents."

Eighteen-to-21-year-olds are considered adults for many purposes. More and more are getting married earlier. Many of the three million who are married have children. Legally permitted to undertake family responsibilities, they are denied the right to vote. More than six million young people are taxed without representation. People over 18 are subject to the same penal codes as those over 21. Young people can enter the U. S. Civil Service at 18.

"This demand for youth power, or student power . . . stems from a growing sophistication among youth in evaluating our world, a growing realization that politics has an enormous impact, and a growing desire to assume "adult" responsibilities at an earlier age."

Campus unrest and other disorder stands to be lessened if the vote is granted, Senator Javits and others argue. The National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence has just reported that violence occurs partly because protesters believe they cannot make their demands felt effectively through normal channels.

The 18-year-old vote "will ease the frustrations of a generation obviously intent upon having a voice in the determination of their own destinies," the YD's Oliver told the Bayh subcommittee last May.

Schwartz in his testimony took note that 18-year olds feel themselves in "a kind of limbo." They carry adult responsibilities but are denied certain adult rights, like the vote. This tension "between what we are and what we are allowed to do," said Schwartz, "has created a revolution of rising expectations among young people every bit as profound as that of our Negro citizens and people in the underdeveloped world."

"There is only one sensible answer to the revolution of rising expectations among young people - accordance of institutional power to us," he said.

Supporters of the lowered voting age also argue that voting, the ultimate test of citizenship, should be begun as soon as possible. A new argument is that under the recent one man-one vote ruling by the Supreme Court, 18-to-21-year-olds in states not permitting them to vote are being deprived of rights their counterparts in Kentucky, Georgia, Alaska and Hawaii have. (Voting age in Alaska is 19; 20 in Hawaii.)

When Gov. Ellis Arnall first proposed lowering Georgia's voting age in 1943, he introduced the argument that young people have a contribution to make. "Their fellow citizens need their participation . . . the fresh viewpoint of these unregimented voters . . . their idealism." The Coalition's proposa l talks about a possible "therapeutic effect" on the nation, and Sen. Javits says the most compelling reason to lower the voting age is that "American politics needs the transfusion younger voters would give."

While to some the prospects look bright, the realities of the situation suggest that the 18-year-old vote is far off. Coalition leaders expect only Senate passage by the end of 1969. House passage will come only after much difficulty. Even then the new amendment would have to be ratified by the legislatures of three-quarters of the states, many of which will not be in regular session again until 1971.

"If it doesn't pass this time," says NSA's Graham, "for many of us it will be the last straw."

Black Bourgoeisie

A problem which has continually plagued the leaders of today's black revolution has been the role or the place of the established black bourgoeisie or middle class in the revolutionary plans of the movement. The question as yet is still for the most part unsolved, and the pressure placed upon this distinct group of black people has been great as the result of this indicision. The crux of the problem stems not so much an indecision on the part of the leaders as it does from the same on the part of the black bourgoeisie themselves.

It seems that all too often these people find themselves comfortably situated somewhere in the white man's world safe and secure, and are thusly afraid to make waves from fear that by rocking the perverbal boat, they might put in jepardy their white positions. This in many cases is a genuine fear, and one can appreciate how a person in such a position could have doubts. BUT if the person involved is first of all a BLACK person, proud and genuine in his racial conciousness, and secondly a member of the white establishment, then the question should go only as far as proceedure and not be one of whether he will or will not proceed positively for the revolution as part of it, for this should not even be at question as far as the real black man is concerned. So the question for the true black man from here on involves simply the minor decision as to proceedure.

For the urban black middle class there are many and varied opportunities for them to become significant parts in the movement. There are numerous black and white run organizations begging for black people with leadership experience and ability to help staff their all too often small and inexperienced staffs. There are opportunities in the fields of social work, urban development, and education whose suborganizations number into the thousands. In fact there are so many black oriented programs for black people to get involved in that there is absolutely no excuse for a person to say that he wants to help but can find nothing to do, for such a person either hasn't bothered to look or is, like many people, not interested to begin with.

A major area of interest where opportunities for the black bourgoeisie are quite possibly the greatest of all is in the colleges and universities where a goodly number of our black professionals are employed in teaching and administratior These people have an incalculable affect on the future black middle class, for it is from here where the majority of them will come. Black students especially the ones entering the predominately white institutions will be affected either positively or negatively by what they see and learn form this group, for as far as net affect goes, a neutral affect in such circumstances are nonexistant. So our black people who staff these insitutions have a unique responsibility to see to it that their black students become aware and knowledgeable as to their place and future in the black world as well as in the white, for these are the people destined to become our new revolutionary leaders, the new black bourgeoisie, black, proud, and powerful.

Nature Notion

To the editor:

The comptition between young people and those of power represents a great threat to our country. It is an endless struggle for power which once achieved breeds only the same destructive forces that existed in previous years. We are being attacked from the inside with a fear of failure and the subsequent frustration accompanying this freely competitive country of ours. In President Johnson's "State of the Union" address he explained in general why it cost so much to run the U.S. Then he stated something to the effect that we must secure the blessings of liberty for our posterity. However it seems that he could have stated this more precisely by substituting the word posterior for posterity. Our ideas of success are founded on the type of home, car, clothes, etc. that we have achieved. No wonder there is such trouble amoung those in power and those in the insecure position of subservient to power. We simply cannot have peace when schools merely prepare people to go out and take over someone else's job in the establishment. What schools have to do is to help each person think for himself, to develop a philosophy that one can base his life upon and work for without competition of succeeding or failing in relation to others.

Schools of all types must undertake the responsibility of bringing out the individual in each person. We have to think out the more important things in life. How are we related to the universe, to this world, to other men, to ourselves? What is the purpose of our existance in relation to all of these factors? These and other questions can be answered but each person must do this on an individual basis. Each person has to live with himself longer than anyone else, so he must decide how he can be most happy in such a world as ours. When each person can find this then we will truly have a peaceful world.

It seems that being a concious living form, aware of his existance, makes man inharmonious with nature and his conciouslife is used to make himself more harmonious in relationship to nature. We have two choices; posterior or posterity.

Think And Vote

Tomorrow night, Thursday, February 6th, elections will be held for the Central Area Council. The new Council, unlike the Student Senate, will concern itself with Area problems and will hopefully accomplish something.

It should be able to deal with Area problems with some intensity. For instance, lights on the hill. Do you remember last semester when attacks were a nightly affair? The Student Senate immediately became involved. The result? Have you tried to walk up the hill next to Gorman? Not only is it pitch black but since the construction, there isn't even a decent sidewalk. It's a wonder that somebody hasn't been killed walking in the road. I'm sure if some one were killed, the Student Senate would again become involved. Ho-hum. Please help deal with Area Problems. Please vote.

Black Potential

Recently, some of our so-called intellectuals have come out as saying that the threat of violence is the only signigicant force which the black community holds over the head of the Establishment powerful enough to "coerse" it to concede to black demands. Though this potential for violence is a powerful weapon in the arsenal of weapons capable of being employed by the black community; it should be considered that this is but one weapon in the arsenal and by no means is it the only effective one which can readily be employed.

The power of the purse, something that strikes at the very heart of the Establishment, is a powerful, destructive weapon which when employed effectively can greatly injure any institution at which it is directed. This was the tactic that was used most effectively in the South in the form of the boycott. Its effect has also been felt in the north where many public and private institutions can now testify to its effectiveness.

Even though it has not been employed too often as of yet by the black community, it is nonetheless a potentially powerful weapon capable of crippling probably the entire nation if employed universally. Think of what would happen in Washington, D.C. where well over fifty per cent of the population are black if all of the black people who worked for the city were to suddenly go on strike. Few could deny that the net effect would be devastating.

So before these people, these so-called intellecturals come out with such statements as pertain to the black power potential; they should review a little more closely the situation. There are many forms of power which the black community possesses which it could use to affect social changes. Violence, though probably the most effective device, can hardly be said to be the sole capacity of the black power potential.

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. - David B. Trumen, until recently vice president and provost of Columbia University and a controversial figure in last spring's protest there, was named president of Mount Holyoke College last month.

He succeeds Richard Glenn Gettell as president of the four-year, all-women's college. Gettell resigned in mid-November, apparently out of displeasure with liberalization of parietal and liquor rules, passed against his wishes by the school's trustees.

Truman, who served as Grayson Kirk's link with students during the crisis at Columbia last spring, caused controversy and generated great resentment from students during that period. He is believed to have been passed over for the Columbia presidency for that reason.

"On all campuses most of the time, the student press is highly unreliable, frequently irresponsible and, when controlled by a group that is hostile to the institution, seriously destructive. In the earlier conditions of community this was little more than a nuisance. Faculty and many students were unable to discount its reports and to correct them through the means subtly but significantly provided by the fact of community.

"UNDER CONTEMPORARY CONDITIONS A NEAR-MONOPOLY OF CAMPUS COMMUNICATION PATTERNS BY THE STUDENT PRESS IS DANGEROUS, EVEN A MENACE."

"The answer to this problem obviously does not lie in the management of or censorship of the student press.

"In the contemporary setting no university administration can be without a regular printed or electronic means of reporting to students and faculty, completely under its control and aimed at frank and responsible communication of the facts involved in incidents, developing issues, current problems and proposed policies."

David B. Truman, vice-president and provost, Columbia University; speaking before the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States, Dec. 5, 1968.

.....And In Montreal His Ideas Find Life of Sorts

MONTREAL, Canada (CPS-CUP) - The McGill University administration's attempt to bridge the "communications gap" with its students hasn't turned out to be as sturdy a link as administrators would have liked.

Originally the PHOENIX, the administration's weekly newspaper with a yearly budget of $36,000, adopted the name McGILL REPORTER when administrators felt the meaning of "PHOENIX" - rising from the ashes - was fraught with too many illiberal implications.

The paper, directed by the university information office, was initiated after a report by a communications committee of the university senate trying to set the last year's dispute with the student newspaper, the McGILL DAILY.

The committee proposed a weekly paper to, among other things "list all items of information relevant to the university." It reasoned the DAILY was unsuited to the task because of its political orientation.

The REPORTER appears weekly and usually contains complete minutes of the school's senate and board sessions, elaborate promos on campus activities and reports of committees. It also throws in articles on music, theatre, Biafra and like that.

The paper has more than its share of troubles.

First impressions of the REPORTER likened it to a journal of biophysics, and it is probably not read much more avidly. It suffers from too-predictable layout and small type. Stacks of the paper remained on the stands long after McGill's other papers (now at least five weeklies and one daily in an escalating paper war to print the "truth") disappear.

The only section in easily readable print in one edition was a two-page pullout on the new titles available from the McGill University Press.

Content elsewhere in that issue ranged from the hum-drum to the unreadable - including a lengthy piece containing "radical suggestions for the future' (with a most singular understanding of the word "radical") and a complete text of the principal's welcome to freshmen.

Campus reaction to the paper, as far as it can be gauged, is unenthusiastic. Layout and body type are built-in deterrents to potential readers. One student, apparently determined to read the Senate minutes, was seen using a magnifying glass.

The style complaints, though, are not as serious as charges from student and faculty quarters that the paper is irrelevant. The paper's editorial staff has been fighting administration authorities all year trying to get a free hand in covering the political situation on campus. They have been unsuccessful thus far.

The paper employs a full-time cartoonist (at generous salary) lured away from the READER'S DIGEST, and a slew of people from the Columbia School of Journalism.

Student leaders have called the effort a colossal waste. They think the money can be better spent elsewhere, particularly in face of McGill's desperate need for money, aggravated by the Quebec government's priority for French-speaking universities.

The University of British Columbia's administration has also joined the weekly newspaper game with a publication called "UBC Reports." This effort is more relevant and far more attractive than the McGill one and deals more extensively with campus and provincial political issues.

However, it has not managed to supplant the thrice-weekly student newspaper, the UBYSSEY, in the minds and hearts of students.

The administration at UBC was upset over the UBYSSEY's coverage and its political orientation when they started their own paper.

Summer Orientation Program Is On Lookout For Counselors

Applications are now being received from students interested in working with the 1969 Summer Orientation Program. Forms, for those students interested in applying, are available in the Counseling Center, room 243 Whitmore.

This year the Pre-freshman and transfer Summer Counseling Program will be comprised of eleven 3-day sessions for freshmen, and three 24-hour sessions for transfer students. The program will begin on June 4th and run through August 1st. Approximately 300 to 350 students will attend each session. The program includes academic placement, testing, and counseling, as well as extracurricular orientation and pre-registration for Fall semester courses.

The Summer Orientation program is the first introduction which the great majority of students have to the University; and for the past two years has utilized students to a much greater extent, and in more important positions, than formerly. Present freshmen and sophomores who have gone through the revised orientation, report themselves pleased with the close contact developed withtheir upperclass counselors.

The 24 counselors chosen for this program will have an integral part in the orientation of new students, as they will act both as floor counselors and academic advisors. The role of the counselor includes the following major functions:

-Introducing freshmen to University life,

-Advising individual students on personal and academic matters,

-Aiding in leadership of group activities for freshmen,

-Encouraging student involvement in academic and house activities,

-Serving as a resource person for information and referral to other agencies,

-Acting as a link for communications between the University and its residents,

-Assisting the Heads of Residence with administrative work,

Counselors are required to attend four training sessions during the Spring semester on the following dates: April 21, 28, May 5, 18, in addition to a three-day workshop from June 2 to 4. Counselors may expect to earn approximately $450 for the nine weeks of work, in addition to receiving their room, 15 meals per week, and telephone. Any counselor who wishes to take a course during the first session of Summer School may do so during the "A" period of the day.

Applications are available in 243 Whitmore; and the deadline for filing is February 14.

Mount Holyoke Will Participate In Ten College Exchange Program

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. - Mount Holyoke College has announced its decision to participate in an exchange progra m with nine other New England colleges.

The Board of Trustees, at a special meeting in New York City on Sunday, agreed to a program which was first proposed last September.

At that time, the presidents of Amherst, Bowdoin, Connecticut, Dartmouth, Mount Holyoke, Smith, Vassar, Wheaton and Williams Colleges and Wesleyan University agreed to present a proposal for an exchange of male and female students to the faculties and governing boards of each college.

Details of the program, which is scheduled to begin in 1969-70, are not yet finalized. Procedures and other operating details are being worked out by a committee, composed of representatives from each of the participating colleges.

Acting President Meribeth E. Cameron has appointed Miss Florence Kimball, Mount Holyoke Registrar, as the College's representative on this committee.

In every lab test against the old cardboardy kind... the Playtex tampon was always more absorbent. Actually 45% more absorbent on the average than the leading regular tampon.

Because it's different. Actually adjusts to you. It flowers out. Fluffs out. Designed to protect every inside inch of you. So the chance of a mishap is almost zero!

Lifeline by Plane Continues To Biafra Dispite Hazards

Most of the pilots are Americans. The planes are either chartered from European airlines or belong to church groups, bought for nominal sums from the United States. Washington is financing about 50 per cent of the airlift, which provides food and medical supplies for Biafra's one million civilians.

The relief planes fly at night, sharing the sky with gun runners from Gabon and Lisbon. The Nigerian antiaircraft gunners are after the arms planes, but they make little distinction in the darkness.

There is only one jungle airstrip they can use in Biafra - a 70-foot wide converted road at Uli where the runway lights flicker only a minute or two before the planes land. To leave them on longer might attract a Nigerian bomber.

When a bomber hovers over Uli, the relief planes circle for hours in darkness and radio silence. There have been as many as six in holding patterns. Sometimes they have to turn back without landing because they cannot get a fix on the Biafran radio beacon to communicate with ground control.

Four American C97 Stratocruisers, sold to church groups by the Johnson administration for the nominal sum of $4,000 each, made three landings at Uli Friday night and another three got through Saturday night. It was considered quite a coup after three failures earlier in the week.

On Sunday night a Nigerian bomber resumed its raids on the airstrip after a five-day lull, dropping six bombs on the heels of a landing relief plane. The bombs fell wide of the runway, and 12 other planes landed after the attack.

"I got out of there real quick," chuckled pilot George Lucas, 47, Northridge, Calif. "The firing was quite concentrated. You should have seen us go. I made a fighter plane maneuver with a 145,000-pound aircraft."

It was Lucas' first time under fire in Nigeria. But having ferried C97s to Vietnam for the National Guard, it didn't faze him. Minutes later he rumbled onto the Uli airstrip with 15 tons of corn meal.

Lucas, tactical operations manager for Litton Industries in California and a lieutenant colonel in the National Guard, is the senior American pilot on Sao Tome's four crews. There are 15 pilots, engineers and mechanics employed by Flight Test Research, a California company contracted by church groups to provide crews for the American relief planes.

The crews signed up for a three-month hitch and Lucas said: "Some of the boys are taking a loss" compared to their civilian jobs.

To educate children, in 1968 CARE donors provided materials to help build schools for 21,000 primary students; desks and chairs for 75,000; writing supplies for 760,000 pupils to do their class and home work.

Benefit Theatre Party Being Planned To Give Newman Center Financial Aid

"This facility serves the academic community as a Christian culture center," says Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, assistant chaplain at the Newman Center.

Each Sunday seven masses are said, three on weekdays, and nine on holy days. Confessions are heard daily. In addition to these sacramental obligations, the Center provides a healthy concentration of philosophy and theology training through non-credit seminars, courses and lectures.

A dedicated corps of students plan social events for the entire academic year, including dances, coffee houses, movies, outing s and other events. Many of the students are involved in charitable work, teaching youngsters in local parishes, working in area hospitals, or caring for children while parents attend Sunday mass together.

Membership in the Newman Club is open to all University students regardless of their religious affiliation. Monsignor David J. Power, Chaplain of the Newman Center, points out, "Many students of other faiths take advantage of our facilities. This is very wholesome. We want everyone to feel that the special offerings of the Newman Center are open to all 16,500 UMass students. There is a definite ecumenical tone to Newman, reflecting life in the Christian world today."

Monsignor Power and Father Quigley are the only full time spiritual advisers to students at Newman, although two priests working on degrees at UMass help with administering the sacraments.

The two priests find themselves on a demanding schedule, spending countless hours listening and counseling students with special problems. Late in the night lights shine in the two front office windows as the two clergymen offer assistance to troubled students or work with student committees planning functions.

Father Quigley says, "This is one of our biggest problems. As the University grows, we find we cannot reach all the students who need help. We are so busy here, we cannot get out into the residence halls where many students are living alone with their problems.'

On the other hand, a main attraction of the Newman Center is its role in integrating the spiritual within the rigorous academic life. The Center, through its many offerings, helps to provide a sense of unity or wholeness in a student's life.

The building, a handsome brick structure with a magnificant chapel, library, lounges, classrooms, snack bar, social hall, game room and offices was built in 1962 by the Springfield Diocese.

According to Monsignor Power, the Center has been able to keep its head above water financially up until this year. Now, rising costs have outstripped the student' ability to support the program.

Alumni in the western Massachusetts area, aware of the problem, have stepped in to help. They will host a benefit theatre party at Cinema 3 onFeb. 13 to help the Newman Center. Barbra Streisand, acclaimed by Newsweek magazine as the top female performer in 1968, will be the top attraction in "Funny Girl" on the second night of its appearance in western Massachusetts.

Tickets may still be obtained for the movie at the Newman Center or from ticket chairmen in local communities.

NYU Offers Program For MA in Teaching

A new two-year program leading to the degree of Master of Arts in Teaching will be offered by New York University beginning in September of 1969, Dean Daniel E. Griffiths, head of the NYU School of Education, has announced.

Although the new M.A.T. degree will be granted by the School of Education, the progra m will be conducted jointly by the School of Education and by the Graduate School of Arts and Science.

The full-time, resident program is aimed at college graduates with liberal arts backgrounds who want to become teachers and also continue study in their special fields in a graduate school of arts and science.

The program includes a paid internship in New York City schools. The salary earned should be adequate to cover the entire cost of the two-year program, Dean Griffiths said.

Candidates for the M.A.T. degree will take all of their subject specialty courses in the Graduate School of Arts and Science and their professional courses in the School of Education.

The latter, Dean Griffiths explained, will be "designed to achieve specified educational objectives linked to the contemporary role of the teacher and based on recent research in the relevant behavioral sciences and education."

Applicants must meet the standards for both the School of Education and also those in the department of their major field in the Graduate School of Arts and Science. The first class will be limited to 60 students.

Graduates of the program will automatically meet New York State certification requirements, providing they have taken a specified pattern of course work in their undergraduate study.

Professionalism at Grumman
...is personal development programs

As a graduating engineer, how can you position yourself so that your career chances are constantly optimized? Answer—get with an aerospace company where the optimum conditions are . . . Grumman. Here we take a keen interest in seeing that our engineers and scientists develop personally. We are sincerely interested in their personal progress within the company . . . that they keep abreast of the sweeping advances in technology, not because they can contribute more (although this is true), but more because it makes for greater individual progress and well-being. Job satisfaction, if you will. Let's look at these personal development programs.

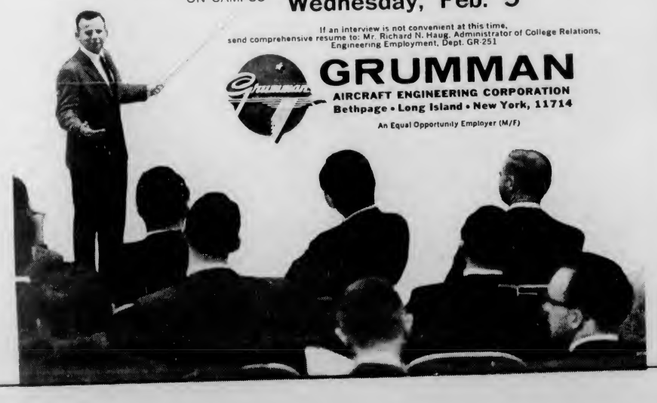
Tuition Reimbursement Program
Directly applicable to their work, these programs offer engineers and scientists financial assistance for graduate studies at the many institutions in the Long Island-New York area.

In-Plant Courses
Engineering courses, particularly those not available at neighboring institutions, to deepen technical knowledge to the specific needs of the engineering sections.

College-Industry Courses
Selective attendance for rapid technical updating on fundamentals, theoretical methods and design information. (One to two weeks' duration.)

Engineering Masters Fellowship Program
To enhance creative design capability, one-year fellowships, renewable for a second year, are awarded to new engineering Bachelor of Science graduates and engineers with a year or more company service. The program combines two days of graduate school study with three days of in-plant engineering (in fixed or rotating assignments) and covers payment of full tuition, books, fees, a stipend, and a salary at engineering hourly rates for the hours worked.

Professional Development Programs
Lasting for 2 years, participants are given, in 4 six-months' terms, an exposure to Grumman operations which broadens their technical knowledge, sharpens ability to make sound decisions, and raises their career potential. Separate programs serve individuals in Business Systems, Engineering and Manufacturing.



Senior Engineers' Program
Intended to overcome the threat of technological obsolescence, individual disciplines are updated with regard to new scientific discoveries, new or expanded applications of long existing knowledge, and computer applications to problem solving.

Senior Management Development
Selected individuals within Grumman junior and middle management groups are nominated to attend management development programs such as the MIT Executive Development Program, the Program for Management Development or the Advanced Management Program at Harvard University.

Basic Principles of Supervisory Management
A series of discussion sessions provide a course in management principles to group leaders who show technical management ability.

Here then is a real opportunity for graduating engineers in AE, CE, EE, ME, IE, Physics and Chemical Engineering . . . to take their place in the continuum of technology that is Grumman. Grumman representatives will be ON CAMPUS Wednesday, Feb. 5

If an interview is not convenient at this time, send comprehensive resume to: Mr. Richard N. Haug, Administrator of College Relations, Engineering Employment, Dept. GR-251

Grapplers Pinned By Springfield College, 28-9

BY BOB GANLEY Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity wrestling team lost their second straight meet when they bowed to Springfield College 28-9 last night. The match was much closer than the score indicated as there were only two pins and several of the decisions were very close.

The Redmen got off to a bad start as they lost their first four matches. In the 115 lb. class, Nick DiDomenico could not gain control of his opponent in the entire match and lost a 3-0 decision. Phil Davis held a 1-0 lead in the last period of his 123 lb. match but faltered in the third period and lost a 5-1 decision.

At 130 lbs., Howie Kaplin fought an excellent match but lost 3-2 on a questionable reversal call by the official. It was Howie's first loss of the season. Springfield went ahead 14-0 when Paul Pearl was pinned in his 137 lb. match.

Bobby Freeman started UMass on the long road back with a 7-0 win in the 145 lb. match. Bob continued his outstanding wrestling as he compiled five minutes riding time in the match. Mike Brauner showed he had what it takes as he scored a takedown near the end of the match to win a 4-3 decision in the 152 lb. contest. Tom Young made the score 14-9 by defeating his opponent 11-3 in the 160 lb. bout. Tom was injured badly near the end of the contest, but hung on to avoid a forfeit. At this point, it looked as though the Redmen would pull out the contest, but it wasn't to be.

Coach Homer Barr indicated the fact that the bouts were actually much closer than the final result and was pleased at the way the boys came back after their sound defeat at the hands of Central Conn. last week.

Soph Ed Arcaro and seniors Dave Schlatka and Will Wilen will be depended upon to stop the Indians weight team.

The coach emphasized that besides breaking into their strengths, "We must dominate our stong events." Broad jumpers Dick Dyer and Dave Canterbury, sprinters Walter Mayo, Dave Marble and Steve Chase, hurdlers Jerry Spellman and Marc Lefever, high jumpers John Ariensen, Paul Hyman, and Cal Carpenter, and distance men Leo Duart, Paul Hoss, Ron Wayne, and Charlie Lang must dominate their events for the Redmen to win.

Co-captain Bob H elbaum has gone beyond Coach 's rien's close finish prediction. "I think we'll win," said Hasselbaum, "The loss of Dave Evans in the 1000 will hurt us but Diego is in good shape and he should fill in as our top 1000 yarder very well."

The frosh also open their indoor season on the Dartmouth track, tomorrow. The team will go into the meet with practically no experience. Only five frosh, Arnie Morse, Al Mangan, Don Dunsky, Vern Hatch and Ed Shaughnessy have seen action this year. All at the BAA last Saturday.

New Commish: Bowie Who?

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) - Bowie Kuhn a New York attorney, was named the new commissioner of baseball last night, His appointment was as much a surprise as the appointment of William D. Eckert three years ago and Eckert's dismissal last December.

Kuhn is a member of the law firm that represents the National League, but he is an unknown outside of baseball circles.

Kuhn's appointment was on a pro-tem basis for one year. He will receive $100,000 per year. The appointment was recommended by th e Baseball Planning Committee and then approved unanimously by the owners.

A committee spokesman said Kuhn was the only person seriously considered for the temporary post as the replacement for Eckert.

The selection not only surprised the sports world, but also the new commissioner himself. He found out about it only a short time before the announcement.

Kuhn's primary duty during the next year will be to work with the planning committee on a restructure of baseball, such as combining the league offices into one headquarters.

Redmen Battle BC For Top Honors

UMass Seeks Fourth Straight Win Tonight

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Two red-hot basketball teams collide at the Cage tonight when UMass 10-4, entertains Boston College, 12-3, at 8 p.m. The outcome of the contest will determine who rules New England and could go a long way towards giving the victor a post-season tourney berth.

UMass has run off three solid victories in a row, whipping Providence, Fordham and Syracuse, all by impressive margins. Boston College is riding a seven game winning streak and last Saturday stopped Holy Cross, 77-69, to establish itself as number one in New England. Their only losses were to Villanova, St. John's and Northwestern.

The Eagles, who score 85 points per game depend on center Terry Driscoll for a large share of their scoring. A 6'7 smoothy, the Winthrop native has been averaging close to 25 points and 20 rebounds a contest. His great board work is the key to BC' blistering fast break which makes the Eagles one of the best scoring machines in the country.

Frank Fitzgerald, a 6'7 sophomore and Tom Verroneau, a 6'4 junior, start at the forward posts around Driscoll. Fitzgerald, an Edison, N.J. boy, was the leading scorer on last year's freshman team and is hitting double figures this season while Verroneau has drawn Coach Bob Cousy's praise for his work in recent outings.

BC's backcourt of Billy Evans and Jim O'Brien ranks right up their with the Redman tandem of Joe DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook. Evans, and outstanding passer, leads the Eagle fastbreak. O'Brien another sophomore, hit for 28 points in the Holy Cross game, but his fancy ball handling will be UMass' chief concern tonight.

The Boston College bench is dotted with great high school players who took the wrong road to stardom. Ray LaGace, a 6'5 redhead who hails from Connecticut, along with Verroneau and Evans, is the sixth man. He's a deadly outside southpaw shooter.

Greg Sees, 6'3 forward from Rome, N.Y., and Dan Crosby, the former high school All-American from Augusta, Maine, are the other top reserves. Vin Costello, the outstanding Bay State schoolboy two years ago, has seen less and less action recently.

Coach Jack Leaman is sticking with the same starting five that have performed so well in the last five outings. Ray Ellerbrook leads the Redmen in scoring with a 17.9 average, followed by Pete Gayeska at 14.7, Dennis Chapman, 12.3, and Ken Mathias, 10.6. Joe DiSarcina is just below double figures, hitting at a 9.0 clip.

Reserves Dick Samuelson, John Shockro, John Dreyer, and Bill Greeley will be ready for the call on the bench. All four looked good up at Syracuse.

Tempo will be the key to the ballgame. UMass must stop BC's fastbreak and this will require control over the boards. Gayeska Mathias, and Chapman will have to outbattle Driscoll, Fitzgerald, and Verroneau. With good boardwork and decent shooting the Redmen are quite capable of upsetting Cousy's juggernaut.

Frosh Unbeatens Clash

By PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

Before their big brothers fight it out for the number one spot in New England, the UMass and Boston College freshman basketball teams will have their own feud for that top position among frosh teams, when the two undefeated teams meet in a 6 p.m. Cage preliminary that has all the features of a main event.

B. C. is 10-0 this season, despite early reports that this was not as strong as Eagle frosh teams of the past few seasons. When you win 10 straight you can't be too bad. Among the Eaglet victims have been a highly-regraded Holy Cross team, a fine Connecticut squad that gave UMass allkinds of trouble, Harvard, Fairfield and Northeastern. B.C.'s record has been somewhat padded however with wins over such powers as M.I.T., Suffolk, Hanscom A.F.B. and Huntington Prep.

Although not boasting some of the top schoolboy names from Massachusetts that usually dot B.C. freshman rosters, the Eaglets have a coupel of highly-coveted high school products from New York. One is 6'7 center Peter Schmid. ThisSyracuse native, who went to Sacred Heart High school in that city is averaging 13.1 points so far this season.

The other former Empire state star is 6'2 forward Dan Metzler from Archbishop Walsh High School in Salamanea, N.Y. Metzler is averaging 16.7.

The leading scorer for B.C. is 6'3 Jim Phelan. The brother of Holy Cross player Joe Phelan, the Clark, N.J. native is averaging 19.2 points per game at his forward spot.

Starting backcourters for the Beantowners will be 6'3 John McAuliffe and 6'0 Kevin Cummings. McAuliffe the brother of last year's B.C. frosh starter Jim, is a 6'3 Teaneck, N.J. product who is averaging 8.6 points a game.

Cummings, a graduate of Lyman Hall in Wallingford, Conn., averages 5.7 points while serving as playmaker for the Eaglets.

Seeing expensive action in substitute roles are two Massachusetts products; 6'3 forward Dan Reardon from Brockton and Bill O'Neil, 6'3 from Cheshire Academy in Hopkinton.

UMass will have a change in its starting lineup for the first time this week. Chris Coffin will be starting at center in place of 6'8 Tom Austin. Coffin in recent games has been very impressive. Saturday against New Haven he scored 12 points while pulling down 10 rebounds.

The Little Redmen may be without big forward Bill Kesgen. Kesgen who has been the hard luck player of the UMass team has been ill the past few days and his status is uncertain for tonight. Kesgen missed the first five games with an ankle injury.

UMass will have a big height advantage, but B.C., like all B.C. teams, will be running a lot. The success of the UMass team will rest with the frontcourt of Julius Erving, Rich Vogeley, Coffin and Austin to control the boards and thwart B.C.'s fast break.

Little Redman coach Peter Broaca, in as few words as possible probably summed up this game and evening's activites best when he said, "They're 10-0 and We're 7-0. What else can 1 say except get there early."

Trackmen Open Today

UMass' winter track team opens its dual meet season today when they take on Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire. The Redmen will be battling an experienced Dartmouth squad who is running in their fifth dual meet of the season.

Track coach Ken O'Brien sees the meet as a battle between two teams with strengths in different areas. "As I look at it now, the two teams will score heavily in separate groups. Dartmouth will be strong in the weights, pole vault, and middle distances. We will be strong in the sprints, hurdles, jumps, and long distances. The final result of the meet will depend on who can break the other teams strengths."

Dartmouth has two strong performers in both the 600 and 1000. O'Brien is counting on seniors Bob Hasselbaum and Diego Conzalez to break into these strengths.

Flying Frosh Puckmen Face Harvard

Frosh coach Ben Smith's rampaging pucksters made it four wins in a row with victories over Yale JV's 11-1 and New Prep 2-1 in games played just before the vacation period. UMass' record presently stands at 6-2.

They'll take on Harvard JV's this afternoon at Watson Rink in what should be an interesting battle. Smith, a Harvard grad, would like nothing better than to have his upstart Little Redmen take the measure of his old buddies.

Bluntly, the Yale game at New Haven, was a laugher. 50 shots spaced over three periods proved to be too much for the beleaguered Elis to handle. Jack Edwards had four goals and Bob Whelden three with Dennis Grabowski, Al Nickerson, Mike Waldron and Dan Reidy each adding single markers. The home forces managed only 18 shots on goalie P.J. Flaherty.

Flaherty was on the spot in the 2-1 win over New Prep coming up with 12 third period saves, several of them spectacular. Whelden scored both UMass goals the first on an assist from Edwards. Brad Johnson scored for Prep in the third period. On the night, UMass was outshot 28-27.

With eight games left to go, the Little Redmen would appear to be entering the softer part of their schedule. Not so. After what should be a tough game today, they'll play Deerfield, AIC, return matches with UConn and Amherst, a home and home set with Holy Cross and a revenge battle with Salem State. This last one they want very much as State upset them 3-2 in sudden death overtime several weeks ago.

BLUELINE BANTER - Not surprisingly, that husky first line of Edwards, Reidy and Whelden is pacing the team in scoring. Whelden has 11 goals, Edwards 10 with scrappy center Reidy having nine assists. Edwards is team point leader with 18. P.J. Flaherty has allowed only nine goals in six games for a sparkling average of 1.5. Overall, the Little Redmen are outscoring their opponents by a healthy average of four goals a game.

Intramurals

The three divisions of the intramural basketball program gained champions last night as action bore down to the final championship round, Grayson Aces downed Kennedy Panthers 50-38 for top spot in the dorms while James Colt .45's beat Hamlin Pied Pipers 56-39 in consolation action. TC took the frat title by stopping BKP, 50-34. TKE beat TEP 62-42 in the consolation game. In the independents, the powerful Drakesters tipped the Bulldogs 42-40. Tyme won by forfeit over the Nickle Bags in the consolation game.

IN THE CHAMPIONSHIP ROUND, GRAYSON HAS A BYE. CONSEQUENTLY, TC WILL DO BATTLE WITH THE DRAKESTERS. TAPOFF WILL BE AT 5:30 P.M. THIS AFTERNOON IN BOYDEN.

Lederle Cites Need for Good Public Medical School

BY JAN CURLEY
ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITOR

President John W. Lederle issued a statement late yesterday afternoon in which he stressed the need for a first-class public medical school to be constructed in Massachusetts. Board of Trustee member, John W. Haigis of Greenfield, who is also chairman of the Buildings and Grounds Committee, told the DAILY COLLEGIAN last night that he "agreed with Lederle's statement" and the aim of the board is to construct a "first-class medical school in Worcester."

Lederle was addressing his statement to an article which appeared in yesterday's morning edition of the BOSTON GLOBE. The GLOBE story was based on the statements of five New England Medical school deans, Tufts, Boston Univ., Harvard, Dartmouth and the Univ. of Vermont, in which they were in favor of "expanding existing medical schools rather than build new ones."

Agreeing that the story was "entirely accurate in pointing out that a teaching hospital is clearly a necessary adjunct to a first-rate medical school," Lederle went on to say "that a two-year medical school would not serve the needs of the Commonwealth.'

One of the deans had recommended that a two-year medical school would be a compromise for cutting costs in building a four-year medical school.

According to the GLOBE, Dr. Lamar Soutter, who has been appointed Dean of the proposed UMass Medical School, is quoted as saying that "Tufts and Boston University are not really interested in training Massachusetts residents in medicine . . ."

In his statement Lederle said, "The article failed to point out that the need in Massachusetts is for educating at least 100 additional medical doctors annually." He went on to say, "Also it is very clear that, over the last half century, the private medical schools in New England have failed to absorb these additional numbers - and for good reason: the additional students would represent an impossible overload on their existing facilities."

Dr. Louis Rohrbaugh, vice president of B.U. for Medical Affairs was quoted in the GLOBE as saying: "Dr. Soutter's comments to the contrary, Boston University has a very affirmative interest in training Massachusetts residents." He went on to cite statistics that more than one-third of the student body is from Massachusetts and almost half of the freshman class are Bay State residents.

A major portion of Lederle's statement was concerned with the finances of the medical school. The deans had asserted that the most expensive way for the taxpayers of Massachusetts to increase the number of physicians is to build a new state medical school. Most of them agreed that the money could be better spent by subsidizing the already existing medical schools to expand their facilities. They also concurred that a two-year medical school was not the most feasible of plans because it would be difficult to institute a curriculum which would make it possible for a student to transfer to another medical school.

Dr. Lamar Soutter, Pres. Medical School.

The GLOBE story said that by expanding the existing facilities the state could save an estimated $100 million. When the school was first proposed for UMass five years ago, the estimated cost was $84 million. Today the figure stands at a conservative $124 million.

"The need for a first class public medical school . . . grows greater, not less, with each passing day, Lederle stated. He added; "This same escalation factor (referring to the rise in construction costs) will apply to any medical

Reagan Declares State of Emergency To Maintain "Law and Order" at Berkeley

BY PHIL SEMAS
College Press Service

BERKELEY, CALIF. (CPS-TELEX) - Despite a relatively peaceful day on the University of California campus here, Gov. Ronald Reagan has declared a state of emergency at Berkeley.

Reagan said he made the declaration at the request of Alameda County Sheriff Frank Madigan and University President Charles J. Hitch in order to make state highway patrolmen available on a continuous basis to help maintain "law and order" on the campus.

Edwin Meese, Reagan's executive secretary, said the number of highway patrolmen who will be available "is a matter best left for the dissidents to speculate on." Meese said highway patrolmen can assist local police at any time but a state of emergency must be declared to make them available on a continuous basis.

He said a state of emergency was not declared at San Francisco State because local police were able to deal with the disorders with only occasional assistance from the highway patrol.

The additional police will be under the command of Sheriff Madigan, who earlier this week criticized the University administration for not taking a strong enough stand against student strikers.

Berkeley Campus Chancellor Roger Heyns, who asked Hitch to join Madigan in the request, stressed that "the state of emergency, required for technical reasons, does not imply any change in our normal campus life."

But Reagan said he made the declaration to "clearly indicate that the State of California is determined to maintain law and order on the campuses of its University as well as all other educational institutions.

"I just feel we have come to the end of the road in depending on local law enforcement," he added. "It isn't good enough any more to wait until rocks are flying and beatings start and then come in and restore order."

Heyns said the police assistance presently available from local agencies "cannot continue to meet our needs.'

However, the campus was fairly quiet Wednesday after Tuesday's battles between students and police. About 500 students marched around the campus chanting "On strike, shut it down" and "power to the people" but did not enter any buildings where they assumed there were police.

About 100 police were on the campus, maintaining corridors at the main campus entrances. There were only two arrests.

Manuel DelGado, a leader of the Third World Liberation Front, the group which called the strike, said the state of emergency is "absurd, since there has been no response to our demands except by force."

The strikers held an afternoon meeting attended by about 350 students at which Jim Nabors, a leader of the Afro-American Student Union, said, "We are not out there to have a confrontation and mass arrests. We want a victory." Nabors and other speakers said violence so far has been the result of their defending themselves against the police.

The Berkeley Faculty Senate Wednesday voted by a narrow margin to table a motion that would have approved in principle the creation of a College of Ethnic Studies to be planned by non-white faculty and students. This would have fulfilled one of the student demands. Other demands include hiring of more non-white university employees at all levels and admission of more non-white students.

Projected Student Increase Forbodes Tripling in Fall

BY MARK SILVERMAN
Friday Issue Editor

Students living on Campus next semester will face an increased number of triples in all four residence areas, University Housing Director Jack Wells told the DAILY COLLEGIAN yesterday.

"We project an enrollment increase of about 1500 next fall," Wells explained, "and with nonew dorms scheduled to open, things will have to be made a bit tighter in the existing dorms."

Wells dispelled the rumor that the majority of triples will be in Southwest. "We expect to distribute the number of necessary triples evenly over the Campus, and we have no intention of making every double in Southwest into a triple, as some people have been led to believe." This would mean that there will be about 600 additional students in Southwest next year.

Wells added that there were 600 student vacancies this fall.

"We've had tripling in the past," he continued, "and I really don't think that the situation will be that bad next fall. I've been here (UMass housing department) for the past five years, and the tripling situation was much worse several years ago than it will be next year."

If tripling becomes a necessity in the future, "we will probably have to look into the possibility of expanding closet facilities, but we have no plans for that at this time."

Wells went on to say, "If the on-campus housing condition continues to become increasingly difficult, the University may have to relax the off-campus housing reg-

SDS Releases Statement on Dow Chemical, Meets To Plan Anti-Dow Demonstrations

"Dow Chemical Co. is coming to the UMass campus to recruit young chemists. Dow Chemical manufactures napalm and sells it to the U. S. Air Force. The Air Force, in turn, takes this napalm and drops it in certain selected spots in Vietnam; the immediate object in the mind of the Air Force is to burn and destroy some Vietnamese people called Communists! This much the Air Force will agree with, but what of the children of Vietnam that seem to come into hospitals with napalm burns- what of woman with napalm burns- Are they Communists too? Whether they are or not makes no difference, why should they be the victims of napalm? As a matter of fact, dropping napalm on people appears to be a pretty inhuman, immoral act! This makes the pilots who drop it immoral, the Air Force immoral, and of course Dow Chemical immoral.

"While it is true that Dow Chemical is not the only manufacturer of napalm, it produces by far the largest amount and sells a main component, polystyrene, to the other companies manufacturing the terror weapon. If but one child, one human being were to suffer a burn from napalm, Dow Chemical Company would be partially responsible since they know what their product is used for, and the results, however since 1961, there have been well over one million child casulties of the Vietnam "War", a large percentage of these by the wonder weapon, napalm.

"Regardless of what else Dow Chemical produces, weapons of peace or war, they are made guilty by napalm. It is not reasonable that this company be allowed to come onto a college campus to recruit more scientists to (possibly) help produce more napalm, which very conceivably may be dropped on children in Vietnam or Guatemala or somewhere else.

"Dow has made public policy statements to the effect that they believe their manufacutre of napalm to be "simple, good citizenship" towards their country and government. Can the lives and deformity of thousands of children be justified by simple "good citizenship"?"

Haigis said that the Board of Trustees realized the expense involved in building the school, but he added that he stood on the intention of the Board to "Build a first-class medical school in Worcester."

As plans stand now, the medical school will accept students for the fall of 1970 and the first construction is expected to be completed by 1972.

Lederle concluded his statement with: "Actually, the problems which beset the Massachusett s Medical School are not insoluble. One solution is to get on with the construction of the medical school in Worcester at the earliest possible date."

There is a University regulation which states that any student living in a triple for more than 4-6 weeks is entitled to a 20% room rent refund. This only applies, Wells explained, "when there is no alternative housing on campus. This means that a student may conceivably be forced to move from, for example, Orchard Hill to Wheeler, in order to get out of a triple."

school which expands its facilities to absorb these extra students - at an even greater rate, in fact, due to additional delay of one to two years which would be required for new design and construction, not to mention loss of federal matching funds already awarded.'

Last year the Federal government had added matching funds to UMass' plan which were more than made available to any other of the 50 states.

THE CHAMBERS BROTHERS will be one of the featured groups at the week long WINTER CARNIVAL 1969 at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, which opens on Sunday, February 9 and continues through Sunday, February 16. The group will appear on Friday, Feb. 14 at 10 p.m. Also appearing at the Winter Carnival will be Richie Havens, Jaime Brockett and Sergio Mendes and Brasil '66.

Chambers Brothers to Highlight Winter Carni

The Chambers Brothers, a group that has rocketed to stardom in the past year and now at the top of America's rock scene, will be the feature attraction at one of the University of Massachusetts' Winter Carnival 1969 concerts.

The group will appear with ARS Nova on Friday, February 14 at 10 p.m. on the University campus.

The Brothers --Willie, George, Lester and Joe Chambers, and Brian Keenan--have been creating "electric earth tremors" in clubs, colleges and concert halls throughout the country. Their explosive blend of gospel, rock and blues has made them among America's most popular groups.

Their single records, "Time Has come Today" and "I Can't Turn You Loose," have soared high on the national best-seller charts, thus attesting to The Brothers' strong cross-country popularity. "The Time Has Come," their debut Columbia album, was awarded a Gold Record. Their second album, "A New Time - A New Day," continues to spread The Brothers' gospel throughout the country.

The group writes much of their own material, like the exciting "Do Your Own Thing" and the powerful "A New Time - A New Day," which are featured in The Brothers' second album. In addition to their own material, The Chambers Brothers' repertoire is made up of blues standards and popular numbers, which they interpret with vitality and originality.

The admission price for The Chambers Brothers and ARS Nova concert is $3.00. Tickets are on sale from January 28 at the University of Massachusetts Student Union Box Office.

Conn. Superior Court Issues Injunction Against UConn Prof

ROCKVILLE, Conn. (AP) - Jack L. Roach, a sociology professor at the University of Connecticut, was barred today in Superior Court from participating in further demonstrations at the Storrs campus.

A temporary injunction, requested by the university, prohibits him from "any act that might impair or prevent any lawful activity at the University of Connecticut."

The state and the defense said they believed the court's decision was unprecedented in the country.

The request for the injunction stems from several antiwar demonstrations in which Roach allegedly participated. They include protests Oct. 30 and Nov. 26 against on-campus recruiters and Jan. 15 and 25 at meetings of the university Board of Trustees.

The trustees were meeting to consider action against four faculty members active in the demonstrations, including Roach.

Roach was arrested after today's hearing and charged with breach of the peace in connection with the January demonstrations.

He had told the court he never actually impaired lawful activities at the university and in fact on one occasion tried to quiet the crowd.

Roach told reporters that, of the four faculty members taking part in the demonstrations, he had been singled out for the injunction because he alone had tenure. One of the others has been told his contract will not be renewed and the two others have been told their renewals are in doubt.

How long the temporary injunction will be in effect was not specified. Had it been a permanent injunction Roach could appeal, but because it is temporary he can not.

Yale Professor Speaks At Smith on Fascism

" 'Fascism' has again become an often used word after having been tabooed in the western world . . . the time seems to have come to ask again what fascism was and possibly is,'

This is the view of Ernst Nolte, University of Marburg professor of history and visiting professor at Yale University. He will speak at a Smith College symposium on "Fascism in Our Time' to be held Feb. 14 and 15 on the Smith campus.

A lecture by Prof. Nolte, "An Inquiry into the Nature of Fascism," at 5 p.m. Friday, Feb. 14, in Sage Hall will be part of the symposium.

The symposium will also include a 1958 German film with English subtitles, "Wir Wunderkinder' ("Aren't We Wonderful?"), a panel discussion of Prof. Nolte's lecture, and student-professor workshops on fascism in five parts of the world.

The public is invited to attend either of the film's showings on Wednesday, Feb. 12 at 4 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. in Wright Hall.

H. Stuart Hughes, chairman of the Harvard University history department, will be among participants in the panel discussion of Prof. Nolte's lecture at 8:15 p.m. Friday, Feb. 14, in Sage Hall. Prof. Hughes is national chairman of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy (SANE) and was the 1962 Independent candidate for the U.S. Senate from Massachusetts.

The panel participants, and Irwin Wall, assistant professor of history at Smith, will also individually lead separate workshops on the general topic of "Fascism Since 1945," with Five-College Community students participating.

FACISM IN OUR TIME - H. Stuart Hughes, Harvard University professor of history and 1962 Independent candidate for the U.S.Senate from Massachusetts, will be a panelist in a Feb. 14 and 15 symposium on fascism, to be held at Smith College, Northampton.

Medical School Fiasco

The proposed University of Massachusetts Medical School is in the headlines again, and the controversy surrounding the school is almost as big as the headlines themselves.

The story began last month when John A. Volpe handed over the reins of the state government to his lieutenant governor Francis W. Sargent. The problems facing the new government were many, and their complexities are not easily understandable to many.

But one thing Governor Sargent made clear was that the state was in financial trouble. Belts would have to be tightened, and money would have to be trimmed from some budgets. He proposed then to look into the budget for the UMass medical school.

The taxpayers were holding their breaths waiting for the world from Beacon Hill that their taxes were going to skyrocket. And then the legislators voted themselves a pay raise.

This can only cause one to wonder just how bad the financial situation is. And it also makes one wonder just exactly what kind of legislators we have who vote a pay raise for themselves, but threaten to take away the state medical school. The legislators, should plans for the medical school be scrapped, are jeopardizing the educational plans of the young adults in Massachusetts.

UMass is a fine school. It is difficult to obtain elsewhere the education which one can receive at UMass for such a relatively small cost. Construction costs and budgets for the state agencies are not the only things which are subject to inflation; tuition costs are also on the rise.

Let's hope headlines ten years from now are not decrying the need for doctors in Massachusetts. The legislators may lose some valuable sleep over that issue.

One can not help but wonder about the politics involved in this move. At the time it was voted to build the medical school in Worcester, the hue and cry went up that the school should be constructed at the Amherst campus.

But there were others who deemed it more prudent to construct the medical school in Worcester. This choice involved purchasing land, paying for buildings to be torn down, and in addition to planning for a hospital and classrooms, dormitories also had to be thought about.

If the decision had been made to build in Amherst, things might have been different. It would have been crowded, but the medical students could have gone to classes in the existing buildings temporarily while new and more adequate facilities were being constructed.

The student s could have been housed in the dorms which the Amherst campus already has. At first glance other students might cry out that dormitories are already over-crowded, but the medical school will not be operational for a large number of students (more than 100 if that many) in the beginning. The classes will be expanded in the same way as they were at UMass-Boston.

President Lederle urged in his statement yesterday afternoon that "one solution is to get on with the construction of the medical school in Worcester at the earliest possible date." Perhaps if the school had been planned for Amherst, the foundations would already be a reality.

The building of a medical school also necessitates the construction of a hospital, and for Amherst this is not a bad idea. The U-Mass infirmary's facilities are already inadequate: witness the flu epidemic which struck the campus around Christmas time.

The Infirmary was bulging at its seams, and several patients had to be sinhoned off to the local hospitals in Northampton and Greenfield, which were already crowded. If there had been a hospital, this situation could have been avoided.

UMass also has a nursing program, but the nurses have to go elsewhere for their hospital training with the prospective doctors.

But the plans have been laid to build the medical school in Worcester, and now it appears that the wheels are grinding to kill all plans for a medical school for the sake of economy.

If the plans are squashed entirely, it will hurt everyone in the long run. The state will be deprived of a public medical school which would make it possible for even a person with limited financial resources to aspire to a career in medicine. UMass could be doing a public service to the Amherst community by providing a hospital which would be open to all, students and town residents alike.

The state will also suffer because there is already an existing shortage of doctors. The problem is not unique to the Bay State; it is common everywhere. While Tufts, Boston University and Harvard may not discriminate against Massachusetts residents, their fees are high. Tufts, in fact, has the highest college tuition in the nation.

The most important thing to remember now is that construction costs are rising, and delay will only see the cost of the medical school rise over the years. Revisions in the plans should be made, and made with haste, in order to insure that a public medical school will be constructed.

We laud President Lederle for his desire that construction for the medical school begin as soon as possible, but we still question the feasibility and value of constructing the facility in Worcester.

INSIDE REPORT

NIXON-TO-MOSCOW-TO-HANOI

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - Despite the deadlock now blocking all progress at the Vietnam peace talks in Paris, the mood both in the Nixon administration and along diplomatic row here is anything but gloomy, for a most interesting reason: help from Moscow.

Reports have leaked out from time to time the past few months that the Soviet Union gave the U.S. vital help at tense stages of the negotiations that led up to the Oct. 31 bombing halt and breaking the deadlock over the shape of the negotiating table in mid-January.

But the full extent of that assistance has never been documented. Nor has the expectation within the new Administration that Moscow fully intends to continue if not increase its role as intermediary at Paris.

The Moscow line is becoming visible among Soviet and other Communist diplomats in Washington in their effusive praise for Richard M. Nixon - who, before his nomination for President last summer, was viewed in Moscow as the devil incarnate. This strange love affair between the Kremlin and President Nixon, then, is one of the main reasons that, despite total Communist intransigeance at Paris last Thursday, U.S. policymakers are counting on a negotiating break-through within six to eight weeks.

Soviet policy in the Vietnam war has been shrouded for years. Some U.S. diplomats have insisted that Moscow wanted the war to end out of fear that protracted fighting would enhance Chinese Communist influence in Southeast Asia. The opposite view, held by foreign policy hard-liners, claims that Moscow, benefiting from the U.S. discomfiture in Vietnam, long ago could have ended the war by stopping supplies of war materiel to Hanoi.

Since October, the weight of evidence favors the first analysis. It was the Russians, for example, who came up with the answers to the two most perplexing questions at the Paris talks: what kind of a commitment Hanoi should make in return for a complete halt to the bombing and the shape of the negotiating table in the old Majestic Hotel in Paris.

Soviet officials privately informed U.S. diplomats in Moscow in early October exactly what Hanoi would concede as a response to the bombing halt. In January, intervention by Soviet diplomats in Paris, acting as a result of inside information from Moscow, fixed the shape of the table.

Since then, there have been a number of smaller indications of Russian desires to end the war, none of which Moscow is eager to advertise. But coupled with the effusive Soviet reaction to Mr. Nixon's first two weeks in office, they strongly hint that the Kremlin is hyperactive behind the scenes to prevent a breakdown of the Paris talks from interfering with Moscow's objectives regarding the Middle East and arms control, higher on the current Soviet priority list than Vietnam.

The Moscow press is now filled with pro-Nixon stories, depicting the new President as a man of peace. Treatment of Mr. Nixon's inaugural speech and his first press conference last week was nothing short of euphoric. One Communist diplomat describes the current Moscow line as heaping more praise on Mr. Nixon than any President since Franklin Roosevelt.

This leaves in doubt how much Moscow can actually influence Ho Chi Minh, the North Vietnamese patriarch who has shown over two decades a notorious independence of foreign pressures by friend and enemy alike. Intelligence reports from Hanoi show beyond question that Soviet influence is higher in Hanoi today than at any time since large-scale fighting started in Vietnam. Conversely, the influence of Communist China is now at a low ebb in Hanoi.

Accordingly, the backstage mediation by Moscow to help produce a settlement in Paris is viewed here as likely to have a continuing influence on Hanoi. Hardheaded diplomats, while ruling out any quick breakthrough, are hopeful that within six to eight weeks the present deadlock will begin to yield.

If it does not, President Nixon will be forced to try to break the deadlock by other means - possibly military re-escalation. Once that happens, the careful, behind-the-scenes work by the Soviet Union, coupled with its buildup of Mr. Nixon as a man of peace, will collapse. That is a development Moscow wants to avoid at all cost.

Part III
What Direction For Higher Education?

BY CHARLES MUSCATINE

(Editor's note: From the turmoil at Berkeley came the faculty report, "Education at Berkeley," which in turn has become the most hailed (and criticized) document in higher education. Here, in an article written originally for IBM, the man who headed the committee that wrote it, gives his views on what is wrong with the universities and what can be done about it.)

PART III

Who will run the new university? The answer depends on who will create it, and we need to assess carefully the promise (or the threat) of the activist students themselves. We must first recognize that the students-v-administration pattern visible in such conflicts as those at Berkeley, Chicago and Yale mask the realities of whatever educational power struggle there is. When campus political rights and off-campus activities are at issue, the students' natural enemies appear to be the administrators. But the faculty holds and exercises the balance of power. At Berkeley a massive majority vote by the faculty assisted activist students in obtaining political rights; a similar majority enabled the administration to keep some of the same students from overstepping those rights.

When the issue is education, the matter is absolutely plain. In our best universities it is the faculties who make educational policy; in this respect the students and the administration have a common interest and a common cause. I have at this moment on my desk a letter from the president of a student group at a state university. "We are currently working on a program," he writes, " to gain some needed reforms on this campus, now that we have a liberal president and an administration willing to work with students to obtain these reforms." The common problem is the faculty.

It is natural and almost inevitable that the faculty should continue to occupy this crucial and powerful position. The faculty is the university's central core of professional scholarship, the source of its continuing importance and prestige. The best administrators, many of them ex-faculty members, have all they can do to keep up with the impossible and thankless job of protecting and nourishing scholarship in the midst of an often misunderstanding, stingy or hostile environment. Except in the worst universities, they cannot dominate the faculty, though they may lead it. Students, on the other hand, do not by themselves promise to become a real power in the university. They lack continuity and, for the most part, ideology. As psychologist Kenneth Keniston has observed, today's student activist tends to express himself fully with a public demonstration of where he stands; he is rarely equipped to follow up by himself with the hard thinking and tedious work of constructive reform. In some of the smaller, innovative colleges whose structure is simple enough to be learned quickly, students have as part of their education been given important responsibility for educational policy, and they have done well. In some large universities formal consultation with students is an established institution and the feedback is invaluable. But the student movement nowhere seems ready to assume definitive power; it lacks real leadership.

If this leadership is not provided by the university, a certain amount can be found offering itself outside the walls; political theories of the far left and the far right; educational theorists from Paul Goodman to the alumni and trustees; taxpayers and legislators who have no more complicated desires than better teaching for the young and who may well attempt to take matters into their own unprofessional hands. The best hope for higher education in the future is that the great faculties will move now to create on their campuses some version of the new university without destructive conflict with students, administration or the public. Some faculties, such as those at Berkeley, Harvard, Yale, Chicago and Columbia, have already shown signs of concern and of movement.

The forces against change from outside the university are the trustee and the administrator's problem; the faculty is responsible for opposition from within. Professors are people, and are subject to their share of laziness and timidity. Some are professionally so out of date that they could not survive the searching dialogue of a new kind of education. Some are temperamentally conservative, and fear in any change the loss of traditional values. Others are merely technical specialists, outside the university tradition entirely; intent only on providing a narrow training, they may not feel responsible for the needs of students as human beings. Others are puritanical and punitive; they think only in terms of discipline and attendence records, rewards and punishments, and they dismiss as "fun and games" any change that aims to give students more freedom, responsibility, thinking time, room to experiment and make mistakes. Yet others, intoxicated with their new prestige, have forgotten what the legitimate obligations of the profession are.

On the professors' side there is much hope, however; I have so far described only a small proportion of those I know. Most have a genuine love of students; and there is a formidable ally in the scholar's very essence as scholar. Whether he is directed by the historical imagination or the scientific stance, his stock in trade is an appreciation of innovation and change. His marvelous professional talent for creative analysis, for new discovery, need only be applied to education itself and the new university will be on the way.

Frosh Pucksters Down Harvard, 4-3

BY STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

CAMBRIDGE - Defenseman Ken Steeves' second goal of the game at 11:25 of the third period lifted the UMass frosh pucksters to a 4-3 win over the Harvard JV's in a game played yesterday at frigid Watson Rink.

This was the fifth straight win for the Little Redmen and brings their record to 7-2.

In the early going, the squad appeared to be somewhat sluggish, a result no doubt of the six week vacation layoff. Later in the game, however, they shook off their rubber legs and, in spots, played as well as they have all year.

The Crimson took advantage of this early UMass lethargy and scored a quickie at 4:46 of the first period. Ed Gallagher scored from 12 feet out after taking passes from Oscar Oshry and Roy Koppich.

Steeves tied things up for UMass at 7:11 on a 30-foot slap shot into the left corner of the net. The assist went to Dan Reidy.

UMass was skating well at the end of the first and this carried over to the early portion of the second period when Bob Whelden got the first of his two goals. Taking quick passes off the faceoff from Reidy and Jack Edwards, he skated all alone on Harvard goalie Paul Oldfield and lifted the puck into the right corner.

Center Barry Johnson tied it up at 8:11. His shot seemed to have eyes as it weaved its way through three or four lunging sticks. Assists went to Dick Byrd and Andre Liemieux.

Whelden got his second goal at 5:57 of the third period. He scored off a scramble in front of the net after taking passes from Reidy and Edwards. Harvard tied it up once again at 10:05 when Dick Delaney scored on a deflection in front of the net. Assists went to Liemieux and Joel Baungarten.

This set the stage for Steeves' game winner 80 seconds later. Bruce Winter got the assist on the goal which was almost a carbon copy of the first one.

Harvard, losing by only 4-3, was not to be denied however, and kept up fairly constant pressure in the UMass zone for the last four minutes. With 90 seconds left, Oldfield was yanked in favor of a sixth skater. Only some clutch goal tending by P.J. Flaherty and some good defensive play in front of the net protected the one goal margin.

Hopefully, the Little Redmen have found their skating legs again. Saturday's game at Deerfield Academy should provide an indication. Faceoff is at 4 p.m.

UMass played a very respectable game against a good Army team (10-4-1) which previously has beaten Northeastern University, Penn, Princeton, Amherst, Tufts and A.I.C.

The Redmen's fourth in the first period can be attributed to the strong play of the four defensemen, Billy McMann, Doug Powling, Joe DiCicco and Rocky Stone. Goalie Larry Walsh had 33 saves, in the game, 27 of which came in the final two periods. The Redmen showed good hustle on the Cadets big home ice.

The next game will be played Saturday night against the University of Vermont in Burlington. The UMass-Amherst game, originally scheduled for Feb. 19, has been rescheduled for next Mon., Feb. 10, at 7:30 p.m.

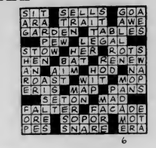
Grapplers Stay Undefeated, Down Springfield, 22-21

by bob ganley
Staff Reporter

The UMass freshman wrestling team kept their unbeaten record clean as they defeated Springfield College 22-21 Tuesday night. Trailing 21-6 after the 160-pound contest, the Little Redmen won all of the remaining matches, including a pin in the final match to claim the victory.

UMass got off to a bad start as they forfeited in the 115-pound class. Bob Parent wasn't up to the capabilities of his opponent as he lost a 9-2 decision in the 123-pound class. Sheldon Goldberg got UMass' first points as he won his 130-pound contest, 9-1. Clay Jester, a 137-pounder made it two in a row for the Redmen as he defeated his opponent, 5-3, with the benefit of two minutes riding time.



Springfield, however, almost put the match out of reach as Steve Jones (145) and Dave Richmond (152) were pinned in the second rounds of their matches. Larry Piccioli was decisioned 4-2 in the 160-pound match, but at this point the Little Redmen started on the long road back.

Ernie Leport decisioned his counterpart 6-2 at 167-pounds and Rod Loiselle (177 lbs.,) won a high scoring bout by the score of 12-7.

At this point the score was 21-12, and UMass needed pins in both of the remaining matches to gain victory. Derwood James got the first pin at 1:43 of the first period of his 191-pound match, and the pressure was put on heavyweight Carl Dambman. Dambman performed beautifully as he was beating his opponent 6-0 when he pinned him in the second period.

Redmen Lose To BC, 78-67...

By MIKE CURRAN Sports Editor

Boston College, displaying great poise and clutch free throw shooting, threw back a valiant UMass upset bid and defeated the Redmen, 78 - 67, before a turnaway crowd of 4300 at the Cage.

The battle for Number One ranking among New England Cage teams was won by the Eagles because of their superior shooting ability and ballhandling. Backcourtmen Jim O'Brien and Billy Evans were particularly outstanding for the visitors who shot a sizzling 70 per cent in the second half.

UMass got off to a quick start in this one as Dennis Chapman's drive off the opening tap drew first blood for the home boys. Two superb pivotmen, Pete Gayeska and Eagle Terry Driscoll, then took over the show as they exchanged foul shots and rebounds. With 13:36 to go in the first period, the contest was all knotted up at seven apiece.

After Ken Mathias and Chapman traded hoops with Frank FitzGerald and O'Brien, Ellerbrook got hot for the Redmen and his scoring pushed them into a 19-15 edge as the crowd went wild.

BC was not intimidated, however. With Gayeska on the bench because of foul trouble, they took control of the boards and ran off 10 points in a row to take a 25-19 lead.

A duel between Joey DiSarcina and Evans was the highlight of the remaining five first half minutes. These two guys have to be the fastest, scrappiest backcourtmen in the East. They looked like a pair of Siamese twins and often could only be separated by their uniforms.

The Eagles had a 34-24 advantage with 50 seconds remaining, but a bank shot by Gayeska and two DiSarcina charity stripe tosses narrowed the gap to six at halftime.

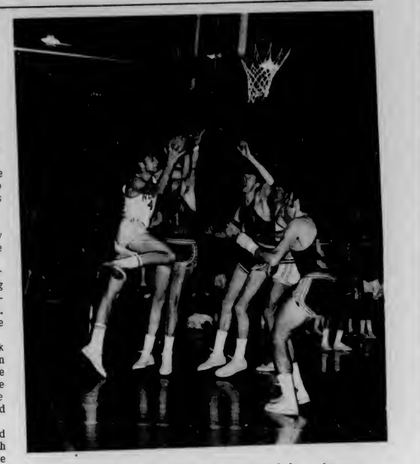
UMass started just as quickly in the second half with Chapman scoring the first four points of the period. Minutes later the offensive rebounding of Mathias and Gayeska pulled the Redmen to within one.

At the 14:53 mark, BC's Tom Verroneau blew his cool and drew a technical. Chapman, who was giving his 6'4 opponent a lesson in offensive boardwork, took advantage of the outburst and pumped in three foul shots to give the cheering partisans a 41-40 lead.

A few minutes later, though, the fortunes of combat turned the other way as Gayeska drew his fourth personal and was forced to serve a stretch on the bench.

Vinny Costello came off the pine and teamed up with Driscoll to recapture the lead for the boys from the Heights.

An injury to referree Joe DiBonis caused a 10 minute delay and afterwards the Redmen were just not as smooth.



Dick Samuelson battled his taller opponent for all the way, scoring on a pretty bank shot, but Driscoll was immense off the boards. BC held a 52-47 margin at the 10 minute mark.

Two hoops from Ellerbrook brought UMass closer, but when O'Brien started popping for the visitors, it looked bad for the home team. The Brooklyn sophomore threw three bombs in a row and all found the cords.

Coach Bob Cousy then ordered his troops into a freeze, and with Evans and O'Brien handling the ball, UMass' fate was sealed. Gayeska left on fouls with 3:24 left in the game.

Substitutes Billy Greeley, Jack Gallagher, Bob Dempsey and John Shockro hustled all over the court pressing the Eagles, but Cousy's men had too much poise to let this one get away.

The final score of BC 78 - 67 was the result of superb free throw shooting by the visitors. UMass actually scored the same number of field goals as its opponent.

COMING FROM BEHIND the backboard for a layup attempt is UMass forward Ken Mathias. Defending for B.C. is Terry Driscoll (51) and Tom Verroneau (53). (MDC photo by Bob Mangiaratti).

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Driscoll led all scorers with 24 points, followed by Ellerbrook with 21. . .UMass outrebounded the Eagles, 35-32. . .The fans lined up in the cold waiting for the doors to open, but at least 500 had to be turned away. . .

But Little Redmen Roll Over Eaglets, 99-67

By PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

In an awesome display of basketball power, the UMass freshman basketball team smashed the Boston College freshman from the unbeaten ranks with a 99-67 rout last night at the packed Curry Hicks Cage. It was the first UMass frosh basketball win over the boys from the Heights since 1966 and upped the Little Redman record to 8 - 0.

The early going gave no indication that the contest would turn into the runaway it was. UMass scored the first seven points on two hoops and a free throw by Julius Erving and a tip in by Rich Vogeley.

However, B.C. kept coming back mainly behind the excellent play of Jim Phelan, who canned a couple of long hoops to bring the Eaglets close. Although dominating the boards, the Little Redmen could not pull away and at 10:18 of the first half led by only two 20-18.

It was then that the home frosh exploded for ten straight points and in the process got a lead that would grow only larger as the game went on. The big guns in the streak were John Bettancourt and Chris Coffin. Bettencourt bombed in a couple of long jumpers while Coffin was getting some valuable inside points.

B.C. went into a full court press at the five minute mark trailing by 12. However, Mike Pagliara along with Bettancourt ripped that maneuver to shreds and UMass steadily upped their advantage. Near the end of the half, Erving made a couple of plays that brought the crowd from their sets.

He blocked one attempted jumper caught the ball, drove the length and was fouled. Seconds later he came from half court and blocked a breakaway layup attempt by B.C. guard Kevin Cummings.

At half time the Little Redmen led 49-33, and B.C. would never be any closer. The second half was a duplicate. The Eaglets, unable to do anything inside against the taller UMass team, was forced to shoot from outside where they found little luck. The Eaglets ultimately shot only 33 per cent from the field.

The bulk of the UMass scoring was coming from inside. Vogeley, Coffin and Erving were playing volleyball off the offensive boards getting numerous points on tipins. And if the B.C. fell back to defend inside, Pagliara and Bettancourt were hitting from outside.

After the midway point of the half, UMass never led by less than 25. The only suspense was whether the Little Redmen would hit a 100 and that was the only failure the frosh would suffer.

Drakesters Win, 44-39

Vic "Pappy" Papadinis sparked a second-half rally which carried the powerful Drakesters to a 44-39 victory over Theta Chi in the Intramural basketball Semi-finals last night.

A 24-point outburst by Sam Provo was not enough to turn the tide for the brothers who were overpowered on the boards by the Village Inn frontline.

At 7:30 this evening in Boyden, the Grayson Aces will do battle with the Drakesters to determine which hopp squad is tops on campus.

Varsity Puckmen Lose, 5-1, To the West Point Cadets

BY KEN SCHWARTZ Staff Reporter

WEST POINT, N.Y. - After leading 1-0 at the end of the first period, the UMass varsity hockey team was defeated, 5-1, by a strong West Point team yesterday at West Point, N.Y.

The Cadets were led by ECAC scoring leader Dave Merhar from Ely, Minn. Merhar had two goals and two assists, both goals coming in the decisive second period. His linemates, Tony Curran and Dave Young, who combine to form one of the best lines in the East, scored the other three Army goals.

After a slow start, the Redmen came on like gangbusters. They went on the score board at 12.14 of the opening period on a goal scored by Co-captain Jeff Sanborn who was fed from just inside the blueline by center John Hartnett.

Army came back strong in the second period, outshooting UMass 17-3, while getting three goals from the high-scoring first line.

Merhar has 30 goals, 20 assists and 50 points. Curran, the second leading scorer in the East, has 11 goals, 35 assists for 46 points, while junior Young has eight goals, 14 assists for a total of 22 points.

Unfortunately, the third period found more of the same as the Cadets added two more goals. Each was scored by the first

Mercifully Little Redman coach Peter Broaca pulled his starters and played substitutes who got a chance to perform before the huge crowd. The gathering saved its greatest roar of the evening for Erving. Big Julie was tendered a prolonged standing ovation for an immense all-around show that included 18 points, 18 rebounds and eight blocked shots.

UMass placed six men in double figures, while shooting 55 per cent. In addition to Erving, Vogeley had 18, along with 12 rebounds, Coffin 15, Pagliara 14, Bettancourt 13 and Bill Kesgen had 12. B.C. was led by Phelan with 18, Dan Metzler with 11 and Dan Reardon with 10.

Dr. Martin Sweig, left, of Boston receives from Secretary of State John F. X. Davoren his commission as a UMass trustee. The appointment was made by Gov. John Volpe before he resigned to take up DOT post. The Executive Council confirmed the appointment of Dr. Sweig, who has long been the top administrative aide to Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives John W. McCormack.

House Leaders Predict Failure For Bill to Hike UMass Tuition

By RON LABREQUE
Senior Reporter

A bill filed in the State House of Representatives which would raise tuition in all state and community colleges and the University of Massachusetts appears doomed even before it reaches committee.

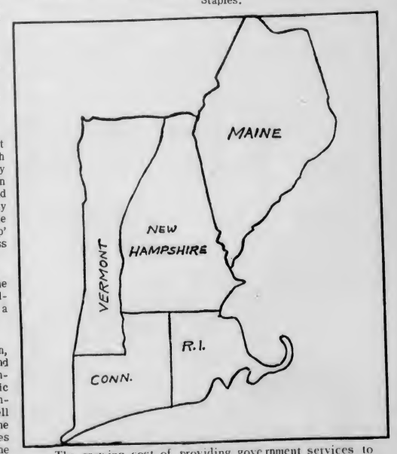
Rep. Charles W. Long (D) of Westwood filed a bill which would raise tuition to a flat rate of $500 a year for all the schools affected. Passage of the bill would mean a $300 a year increase in tuition at UMass.

David Bartley, newly elected Speaker of the House and UMass graduate said Thursday he was "100 per cent opposed to this type of legislation". He said it would not add substantially to state revenue and would place a great burden on the lower and middle income family to pay a high tuition rate which they cannot afford.

Bartley's position on the bill is a key factor in its future success and his strong opposition indicates defeat for House Bill #2690.

"It would place another roadblock on the most important natural resource, the youth of Massachusetts", he stated.

The bill will be heard by the Committee on Education in Room 480 of the State House on Feb. 26 at 10 a. m. Rep. George Rogers, Chairman of the Committee indicated in a letter to a UMass undergraduate that he will "do my best to see that the bill is defeated." Rogers added that "such legislation in not in the best interests of my constituents nor of education generally."



Senate Calls to Defeat Tuition Hike Legislation

BY ANNE GIARDINA
AND SUSAN SPUTRIC
Senate Reporters

The Student Senate last night voted unanimously to recommend to the Massachusetts Legislature to defeat a bill which proposed a $300 hike in all State Colleges and University tuition.

The Senate then passed two bills recommending to the Governor and General Court that the: Purchase, possession, and use of alcoholic beverages; and also the age for voting be reduced to 18. It was noted that there are movements on several campuses to lower the voting age. Main debate was confined to the question of whether passing bills of this nature (ie, moral and/or outside interests) would be effective. It was related to the Senate by one of the Senators that it seemed that these questions were decided on the basis of "what you think about it". On the opposing side it was noted that "the problems of the world affect all of us" and that "student opinion should be carried beyond the University." Both bills were passed, with the bill concerning the drinking age postponed to be reconsidered for one week.

At the opening of the session the Senate voted to remove three of its members, by ruling on a section of the Student Gov't Association Constitution which states that all members of the Senate must be in "good standing" with the University. The three members removed were Ladislas LaRochelle, Ann Quirk, and Richard Staples.

The growing cost of providing government services to citizens of the Commonwealth has posed a problem for all Bay State legislators in recent years. However a private citizen has suggested a plan which would apparently absolve the State from all financial responsibility and administrative duties. Gerard Ratchiff's letter to the BOSTON GLOBE explaining the plan and illustrated by the above map, has not yet been adopted by legislators.

Plagarism Rocks English Department

BY WILLIAM R. DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

Most English professors admit that plagarism is widespread at the University. One, in fact, estimates that in the freshman and sophomore English courses one out of three papers is likely to be plagarized.

"I begin to suspect all students when I catch one...all confidence breaks down," says Prof. Arthur W. Plumstead.

According to Prof. John Teunissen, who failed six out of his sixty English 125 students for plagarism last semester, "It destroys any possibility of having a meaningful dialogue."

Teunissen, a recent arrival from the University of Saskatchewan, is quite disturbed, as are others, about the morality of the situation. He said the students he caught "regretted nothing but being caught."

Four of the six he claims admitted that they would "prefer dishonest success to honest failure."

Prof. Mason I. Lowance, however, feels that the English 125 and 126 courses have been "extremely satisfying" for him.

He also adds, "I don't think on the whole the students are cynical about morality or work."

As a possible solution to the plagarism problem, Lowance is proposing a student review board to deal with cases of plagarism and academic dishonesty.

Currently action is at the discretion of the instructor who may or may not bring the case before a judicial board. According to Ernest H. Hofer, associate head of the English department, "As far as the department is concerned, the classroom is sacrosanct."

Lowance feels that students should judge the cases of fellow students because on a grade curve the honest students are being hurt by dishonest students who receive undeserved grades.

He adds, "Student power and student responsibility go hand in hand."

Prof. Arthur F. Kinney has a similar proposal but his review board would be composed of faculty members. He sees this as a way of greatly reducing the number of cases of plagarism.

"It has been my observation that students who talk this over with their own instructors are usually able to escape with a D or F on the paper, or a verbal warning and a promise. This is now widely known, and it is no longer in the least traumatic to be 'called up' before an instructor to discuss plagarism," he says.

It is also reported that the English Department Undergraduate Council is going to make a proposal on this problem.

Until further action is taken, the department is going to stand by the Student Handbook recommendation: "In cases of academic dishonesty, the penalties may include failure in the course as well as disciplinary probation for the first offense. Repeated offenses may lead to separation from the University."

However, this is not expected to drastically reduce plagarism at UMass because as one instructor said, "I just caught the stupid ones."

Donahue Backs Med School In Face of Criticism

BY SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

State Senate President Maurice A. Donahue told the DAILY COLLEGIAN last night that he gives full support to President Lederle's desire to move ahead at full speed with the construction of a state medical school at the Worcester site.

Donahue, once chairman of a committee which produced a favorable report advocating the establishment of a state medical school at Worcester, stated that he is "for building the school as soon as possible."

This reaffirms his previous stand, where he is quoted in the BOSTON GLOBE as saying: "I have not changed my position one iota. I am in favor of the medical school and I am in favor of Worcester. The need has been established and I hope the legislature will vote the financing necessary."

Growing protest by taxpayers and the rising cost of construction - now set at - $124 million - have forced a reassessment of existing plans for the institution by the Governor and state administration.

President Lederle has stated that expansion of other medical schools would only increase the cost to the tax payers because of the delay required for design and construction, in addition to the loss of Federal matching funds already awarded the state medical school.

Nixon Plans European Trip Later This Month

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon said Thursday he will visit five Western European nations this month in hopes of "strengthening and revitalizing the American-European community."

Nixon said also he will begin calling American troops home when he is satisfied South Vietnamese force s can take on a greater share of their own nation's defense.

And he said the United States will now take the initiative in trying to defuse the Middle East crisis.

Presiding over his second news conference, in the East Room of the White House, the President and his questioners bore down heavily on foreign affairs.

But he accepted a suggestion that he is distrusted by some American Negroes and said "I can only say that, by my actions as President, I hope to rectify that."

Nixon's first foreign mission as President will take him to heads of government in Brussels, London, Bonn, Rome, and Paris. He will go also to West Berlin and will visit Pope Paul VI at the Vatican, and Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, head of the U.S. delegation to the Paris peace talks.

The week-long trip will begin Feb. 23.

Nixon emphasized it will be "a workin g trip rather than a protocol one." He's not even taking his wife along.

"As far as the agenda is concerned for these meetings, it is wide open,' he said, describing the mission as "only a first step in achieving a purpose that I have lon g felt is vital to the future of peace for the United States and for the world. That is the strengthening and revitalization of the American - European community."

Nixon said he has no plans to confer in Paris with North Vietnamese or National Liberation Front representatives to the peace conference.

And while he said he believes a meeting with Soviet leaders "should take place at a future time," he feels the groundwork for such talks should be laid carefully, in part by such visits to allies as he is about to begin.

The President said he hopes as a result of the visit "this great alliance, which was brought together by a common fear 20 years ago, will be held together now and strengthened by a common sense of purpose,"

Nixon was asked about a statement by South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu that Saigon's army is capable of relieving a sizeable number of U.S. fighting men.

"I do not want an American boy to be in Vietnam for one day longer than is necessary for our national interest," the President said. "As our commanders in the field determine that the South Vietnamese are able to assume a greater portion of their responsibility for the defense of their own territory, troops will come back.

But he said he has no announcement at present about the return of troops. Nixon said as a result of a review of U.S. policy toward the Middle East, "What we see now is a new policy on the part of the United States in assuming the initiative.

Freshman Faces Court Charges for Hoax

A UMass freshman will appear in court today for playing a cruel hoax on an elderly Amherst woman, as police attempt to end annoying and obscene phone calls. Conviction carries a maximum fine of $500 and-or three months in jail.

Pretending to be a returning Vietnam soldier just arrived at Bradley Field, the 19 year old youth told the woman he dialed the wrong number as he tried to reach his family to inform them of his arrival. The call was alledgedly made from his own telephone.

Sgt. Weymouth Heath of the Amherst department said the UMass student then asked the woman ot telephone his family and inform them of his whereabouts. She agreed to do so and received the number of the student's UMass telephone number. When she called the number the youth, assuming to be his "father", sharply told her that his "son" had been killed two weeks before in Vietnam.

Very much upset, the woman and her husband reported the incident and the phone number to the police. The police traced the call to the freshman's dormitory where he was apprehended.

The little invoked statue states that "Whoever telephones another person, or causes any person to be telephoned to, repeatedly, for the sole purpose of harrassing, annoying, or molesting such person or his family . . . shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or both."

Richard Kim Resigns, States Future Plans

By Richard Kim
Patt Francis '70

"Somehow, this year I have lots to write." Richard Kim cites this as his main reason for resigning his position as associate professor in the Department of English. He will remain connected with the University as an adjunct professor.

Kim has just had a novel, THE INNOCENT, published in October. He describes it as "a novel about political revolution, a military revolution in Korea." He said that Korea was the most convenient location for his own imagination, since he knows the country and Kim served in the Korean army during the Revolution. It was there that he became fascinated by the idea of revolution, and the ideas behind it.

He had been involved with a group of people who were talking about staging a revolution. " I thought it might be interesting to think about what would be in - volved. I am talking about revolution as a purely political situation, an armed military revolt. There are many moral and political problems involved."

Kim feels that there are certain men who are capable of theorizing and intellectualizing a revolution, while others are capable of carrying out the actions. These are the ones who must bear the consequences of their actions.

Kim will be working on two non-fiction works. One is an introduction to modern-day Korea, and the other is "a sort of autobiography, about what it's like to grow up in a foreign country."

In addition, Kim plans to write another novel, and a collection of short stories. Presently, he is working on an article for the BOSTON GLOBE SUNDAY magazine.

Before coming to UMass in 1964 Kim taught creative writing at Long Beach (Calif.) State College. He majored in history and political science at college. He grinned, "You publish a little and become known, and soon English departments want to hire you to teach."

Grad. Senate Makes Plans

Representation of graduate students in the Faculty Senate sponsored long range planning agency is one of the items on a full agenda for the Monday night's meeting of the Graduate Student Senate released by Thomas Minogue, its president.

The Faculty Senate at its last meeting proposed formation under its auspices of a broad-based, well financed long range planning committee which would provide channels for the expression of the views of all elements of the campus community. At present, long range planning is centralized as a function of the university administration.

Dean of Students William Field is scheduled to speak at the meeting, and other members of the administration may also be present, according to Minogue.

Other scheduled topics include a proposed study of the university's fee schedule for graduate students, graduate student representation on the Faculty Senate and on its Academic Affairs Committee and the proposed national day of research stoppage. This nationally publicized anti-Vietnamese War project is expected to involve graduate students and faculty of several universities across the nation. Further action on the report of the parking committee is expected to be taken.

The meeting is scheduled for the Commonwealth Room on the first floor of the Student Union at 8:30 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

Second Pass-Fail Course Permitted EDUC 270 Students

The Faculty Senate voted Thursday evening to allow those upperclassmen presently enrolled in EDUC 270, " Educational Perspectives in Problems of Race Relations," to enroll in one additional course on a pass/fail basis, subject to the established pass/fail regulations.

Confusion and uncertainty regarding the pass/fail status of upperclassmen in the course arose following a ruling which disallowed a second pass/fail course for those upperclassmen. Since pass/fail was an integral element of the Education course, it was felt by most students that their normally-allowed single pass/fail-per-semester authorization was unaffected by the Education course.

The original vote by the Faculty Senate early in January left the question of a second pass/fail course uncertain; yesterday afternoon's action showed further uncertainty by that Senate as to the original effect of its action. Following some discussion, however, the Senate did clarify and make explicit its intention. The present authorization for two pass/fail courses per semester (for those upperclassmen in EDUC 270) is to stand for this present Spring semester only. This coming Fall, EDUC 270 will be their only pass/fail course for those juniors and seniors enrolled.

N. E. S. Revamps Program this Semester

The Northern Education Service orientation during the first week of school was a moderate success according to committee members. About 150 new tutors signed up while only a few veterans from last semester showed up. Generally, from the vantage point of this weeks orientation, N.E.S. promises to improve to become an active campus community organization.

The orientation spread over four evenings providing ample opportunity for personal contact. The graduate volunteer help from the School of Education provided informative and diversified talks. These teaching and training sessions under their guidance will surely make for better tutors without which the program is nothing.

The orientation covered such things as the cultural differences that may be present between a UMass tutor and a child in the poor areas of Springfield. Suggestions on more tutor-tutee contact were made, and a thing that is new to the education field itself was tried. Tutors of last semester took the part of the tutee while a new volunteer took the role of a new tutor. Observations were made and talked about. Naturally the many questions about the program itself were answered.

The buses start running Monday the tenth of February. They will leave the Student Union at 2:30 and 6:30 p.m. A representative from the NES Coordination Committee will be there for the first week. Other than thanks to those who helped with the orientation, anyone wishing to help in the program should contact either Ernest Reis or the Martin Luther King Council in the Hampshire House.

The Cage Caper

Currie Hicks Cage was filled to capacity for the past two home basketball games and it was a long-awaited welcome sight. However, the fact that many students were deprived of admission to both of these games because of the limited seating capacity means that now is the time to do something constructive about plans and the building of a facility that will accomodate sufficient numbers of students for concerts, convocations, athletic contests, etc.

Those who were locked out of the Cage Wednesday night were for the most part vehement in their criticism of the police, safety officials and athletic department personnel who are charged with the responsibility of adhering to fire and safety regulations concerning the maximum capacity for persons i n the Cage. Some of the criticism is valid.

The police and safety officials are subject to criticism for their inconsistency in enforcing the fire laws. If they are going to adhere rigidly to the regulations as was done Wednesday, then they should do it all the time. The laws were broken last week by approximately 1000 persons and probably by twice that many during Homecoming Weekend. With those instances in mind, disappointed basketball fans had reason to be upset at this sudden shift to rigid control on the part of the safety officials.

Also, the Athletic Department has to face its share of abuse. The department had roped off two sections of bleachers to be saved for Boston College fans. Sources within the department stated that this was a condition they were forced to agree to for B.C. to play here. But roping seats isn't done for any other visitor. It isn't even done for UMass ticket holders. Boston College doesn't return the favor to any extent to its visitors, least of all to UMass. In a game that had the importance of Wednesday's and with the obviously large student interest, the largest possible number of seats should have been made available to the students who, after all, are the ones who support athletics.

But the biggest object of criticism should be the Cage itself. Overloading the building for events i s no solution. It would probably take a calamity such as a balcony or bleacher collapse to convince those who have to be convinced that the time for a facility to replace the Cage is long overdue.

Simple arithmetic proves that there is room in the Cage for only one out of every four full-time students on campus. Therefore, action on a building that will have a seating capacity of at least 12,000 is now a must, and mass rational student support will definitely help speed a solution to this problem.

For Academic Reform

As the University of Massachusetts has expanded in size so too have the problems of academics also increased in this age of rapid change. Perhaps it is now time for people within the structure of the University to evaluate the situation and recommend necessary changes in the University. This sentiment is apparently echoed by the Faculty Senate in its decision to recommend a full time University Planning Committee to study the future academic development of the University.

One basic academic change that should be studied by any such committee should be the possible adoption of an academic system similar to that in effect at Harvard, Brandeis, and recently adopted at Boston University. This system is what is known as the four-course program in which each student takes four courses rather than the customary five, one of which is a two hour seminar in which enrollment does not exceed sixteen students. With the addition of a seminar to a student's curriculum, it would not only provide the intimacy and rapport of a small group but would enhance the exchange of ideas and thoughts rather than the rubber-stamped answers of the multiple-choice exam, which is a constant by-product of large lectures.

Indeed under a four course program each student would be expected to do more outside work because of the lighter class load, but under such a program it would also be necessary to eliminate many requirements and pre-requisites which would perhaps make the added work more meaningful and interesting to the individual. Few people on campus would dispute the need to eliminate certain requirements and pre-requisites regardless of whether or not a four-course program is adopted.

No doubt it is time for people within the structure of the University to evaluate the direction of education in this ever-expanding complex of ours. It is also time to look into the adoption of the four-course program plus the elimination of many requirements and pre-requisites which are perhaps irrelevant to our education in this day and age.

"Tut Tut — A Mere Sliver Of Ice"

INSIDE REPORT

Finch vs. Thurmond

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — Robert Finch, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), is moving toward mandatory school desegregation in the South, and hence a massive confrontation between him and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina in the Nixon administration's first internal crisis.

Finch clothed his order of last Wednesday (Jan. 29), withdrawing Federal funds from five segregated Southern school districts, with face-saving gimmicks for Thurmond. But faulty press interpretation of these gimmicks as outright surrender to the South all but obscures the fact that Finch, while speaking more softly than the Johnson administration, is ready to use the big stick of Federal power to compel school desegregation.

Thus, a critical struggle inside the Nixon administration looms between Finch and other Nixon intimates who believe the President made a commitment to relax enforcement. The outcome is still uncertain but Finch was the clear winner last week in the first major battle inside the new Administration.

That this battle took place so soon after Mr. Nixon's inauguration is due largely to Finch's Democratic predecessor as Secretary, Wilbur Cohen - a cool and wily operative in the bureaucracy. Instead of settling the five cases before he left office, Cohen bequeathed them as a political time bomb to the Republicans with action required by Jan. 29.

Moreover, all these cases were so uncomplicated that none of the "freedom of choice" plans presented by the five local school boards could be defended as real desegregation. Each contained the familiar new pattern of Southern segregation - the old Negro schools continuing as all-black and the old white schools as all-white except for a smattering of Negro students for the facade of desegregation.

What acutely heightened the political tension of Finch's decision was the location of two of these districts in the home state of Thurmond, the President's most valuable ally in carrying the South.

Throughout the campaign, Southerners assumed that Mr. Nixon would stop withholding Federal school money. Nothing said privately by White House aides during the interregnum changed that impression.

But Finch wants to bring Negroes into the Republican party and is a strong civil rights advocate. Acting as Finch's chief deputy without portfolio is California State Assemblyman John Veneman (likely to end up as Under Secretary), even stronger on civil rights. The staffer handling the school question is Leon Panetta, formerly an aide to defeated liberal Sen. Thomas Kuchel of California.

In general, Finch's aides urged him to cut off funds to the five districts without qualification. But strong pressure for a stall came both from Congressional Southerners and White House aides.

More significantly, Finch last week sought - though unsuccessfully - to retain Ruby Martin, a militant Negro lawyer, as director of HEW's Office of Civil Rights, offering her higher pay and direct responsibility to the Secretary.

The Finch team plans more emphasis on negotiation and conciliation in resolving desegregation disputes than in the LBJ era. Finch may also lower standards defining what constitutes acceptable desegregation. But the events last week showed that Finch will not tolerate token desegregation masquerading as "freedom of choice" - unless, of course, Thurmond persuades the President to overrule him. Whether Thurmond succeeds in that should be clear within the next 60 days, when those five cases are disposed of once and for all.

"No university president is inaugurated, few speak, only rarely is a commencement address given, no anniversary is celebrated, and no great educator is retired without a reference to the continuing importance of liberal education for its own sake. In part this reflects the paucity of noncontroversial topics available to men of high reputaion for wisdom but little specific information. It reflects also the deep conviction of the modern college president that any unsatisfactory educational tendency can be exorcised by sufficently solemn oratory. To transfer actual funds from engineering to fine arts would be more difficult. Yet even the oratory, however vacuous, suggests the problem. The industrial system has induced an enormous expansion in education. This can only be welcomed. But unless its tendencies are clearly foreseen and strongly resisted, it will place a preclusive emphasis on education that most serves the needs, but least questions the goals, of that system."

Bologna Summer School Planned Culture of Italy Highlights Program

BY JOAN WORSNOP
Staff Reporter

Applications for the UMass Summer School Program in Bologna are now being accepted according to Professor George Kirk who will be in charge of the program in Italy this summer. Prof. Kirk accompanied the program last year also.

The program originated in 1966.

Most of the men participating in the program live in apartments out from the center of Bologna. But Dr. Quint said that the "pensions" were probably more advantageous because they are rented out by Italian landladies. This environment is much closer to the real Italian way of life.

Probably the largest problem for the students is the initial "culture shock." Most students do not have a knowledge of the language and must learn to fend for themselves. Dr. Quint said that it took the majority of students only about one week to adjust.

The courses offered are mostly Italian centered. Included are Renaissance Art, beginning Italian, Roman History, European History Since 1918, and Comparative European Government. The most popular course is Renaissance Art because Bologna, as well as all of Italy, is itself a museum.

There are four class days, Monday through Thursday. The classes run from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m., leaving afternoons free and time for the scheduled field trips. Dr. Quint said that they wan' the students to study, but a large part of the experience is exposure to the culture.

Included in the field trips is a four day trip to Rome. The accommodations are good, and the return trip is by the road to Assisi. Dr. Quint said that the trip to Venice was "the great trip'; "you have to be there to feel the atmosphere of the place!'. There is an overnight trip to Siena, the "jewel Renaissance city", and there are one day trips to Revena and Florence. These trips are not guided tours.

The program ends August 10, at which time the students have approximately three weeks off; they are free to travel anywhere. There are very reduced student rates for travel.

There are still spaces open for students who would like to participate in the program this summer. The $875 cost covers everything except the three week period at the end. Loans are available to students up to $500 and $600. For information, see or call Miss Patricia Wilkey, room 714, Thompson Hall, extension 545-1330.

Ski Team Journeys To Cannon Mt. for Weekend Meets

Skiers travel to Lincoln, N.H., today for a weekend of races in the area. Tufts University will sponsor a slalom tomorrow at Cannon Mt. The following day, Bentley College will host a giant slalom at nearby Mittersill Ski Area. Cannon Mt. was the site of the 1967 North American Alpine Championships.

The Redmen will try and regroup after their dismal showing in the slalom at Middlebury. In the opener, five of the varsity "A" team crashed, giving UMass a big deficit to make up in the conference standings.

The team has worked hard at this event over the past weekend, and Coach Dick MacConnell feels that a good, conservative effort should ensure that his boys will finish near the top.

The giant slalom Sunday will give UMass the opportunity to move up in the conference as this seems to be their strongest event. Dave Kamila and Jim Garstang led the team to an earlier victory this season and will probably be seeded one and two for this race.

Goober Curran, a sophomore, who finished near the top in the last race and who has been performing well in practice is expected to be moved up in the running order.

The Redmen hope to place five of their men in the top fifteen to take this event.

Several members of the "B" team will travel with the squad this weekend. Coach MacConnell is particularly interested in Joe Riggors who skis the new French way. Riggors could get the nod for the "A" team as his wild Killy style makes him a potential winner in any rac

The following weekend the skiers will participate in a two day meet at Dartmouth.

Track Team Drops Opener To Dartmouth

A powerful and well-balanced Dartmouth track team defeated the UMass Redmen, 62-47. It was the first meet and the first loss for the Redmen as they opened their indoor track season.

The score of the meet does not reflect the closeness of the competition in the meet. UMass, displaying a lot of determination and spirit, battled the more experienced Dartmouth Indians on nearly even terms right up to the final two events, the mile and two-mile relays.

The Redmen were behind by only six points going into these two races, but Dartmouth's depth proved superior and they managed to squeak out a win in the mile relay to take the meet.

Many of the events were extremely close, and a break or two in UMass' favor could have turned the whole meet around. Two photo finishes, one in the 60-yard high hurdles and the other in the 1000-yard run, both awarded to Dartmouth.

Cal Carpenter lost a tough one in the high jump. He tied with Don Halka of Dartmouth at 6'5 but was awarded second place because of more missed attempts. He narrowly missed at 6'6-1/2, which would have been a new University record.

Other outstanding performers for the Redmen were Ron Wayne, winning the mile in a personal record time of 4:18.4; Walter Mayo, who continued his domination of the 50-yard dash edging Dave Marble for first place.

Dave Canterbury, a sophomore, led a UMass sweep of the long jump. Paul Hoss, who is just beginning to compete after a severe knee injury, led another sweep by easily winning the two-mile run in a good time of 9:32.2. Coach Ken O'Brien felt that despite this being the first meet for the Redmen, they did well against a competitively sharp team who had already run in five or six meets.

The Coach was pleased that so many UMass men had established or come close to winning personal record times and distances. He cited the fine performance of the mile-relay team as an example with splits of 51.5 for Diego Gonzalez, 50.7 for Don Chace, 51.8 for Gerald Spellman and 50.3 for anchor man Bob Hasselbaum. The team recorded its fastest time ever this early in the season.

In the freshman meet, the Little Redmen were scalped, 69-34, by a strong Dartmouth frosh team. Lack of depth was the main factor in the freshman loss as Dartmouth captured eight first places and outpointed the Redmen in seconds and thirds.

The UMass loss was not without some bright sports. Distance man Don Dunsky ran away with the mile and also took second in the two-mile. Wins were also recorded in the 600-yard run by Al Mangan, the high jump by Ed Shaughnessey and in the 60-yard high hurdles by Peter Bradlee.

Hoopmen Pit Perfect Conference Card Against Vermont

BY MIKE CURRAN Sports Editor

Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen turn to Yankee Conference play after almost a two month layoff when they entertain the scrappy Vermont Catamounts tomorrow night at the Cage. Game time is 7:30.

UMass 5-0 conference record will be on the line and the way Vermont is playing, a Redman letdown could be costly. The Catamounts, playing the best ball of anyone in the conference except UMass, have won five of their last six games, upping their season chart to 10-8, 3-5 in the conference.

Two weekends ago, Coach Art Loche's boys upset powerful St. Peter's of Jersey City, N.J., 67-63 at Burlington, Vermont also crushed Springfield, one of the top small college teams in New England.

Frank Martiniuk, a 6'2 junior forward, has been the outstanding performer for the Green Mountain Staters so far this season. The Union City, N.J., native is averaging 19.2 per game which includes one outburst of 41 points.

Bob Hutton, another Jersey junior, starts at the other forward position. Hutton, who stands 6'4, averages 12.2 points a game and showed his board strength in Wednesday's game with New Hampshire, which the Catamounts won, by getting 13 rebounds.

At center will be Brattleboro, Vt., native Ray Bueb. The 6'6 junior is averaging 11.3 points and 8.6 rebounds. Also seeing action at the center position will be 6'7 Aldo Salati. The junior, who hails from Union City, N.J., averages 5.3.

At one guard spot is Bob Zeiff. He has averaged 4.5 points a game.

The guard starter is very familiar to UMass however. He is 6'3 senior Dave Lapointe. The Winooski, Vt., native is one of the fine backcourtmen in the conference and averages 13.4 points a game. Seeing action for the Catamounts at both guard and forward is 6'2 sophomore Tom Clay from North Easton who averages 6.1.

UMass will have a big height advantage when they go against Vermont but no one on the team can take the visitors lightly. They have the firepower to give any team trouble.

Drakesters Gain Campus Hoop Title

The powerful Drakesters, led by Vic Papadinis' 25 points, rolled to a 61-40 victory over the Grayson Aces and gain the campus intramural basketball title. The Drakesters were the independent division champion.

The Village Inn boys had too much height for the slick shooting Aces. Behind the shooting of Herman Curtis, Leon Saunders and Ezzard Starks, the dormitory champs stayed close for most of the first half. However, the strong rebounding of big Joe Kistigan along with the ball handling roughhouse Rob Perry spelled victory for the Drakester team.

With the outcome beyond doubt late in the game, Drakester coach Mike "P.J." Curran was able to clear his bench.

Monday evening at 7:30, the Aces will meet Theta Chi to determine the runnerup team. Tuesday at the same time, the annual intramural all-star game will be played. Both games are at Boyden.

Unbeaten Little Redmen Host Amherst

Although coming off the biggest UMass freshman basketball victory in years, the undefeated Little Redmen have no time to rest on their past laurels. The frosh meet the Amherst College freshmen tomorrow night at 6 p.m. in the Cage.

The UMass yearlings looked like they were varsity Wednesday night as they crushed B.C., 99-67. Their coach Peter Broaca said, "The kids played the game of their lives Wednesday. They really came into their own, and, playing before the big crowd that was there, made it that much better."

However, Broaca can't enjoy the victory too long. He says of Saturday's contest, "We can't afford to look past this game or suffer a letdown. That happened last year and they beat us 65-60."

This year's Amherst frosh have among their wins a big victory over the previously unbeaten Springfield College team. Amherst has good height both in its starting five and on the bench.

The top player on the Lord Jeffs is 6'3 forward Jean Fugett. A 6'3 Baltimore, Md., native, Fugett leads Amherst in scoring. Also starting in a corner spot will be 6'3 Craig Blockwick from McLean, Virginia.

At center will be 6'3 John Stephenson from Wilmette, Ill. He is spelled much of the time, however, by 6'8 Rick Benson from Stiger, Mich. Also seeing action up front is 6'7 Russell Williams from Orangeburg, S.C.

Starting in the backcourt will be 6'1 Tim Murphy from Stoneham and 6'0 Jerry Scheindfeldt from Hartford, Conn.

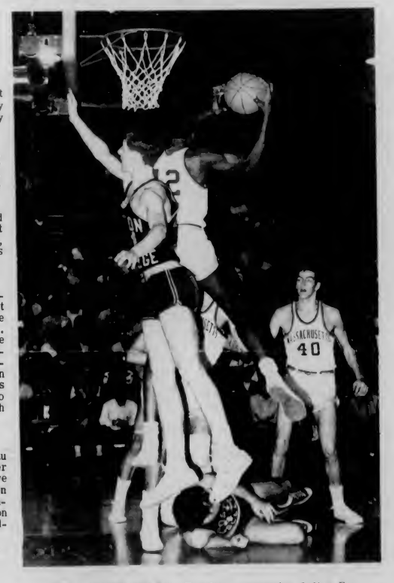
Pucksters Set for Play Against Vermont Sextet

The Redmen deserve better in defeat than the routing against Army. Nevertheless, they must regroup their forces and get ready for their encounter against the University of Vermont, when they meet tomorrow night in Burlington, at 7:30 p.m.

The Catamounts have already beaten UMass twice this year, once at Orr Rink in a game which the visitors virtually stole, 6-3. The Redmen had over 40 shots on net in that one, but they couldn't make it show on the scoreboard. Meanwhile, the hosts were guilty of a multitude of defensive errors, each one leading to a goal. Overall, however, UMass had a decided edge in play. In their last meeting, this time at Vermont in the Yankee Conference tournament, the Catamounts came out on top again, 4-1.

After the game, UMass coach Jack Canniff pointed to a spot five yards from himself and said, "We couldn't pass the puck from here to there." It was not one of their better games.

The team went through a heavy workout last night at Orr Rink under the tutelage of freshman Coach Ben Smith and will take it easy tonight. If the Redmen can play half as well at Vermont as they did as West Point, they will have a good chance of winning. They were beaten by Army, 5-1, but lead 1-0 after the first period. Even after going behind 3-1 in the second period, they had an excellent chance to close the gap.



Just seconds after Dave Young scored Army's third goal, Redman senior Charlie Hanifan came flying down right wing and blew by Cadet defenseman Fred Towsman, Unable to make the turn, however, he forced the puck in front of the net to linemate Paul Riley who deflected the puck just wide of the goaline.

The UMass forwards checked well against Army, taking a lot of pressure off their defensemen, who played very well and at times brilliantly.

BLUELINE BANTER - Tom Peters, who was injured in the first period against Army, should be ready for tomorrow's encounter. Peters banged his head on the boards while falling after a head-on collision with an opposing player. Tom Babson played well in his last two games, and it is hoped that he will continue to do so to add the much needed punch to the third line.

UMass has added goalie Stu Kadish (Zeta Nu) to the roster in place of injured goalie Dave Liberatore. Kadish has been practicing with the team since intersession. Maybe we will soon see him in the goal for the Redmen.

Snow Paralyzes The Campus

Snows whipped across New England yesterday and covered the area with nearly a foot of the white stuff. Several cars were marooned on campus and the hearty foot travelers found the going almost impossible.

According to William F. Field, Dean of Students, the University will be open today and classes will be held as usual, although he "encourages" commuters and those who live at a distance not to come in.

For the commuters, the prospects of having the parking lots which they use plowed, seemed dim, but it depended on when the snow stopped.

As of last night, there was almost 12 inches of snow recorded in Amherst and the rest of Western Massachusetss was also attempting to dig out.

4.9 Million Granted To Medical School Complex

A federal grant of $4,930,000 brings to $18.7 million the money received from the federal government for the $124 million medical complex to be built in Worcester.

The latest grant is for use in establishing a research facility for the UMass Medical School.

President John W. Lederle said, "This is an indication of the federal government's continued interest in our building a much needed medical school in Worcester. Once again we express our appreciation for the hard work our state delegation has performed in seeing that the medical school receives financial and federal funding."

Along with the $18.7 million received to date from the federal government, $16.5 million has been granted for the teaching hospital.

President Lederle added, "With this type of support it is important that we move ahead swiftly to build the medical school before costs rise any further."

Student Demonstrations Continue At Universities Across Country

Students occupying the administration building at the University of Chicago were surprised Saturday night by about 120 young men who burst in carrying rightist literature. Fights broke out and at least three persons were injured.

Yesterday, rumors of an impending police bust circulated throughout the building, held for a week and a half to dramatize demands for changes in hiring-firing policies.

Columbia University's director of admissions blamed a drop in applications for the 1969 fall term on disorder there last spring. Aout 800 fewer high school seniors applied this year as compared to last. Other major schools are experienceing increases in applications.

The Columbia administration was urged Friday by a special committee to drop all charges against students involved in last spring's protests.

Students at South Carolina State College in Orangeburg marched in tribute Saturday to three young blacks killed in a clash with police on the campus a year ago. A granite marker was unveiled as student government president Clifford Stanley read a sonnet penned in 1919 by Claude McKay. "...like men we'll face the murderous fighting pack, pressed to the wall, dying, but fighting back," he read.

Last Feb. 8 State policemen on campus trying to quell an unruly demonstration fired point blank into a crowd of students killing three and injuring some 25 others. The incident became known as the Orangeburg massacre.

At the University of Iowa, police are continuing their investigation into a tear gas bomb that disrupted a student power symposium Thursday night. The bomb exploded just as a panel with Tom Hayden, an early organizer of Students for a Democratic Society, was about to begin. Some 1200 persons were evacuated and the meeting continued on a different floor.

Blacks at Harvard University Friday disrupted a class on urban violence, calling it a course on riot control. The professor teaching the class promised to consult the protesters about its future.

At Auburn University in Alabama, the Rev. William Sloan Coffin spoke without incident Friday after a federal court voided the school president's ban on his appearance because of his conviction for draft-counseling.

University of Notre Dame students were incensed at the local sheriff's seizure of an allegedly obscene film that was to be shown with nude paintings and sculptures at a conference on pornograph and censorship.

Govt. Urges Space Traffic Cops

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government was urged yesterday to develop a system of traffic-control space satellites to help guide surface ships and ocean-hopping aircraft safely across the North Atlantic - and speed rescue operations in case of trouble.

Such high-soaring, robot monitors of traffic on and above the sea would act somewhat like police-manned helicopters that try to keep rush-hour automobile traffic untangled on land.

The urging came froma special committee of the National Research Council as part of a new report calling for the government to expand sharply its support of unmanned space-satellite ventures having potential practical payoffs for folks on earth.

The group therefore urged the government to increase by two or three times its current $100-million-a-year level of support for such research.

Among other new ventures in the field, the NRC committee urged development of special multichannel television relay systems for satellites to provide educational and informational TV to people in developing countries, and to physicians, lawyers, engineers and educators in the United States.

The NBC committee said its conclusions and recommendations are based on a two-year study by more than 200 specialists organized by the national Academy of Sciences at NASA's request.

New Director Named For Folger Library

Dr. O. B. Hardison Jr., professor of English Literature at the University of North Carolina, has been named Director of the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, D. C. He will begin his new duties July 1.

A native of San Diego, California, Dr. Hardison is a graduate of St. Albans School in Washington, D.C. and of the University of North Carolina where he also earned his M. A. degree. He was awarded his doctoral degree by the University of Wisconsin.

He has taught at the University of Wisconsin, the University of Tennessee, Princeton University, and since 1957 has been associated with the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Hardison is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and has been a Fulbright, Folger, and Guggenheim Fellow. He has received the Nicolas Salgo Award, presented by the University of North Carolina for distinguished teaching, and was cited by TIME magazine in 1966 as one of the nation's distinguished teachers.

A prolific writer, Dr. Hardison has published many articles in professional journals and has written or edited numerous books, chiefly on poetry, English criticism, and Renaissance studies. Among these volumes are PRACTICAL RHETORIC, a textbook for freshman composition, THE ENDURING MONUMENT: THE IDEA OF PRAISE IN RENAISSANCE LITERARY THEORY AND PRACTICE, and CHRISTIAN RITE AND CHRISTIAN DRAMA IN THE MIDDLE AGES, for which the Medieval Academy of America awarded him its Charles Homer Haskins Gold Medal.

He also serves as editor of STUDIES IN PHILOLOGY, series editor of GOLDENTREE BIBLIOGRAPHIES, published by Appleton-Century-Crofts, and as series co-editor, with Samuel H. Beer and John Simon, of CROFTS CLASSICS.

He is a member of the Executive Council of the Renaissance Society of America, of the Executive Committee of the Modern Language Association, and of the Woodrow Wilson Regional Selection Committee; chairman of the Southeastern Institute of Medieval and Renaissance Studies; and a panelist for the National Endowment in the Arts and Humanities.

Dr. Hardison succeeds Dr. Louis B. Wright who retired last July after serving twenty years as Director of the Folger Library.

Under the will of the late Henry Clay Folger, its founder, the Library is administered by the Trustees of Amherst College. Its buildings and collections make it one of the world's major research centers, not only on Shakespeare, but for the study of Tudor and Stuart civilization before 1641.

Undergraduate Teaching Resident Positions Open in Project Ten

Applications for the position of Undergraduate Teaching Resident in Project 10 are now available in the Heads of Residence apartments in both Pierpont (women - Mrs. Walter Silva) and Moore (men - Mrs. James Leheny). They must be filled out and returned no later than February 15. The pay rate is equal to that of a traditional university counselor. Anyone in any of the four classes may apply. The job description is as follows:

The Undergraduate Teaching Resident (UTR) fulfills the duties of a residence hall counselor according to the university's job description for that position.

Each UTR must make a firm committment to at least one class in the Project. This entails attending every class and doing the reading assignments, although he will not be required to write papers and take exams. Classroom roles will vary, and should be determined between individual UTR's and instructors.

The UTR must make some regular contact with every class member outside of the classroom to discuss the class with the student. The UTR may wish to set up a seminar or some other activity related to course work that can be carried further than is possible in actual class time.

It should be emphasized that the UTR is not a "watchdog" in the classroom, but a liason who can create a situation complementary to the classroom in the dorm. He should also keep the instructor informed and involved in the residence hall's academic activites. He is responsible for an ongoing evaluation of the class and, if he has established a rapport with the teacher and the students, he can make constructive suggestions for improvement. The UTR must be sensitive to the needs and desires of both students and faculty. He must be willing and able to express these feelings as an impartial party.

Faculty Recital To Hold Open Dress Rehearsal

The Department of Music announces that an open dress rehearsal will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The concept of allowing students, faculty and others to attend dress rehearsal has been developed by the department in the hope that this experience will contribute to the enjoyment of faculty recitals.

A complete program will be offered followed by an opportunity for the audience to question the performers on any aspect of the program that they desire.

The program and preparation will include works by Gordon Jacobs, Paul Hindemith, Jacob Druckman and Paul Bowles and will be performed by Walter Chestnut, trumpet; Larry Weed, trombone and Dorothy Ornest, piano assisted by Joseph Contino, clarinet and Jay Gondelman, percussion.

The public is welcome to this first open dress rehearsal and is requested to observe normal concert behavior.

CATHOLIC CONVERTS DOWN

LONDON (AP) - Conversions to the Roman Catholic Church reached their lowest figure for 20 years in England during 1967, the 1969 Catholic Directory reported. Figures for 1968 are not yet available, but conversions were down by 828 from 9,171 recorded in 1966. Ordination of priests fell to 168 as compared with 179 in the previous year. The estimated Roman Catholic population is slightly over four millions.

Wing Difficulty Cuts Short Maiden Flight of Boeing 747

EVERETT, Wash. (AP) - The maiden flight of the Boeing 747 superjet, the largest commercial airliner in the world, was cut short Sunday after an hour and 15 minutes in the air.

The huge craft returned after the pilot reported wing flap difficulty.

The flight was to have lasted 2-1/2 hours but pilot Jack Waddell made the decision to return the superjet to Paine Field, north of Seattle, after 34 minutes in flight.

It was another 41 minutes before the 747 landed.

Until the decision to cut the flight short was made, Waddell sounded elated and reported the huge jet, capable of globe-trotting 490 passengers nonstop 6,000 miles performed "beautifully."

After a flawless, smokeless and quiet takeoff, Waddell reported in radio communications the plane was "very easily flyable."

The landing, also was without blemish as the enormous red, white and silver plane appeared to hover in the sky like a kite approaching the field.

Waddell said he was returning "for certain reasons."

The big jet lumbered into the air at 11:44 a.m. on what was to be a 2-1/2 hour test flight. But at 12:08 p.m., Waddell radioed the plane had experienced " a bump" during tests of the plane's ailerons, control surfaces on the trailing edges of the wings.

The situation evidently was not critical, however, because Waddell consented after radio contact with the ground to stay in the air "until the boss can come up and take a look."

A Boeing 727 carrying members of the press and Boeing officials took off at 12:15 p.m. for an aerial rendezvous with the superjet.

Waddell did not indicate in other radio communications what might have gone wrong.

Free Movies to be Shown As Part of Winter Carni

Free movies will be shown in the Berkshire Club Room in Southest and the North Dining Commons today and tomorrow as part of Winter Carni.

The first program features Roy Rogers in "Flying Bullets", the late Boris Karloff in " The Mummy" and the award winning "The Legend of Jimmy Blue Eyes." This movie was an Academy Award nomination and the U. S. entry to the Cannes Film Festival and Edinburgh Film Festival.

Jimmy is a young Negro musician who wins a trumpet in a card game, but loses his girl to another jazz trumpeter. He accidentally kills a man in a brawl and is sentenced to 20 years in jail. His constant goalwith his trumpet is to reach a chord, to cut the air and blow that note that wasn't there. The movie takes on Faustian overtones, when Jimmy makes a pact with the devil upon his release from prison. The movie also features trumpet renditions by Jimmy.

Program number two has four movies: "Free Eats", the Little Rascals; "Vagabond" with Charlie Chaplin; "Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein" and "Officers Mess", an oldtime slapstick comedy.

The number two program will be shown in the North Dining Commons tonight with the first program tomorrow.

Academic Honesty

To the editor:

I write as concerns Mr. Dickinson's article, "Plagarism (sic) Rocks English Department', printed on Friday, Feb. 7. More specifically, I address my remarks to Professors Lowance and Kinney, who propose an academic honesty committee. Such a committee is, in fact, in existence. It is comprised of six students, four faculty members, and is presided over by Dean Wagner, associate dean of the College of Arts and Science.

As a member of the committee which drew up the policy draft of this committee earlier this year, and as a present member of the Academic Honesty Committee, I an concerned over the lack of intra-university communication on this matter. For this reason, I have requested the DAILY COLLEGIAN to print the policy draft of this committee, which they have promised to do forthwith.

Dow Chemical

To the editors:

I would like to express myself as far as the appearance of Dow Chemical Company representatives on this campus is concerned. Dow Chemical is a major producer of napalm and napalm components. The war in Vietnam continues, as does the use of napalm which is used principally against people in Vietnam. It is used against Americans only by accident. All use of napalm, whether in Vietnam, Guatemala, or Israel, makes me sicker than I am able to express here. The idea of Dow Chemical coming onto a University campus and recruiting little scientists to help synthesize napalm approaches insanity. As an SIS statement yesterday stated, Dow's asserted policy is "simple good citizenship." Another term for this phrase is "We were only following orders". Six million Jews twenty years ago never found out what that phrase meant. Dow Chemical? All industrial recruiting?

Eng. Majors Survey

To the editor:

As I had anticipated, criticism of my attack on the English Department Undergraduate Council's inertia (in this column, January 28, 1969) was harsh and plentiful. While I refuse to retract anything I said in that letter, I DO wish to clarify one fact; namely, that the survey I conducted was NOT authorized by EDUC. Rather, it was a joint effort by myself and other malcontent students in EDUC to gain some documented indices of English majors' grievances regarding English department policy and practice.

In my estimation, the survey has met with only moderate success. I and the other students working with me on the project have distributed nearly eight hundred questionnaires, but we have been able to retrieve only three hundred. Where are the other five hundred questionnaires? Where are the other four hundred English majors whom we never reached at all? How can EDUC even APPROACH representation without the cooperation of those students whom EDUC allegedly represents?

At any rate, preliminary results of the three hundred returned questionnaires have been compiled. (That is, results of Parts I and II of the three hundred returned questionnaires; the small number of questionnaires returned renders Part III - individual course evaluations - virtually useless.) These results will be made public on WMUA's "Focus" program TONIGHT at nine o'clock. I welcome all interested persons to listen to the broadcast, which should be marked by some provocative discussion among dissident members of EDUC who will be guests on the program.

INSIDE REPORT

Nixon's Power Politics

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - President Nixon's quick decision to talk to the Russians on the Middle East crisis is only the opening gambit in a fascinating but dangerous game of power politics he is now sketching out with his national security advisers.

Mr. Nixon is well aware that the Soviet Union is becoming compulsive in its desire to negotiate with the U.S. - not on the Arab-Israeli confrontation, but on control of the escalating arms race.

President Nixon, however, puts heavier emphasis on the danger of another Middle Eastern war, which might suck in the two super-powers on opposite sides. To Mr. Nixon, the question of arms control, while important, is not so lethal a time bomb as the possible breakdown of the fragile truce between Israel and the surrounding Arab states.

Accordingly, the Nixon game is to test Soviet willingness to do serious business with the Americans in the imminent United Nations talks on a settlement of the 1967 war. If Moscow displays what top Administration officials now believe is possible - a willingness to agree on a Middle East settlement that both sides could then accept - President Nixon will proceed from there to talks on the control of arms, particularly new defensive and offensive nuclear systems.

Bold and imaginative though it is, this plan is fraught with danger. In particular, a deadlock in the U.S.-Soviet talks at the UN could so sour relations that later negotiations on arms control would be seriously threatened.

But the President is willing to accept that risk in return for the enormous gains that might result from a successful negotiation on the Middle East. Moreover, Mr. Nixon is convinced that an easing of the vicious Arab-Israeli antagonisms is essential. Otherwise, an outbreak of hostilities going far beyond the present cycle of Arab guerrilla attack and Israeli reprisal is a possibility.

Furthermore, Mr. Nixon tells intimates he is getting worried over signs of anti-Israeli feelings in this country. He is not alone. The last major Israeli reprisal against civilian Arab aircraft at the Beirut, Lebanon, airport last month - a retaliation for the loss of an Israeli life in an Arab terrorist attack in Athens - caused an angry response in the U.S.

Neither the government of Israel nor the Jewish community here favors the U.S.-Soviet talks at the UN. What bothers them is the possibility that the super-powers are preparing to "impose" a peace.

To deal with this, Mr. Nixon has held a number of private talks with leading U.S. Jews, including Sen. Jacob K. Javits of New York, and has transmitted a number of messages to the Israeli government in Jerusalem.

He has stressed two things: first, the U.S. will not be party to an "imposed" peace unacceptable to Israel and will underwrite any agreement acceptable to both sides; second, no matter what agreements are made with the Russians on stopping the arms flow to the Middle East, there will be no change in the delivery schedule of 50 F-4 aircraft to Israel (to be started the end of this year).

Segregation In Reverse

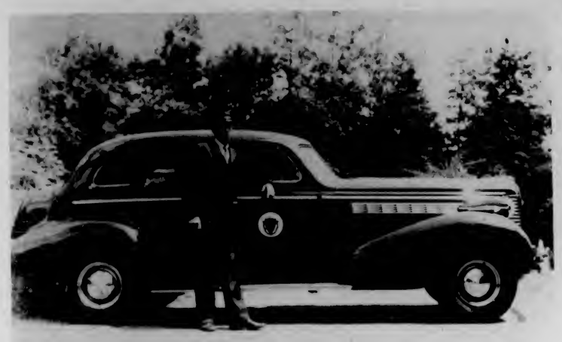
Many of us in the white community who have a total commitment to integration do not view the Black student desire for a degree of separation as permanently foreclosing the future of integration. Nor do we see the Black student focus as a hindrance to individual academic achievement. This is the moment, it would seem, for thoughtful people to re-examine many faulty premises so that colleges may deal more justly with Black youth who are now attempting to expand those opportunities so recently opened up to them.

Unlike the past, today it is the minds of our young that constitute our country's reserve of "undeveloped land." Undeveloped minds represent no potential land bank, but rather a guaranteed future drain on the social and economic wellbeing of every person in the nation.

Each student must participate to create a climate that will enable him to develop his "own piece of land." It is an affront to good sense to assume that students will forever submit to patterns that do not serve them adequately. It is equally absurd to assume that students, one step away from the Black ghetto, in a highly competitive academic world, are voicing a blind rejection of integration when they wish to set up a "family" community within the campus community. The Black student's need for increased sense of personal identity in a new and frequently harassing experience has solid historical precedent.

There is no more galling experience for a college student than to be told "lies" which is their term for rationalizations advanced to obtain compliance with adults' desires. Most adults congratulate themselves that they want a more integrated society and more opportunities for all. But Black students know that our well-educated society has been woefully inefficient in pursuit of these goals. Pious statements from these adults suggesting that Black centers represent a retreat from democratic ideals JUST DO NOT RING TRUE TO THEM.



It is important to state clearly WHAT IS TRUE: that dormitory arrangements are, traditionally, largely elective - the one exception, freshman dormitory assignments. What is the record here? There is no indication that the age-old practice of assigning Jewish roommates to incoming Jewish freshmen has changed in the last quarter century. Nor is there any evidence that residence deans ever tried to discourage students of a single nationality or religious affiliation from seeking, as friends, common housing.

In addition, it should be emphasized that faculty and administrators alike have long considered it academically beneficial to set up dormitory corridors as language centers. These provide an elective opportunity for upper-class language majors to improve their language skills and to permit a more informal exchange on the history and culture of the country under study. Familiar? Why is this program acceptable when faculty sponsored, and an "unseemly demand" when suggested by Black students? It has NEVER been suggested that such centers isolate the participating students, to their detriment, or that such centers do violence to the democratic complexion of the university.

Even more pointedly in contradiction to the prevailing view, is the acceptance of Newman Clubs, Hillel Centers, etc, for whose purposes the colleges have occasionally set aside scarce office space. In some instances there has been an outright allocation of land for buildings. Who is rationalizing what?

If our younger citizens are to accomplish those goals toward which we have made but the barest beginnings, then we must be willing to permit them to try their own ways and stop pretending that those ways are so different from traditional practices or so threatening to some fantasy of democratic life. It is time, indeed, to trust to free enterprise in the university society, assured that poor enterprise will fail of its own weight. Black and white students alike will learn to construct better enterprises year by year, examining their own previous errors or progress, as every generation of students has done.

Chauffeur Retires After 45 Years

George H. Mellen, who chauffeured the first automobile owned by UMass and served as chauffeur for three University presidents, has retired after more than 45 years of service.

Mellen retired Jan. 1 as head of the grounds and services section. A native of Trumbull, Conn., who moved to Amherst with his family, he was 20 years old when he was hired as a grounds department worker at the Amherst campus Aug. 23, 1923.

He did grounds work at first and then began repairing machinery and did other mechanical work. The University acquired its first car, a six-cylinder Oakland, in 1924 or 25, Mellen recalls, and he was assigned to drive and maintain it. He served as a chauffeur for presidents and top administrators until that job was phased out in about 1945. Administrators, including the President, drive themselves today. He was put in charge of grounds department crews and remained in this work in various capacities until his retirement this year.

There were slightly over 600 students at the Amherst campus when Mellen began work in 1923. He recalls, "At that time I knew the names of all the faculty members, and they all called me by name."

In the early 1920's the insitution owned, besides the Oakland, one truck. The bulk of the grounds and road work was done by horses. Eight teams and six or seven single horses were stabled in a big horse barn at the foot of the hill below the president's house.

Mellen was chauffeur to three UMass presidents: Edward M. Lewis, 1924-1927; Roscoe W. Thatcher, 1927-1933; and Hugh P. Baker 1933-1947. He also drove for their wives and their administrative staffs, first in the Oakland, then in a 1934 and a 1938 Buick and finally in a Chrysler.

Be selfish. But be honest. You've put in a lot of tough years to get your degree. Your allegiance lies with a professional discipline.

Why, then, must you decide now to plight your trust to a company for life? Don't. Join a company first. If it doesn't advance you within that professional discipline, well, you're not married to it.

Many have found career enrichment at Du Pont. This comes from being handed a ball and being expected to run with it. From working with top people, from growing in a company where the opportunities are always wide open and the projects are often way out.

Many have found professional fulfillment and have built a very full, varied and happy life as "Du Ponters."

Others have found, after working at Du Pont, that their professional interest lay in teaching, in further study or in an industry that offered even wider scope in their particular discipline. All of these men left Du Pont far better qualified professionally than when they came.

So talk to the Du Pont recruiter. If he offers you something, think of it as a professional challenge, not a proposal of marriage.

HCC Faculty Meeting Called To Discuss Black Demands

Tonight a special meeting of the faculty of Holyoke Community College has been called to discuss demands presented last Freday to Dr. George Frost Jr., the college's president.

Frost called the meeting because he feels that the faculty should be informed in the academic and administrative matters in which they are involved.

The demands, which Frost claims were presented by a "minority" of the students, include: black teachers, black studies programs, black orientation for freshmen, student representatives on decision making bodies such as course curriculum, unlimited classroom cuts, and optional final exams.

As of now, Frost says no arrangement has been made to meet with student protesters.

Financial Assistance Available For Law Enforcement Program

The office of Placement and Financial Aid announces a new financial aid program for Law Enforcement Education conducted by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration of the U.S. Department of Justice. Although limited funds are available for this academic year, more adequate funds will be available for the 1969-70 year.

Eighty per cent of the funds obtained must be committed to grants and loans for in-service law enforcement personnel while 20 per cent may be used for loams to students preparing for employment in law enforcement. Loans and grants will be made under this program based on the financial need of the student as determined by the College Scholarship Service computation system and policies of the University.

Grant recipients must agree to retur n to their employing public law enforcement agency for at least two years after competion of studies. Failure to do so will cause the grant to convert to a loan status. Loan recipients will be forgiven 25 per cent of the loan for each year of certified service as a full-time employee of a public law enforcement agency. The loans make available ten-year-low-interest bearing (3 per cent) notes of up to $1,800 per academic year to full-time students enrolled in undergraduate or graduate programs leading to degrees in areas directly related to law enforcement.

Most University programs are acceptable if evidence is obtained from the applicant declaring the intention to enter or resume law enforcement work. The institutional representative of this program is Robert J. Morrissey, Director, Placement & Financial Aid Services. Application blanks are available at this office - Room 239, Whitmore Administration Building.

Young People Key to Violence Asserts Commission

BY JOHN ZEH
College Press Service

WASHINGTON (CPS) - A preliminary report of the national commission on the causes and prevention of violence says that young people provide the "thrust" of much of the group protest and collective violence in the ghetto, in the streets, and on the campuses.

"The key to much of the violence in our society seems to lie with the young,' says the report, which the commission calls "only tentative, a first look, and subject to revision."

The final report and recommendations are due in the spring; investigation will continue till then: "It may be with tomorrow's generation that much of the emphasis of our studies and the national response should lie."

The observation about youth is one of 10 "themes of challenge" for Americans listed by the report. Another notes that "violence protest today . . . has occurred in part because protesters believe they cannot make their demands felt effectively through normal, approved channels and that 'the system,' for whatever reasons, has become unresponsive to them."

The report also mentions "additional complications" that arise from "the high visibility" of both violence and social inequities through the mass media. The media may "aggravate" problems of controlling violence, but they can also be "useful social agents . . . helping to reduce levels of violence," the report said.

The violence commission was established last June by President Johnson "to undertake a penetrating search" for the causes and prevention of disorder. Under Chairman Milton S. Eisenhower, the commission set up task forces on historical and comparative perspectives, individual acts of violence, assassination, firearms, mass media, law enforcement, and group violence.

The study of group protest as a source of collective violence focuses on anti-war and anti-draft protest, campus unrest, black militancy, and official response to such protest.

This task force particularly is interested in why anti-war protest, which began peacefully, has recently involved violent confrontations between demonstrators and police.

"It is important to observe that the majority of students have not been radicals or organizers of protest movements," the task force report says. "The impetus of the anti-war movement seems to come basically from young, middle-class, white liberals and radicals."

The commission is also studying recent unrest among black students. A fact-finding team was recently sent to San Francisco State College.

A few years ago the extremely small minority of black students tended to be individualistic and mostly politically inactive, the report notes. "The Black Power Movement, however, coupled with substantial increases in the number of black students, has offered some (of them) a vehicle for giving collective expression to their particular grievances."

"The elimination of all violence in a free society is impossible," the commission report concluded, "But the better control of illegitimate violence in our democratic society is an urgent imperative, and one within our means to accomplish.

In its "themes of challenge,' the report notes that not all violence is illegitimate. "Indeed, a major functio n of society is the organization and legitimization of violence in the interest of maintaining society itself.'

Some violence may be committed by persons with deranged minds or abnormal biological make-up, but experts agree that most is committed by normal people whose "behavior is the result of the complex interaction of their biology and life experience," the commission notes.

Another source of violence identified by the commission is reactionism. "Progress in meeting the demands of those seeking social change . . . may cause those who feel threatened by change to engage in counter-violence against those trying to shift the balance.'

The large number of firearms in private hands and the deep-seated tradition of the right to bear arms are complicating factors in controlling social violence, the report continues.

Zen Buddhist Priest Speaks At Smith

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - A Zen Buddhist priest will speak in the Smith College Alumnae House Lounge at 8 p.m. tonight.

Eshin Nishimura, Lecturer at Hanazono College of Rinzai Zen, Kyoto, Japan, will discuss "Zen Buddhism." Sponsored by the Ada Howe Kent Fund, the lecture is open to the public.

Zen is a branch of Mahayana Buddhism that teaches self-dissipline, meditation, and attainment of enlightenment. Zen has no sacred scripture whose word is law and no rigid doctrine or dogma.

Born in a farming family near Kyoto, Nishimura was brought to the local Zen temple belonging to the Myoshinji school of Rinzai Zen Buddhism. After graduation from Hanazono College, he entered the Nanzen-ji Zen Monastery. For the next two years he received Zen training under the instruction of Shibayama Roshi.

According to Nishimura, "I then returned to the temple where I grew up and succeeded the temple master." In 1960-61 he participated in a seminar, "The Creative Encounter of World Religions," in Philadelphia, Pa. He returned to Japan and entered graduate school at Hanazono College where he is also teaching English.

Nishimura is being brought to Smith by the Ada Howe Kent Fund which brings an Asian scholar in religion to the campus each year.

During the week Nishimura is at Smith, he will conduct a colloquium for a small group of students. The group will go on a weekend retreat conducted by the Zen priest at Woolman Hill, a Quaker retreat center in Deerfield.

Contact lenses are made of modern plastics which have entirely different characteristics than the tissues and fluids of the eye. Consequently your eye cannot handle this foreign object without help.

So, in order to correct for Mother Nature's lack of foresight, you have to use lens solutions to make your contacts and your eyes compatible

There was a time when you needed two or more separate solutions to properly modify and care for your contacts making them ready for your eyes But now there's Lensine from the makers of Murine. Lensine, for contact comfort and convenience

Lensine is the one solution for complete contact lens care Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the natural fluids of your eye. Why? Because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution, very much like your own tears. Lensine is compatible with the eye.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses.

And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated that improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and, in some cases, can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Let caring for your contacts be as convenient as wearing them. Get some Lensine . . . Mother's little helper.

Mother Nature never planned on contact lenses

Volpe To Report To Nixon On Supersonic Airliner

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe hopes to have by mid-March recommendations for President Richard M. Nixon on the future of the controversial, multimillion dollar supersonic airliner program.

Volpe told newsmen Friday he has formed a special interagency committee to develop the recommendations. Nixon ordered the study last month "to investigate all aspects of the supersonic transport program.'

Volpe told a news conference the committee's concern will involve whether such an airliner would fly, whether it would operate economically and whether the program ought to be slowed down while additional research is conducted or accelerated with construction of two prototype models.

The government already has invested more than $500 million in developing the airliner. But former President Lyndon B. Johnson's budget for fiscal 1970 omitted any request for new funds, leaving any decision to the Nixon administration.

Frosh Cagers Win 9th in a Row

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

In what has become a commonplace sight, the UMass freshman basketball team won an easy victory, this time trouncing the Amherst frosh 84-57. It was the Little Redmen's ninth straight win against no defeats, and dropped the Lord Jeffs to 5-4.

Julius Erving and Tom Austin were the big guns in a first half that saw the frosh gain a lead they never would relinquish. Erving consistently was hitting medium range jumpers while Austin was strong under the boards.

The Little Redmen led by as much as 20 around the 12 minute mark of the half. Amherst cut the margin down to 12 however with about five minutes remaining. Leading the Jeffs were Tim Murphy and Jean Fugette, who were shooting well from the 15-20 foot range.

However in the closing stages of the half, Erving along with John Bettancourt scored hoops and helped give UMass a 44-27 halftime. Erving scored 17 points in the half.

UMass broke fast in the second half outscoring Amherst 6-2 in the first three minutes on two field goals by Mike Pagliara and a hoop by Erving. It was then that Amherst made what was to be their last surge.

The visitors from in town scored ten points for a three minute stretch while the only Little Redman answer was an Austin jumper. The lead was down to 14, but the Jeffs never got closer.

Rich Vogeley got the hot hand for UMass and iced the game. The big forward hit three jumpers in a span of four minutes and the UMass lead was up to 22, 68-46 with eight minutes remaining.

The remainder of the game was sloppy with the only highlight being a left handed move by Erving that connected. UMass held a 30 point lead on two occasions before gaining the final margin.

Erving led all scorers with 26 points and also had 12 rebounds. He was supported in the balanced cast by Vogeley who had 14, Austin also with 14 and Bettancourt with 13.

Shooters Win

On Saturday the varsity rifle team gained its easiest win to date when U.N.H. had to forfeit a New England College Rifle League match being unable to put together a team.

Undaunted by the lack of an opponent, the Redmen shot a fine score of 1302 out of 1500.

This match, in spite of its one-sided nature, was still a very significant one. Firstly, the UMass boys shot their best score ever and beat the mag[illegible] 1300 points for the first time. Secondly, this win means the R[illegible]en are now certain of a place in the New England finals in April, and thirdly, the season record for the team is now 7-0 - one of the best they have ever posted.

With only one more match in the regular season the UMass team may have its second straight year of being unbeaten in their New England Division.

Rugby Meets

The UMass Rugby Football Club will hold a business and organizational meeting Monday evening, Feb. 10 in the Council Chambers of the Student Union at 9:30 p.m. The formation of a "C" team and training procedures for the spring season will be discussed and the spring playing schedule will be announced. Business matters to be considered are the purchase of new "B" team shirts and the upcoming Rugby Dinner. All present members and those that wish to join the U.M.R.F.C. are urged to attend.

Hoopsters Win....

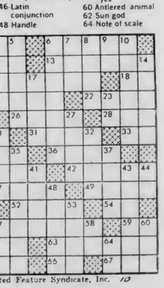
homeboys did manage to score ten of the last 12 points in the half to cut UVM's lead to 32-29 at intermission.

The second half didn't start out much better for the Redmen despite the shooting of Mathias and DiSarcina. When Ellerbrook started to find the range however, and Gayeska took control of both backboards, the Catamount upset bid was doomed.



DOUBLE DRIBBLES...Vermont outrebounded its taller rivals, 43-39.....Bueb with 13 rebounds was particularly with his hustle around the boards. ..... The Catamounts again did a fine job scourting the Redmen, UMass' patterns were quite ineffective....Gayeska scored 19 points and hauled in 13 rebounds in a fine all-around effort....Ellerbrook with 15 markers and DiSarcina with 12 were also in double figures.... Martiniuk hit his 19 point norm right on the button while Bueb, Flutton, and LaPointe broke into dual numerals in the balanced offense.

Redmen Rally To Overcome Stubborn Vermont, 63-58

Late Comeback Succeeds UMass Now 6-0 In Conf.

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

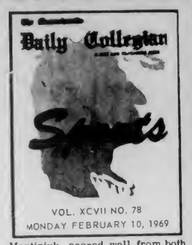
Vermont gave the Redmen their toughest Yankee Conference test this season, but fell, 63-58, when UMass rallied in the second half. The comeback victory was witnessed by a slim Saturday night turnout of 2800.

Down 45-37 with 13 minutes to go in the ballgame, the Redmen behind Ray Ellerbrook's shooting and Pete Gayeska's offensive rebounding, gradually pulled themselves back into the contest. Joey DiSarcina's driving layup at the 6:51 mark gave UMass its first lead of the night, 52-51.

Coach Art Loche's Catamounts hung on, however. Senior guard Dave LaPointe directed the deliberate Vermonters as the lead changed hands several times. LaPointe's scoop shot with 4:07 to go put UVM on top, 57-56.

The visitors then went into a deep freeze in an effort to lock up the contest. At the two minute mark, UMass stole the ball and seconds later Gayeska came up with a crucial three-point play.

When Frank Martiniuk, the Catamounts' leading scorer missed one of two free throws attempts, it was UMass' turn to freeze the ball. The last minute of action didn't exactly come out as planned by Coach Leaman, however.



Vermont fouled the Redmen five times in an effort to get control of the ball. The first time Jack Gallagher missed from the line, but John Dreyer hauled in the rebound. 20 seconds later Gallagher was fouled again. He made the first one to put UMass up two, but the second attempt bounced away.

Dreyer was again Johnny on the spot. The senior forward went high to haul in the errant free throw. DiSarcina seconds later missed from the charity stripe, but recovered the ball.

UMass wasn't out of the woods though, until Gallagher pumped in two free throws with 28 seconds left to put the home boys on top 62-58. An Ellerbrook free throw accounted for the final point of the game.

The Redmen were extremely sluggish in the first half. It was obviously a letdown after the superb B.C. effort and the Catamounts were ready to take advantage of the situation just as they had done against unsuspecting Springfield and St. Peter's a few weeks earlier.

Ray Bueb, a 6'6 junior, did a great job for the visitors on the boards while his forecourt mate,

Martiniuk, scored well from both the floor and the line. These two along with Bob Hutton and LaPointe led Vermont to a 22-17 advantage through the first fifteen minutes of the opening period.

UMass meanwhile was ice-cold and could only counter with the second efforts of Dannis Chapman, Ken Mathias and Gayeska. The Led by sophomore George Minarski, the University of Vermont defeated UMass Saturday night at Burlington, 4-1. Minarski, from Willowdale, Ont., scored the winner for the Catamounts at 5:23 of the second period when UMass goalie Larry Walsh started to split only to have the puck slide between his pads.

Ironically, UMass played one of its best games of the year. The Redmen forechecked very well and in the third period they even used two forwards for the first time this year.

The lone UMass goal came at 14:11 of the third period making the score 3-1. Junior defenseman Doug Powling, who played well all night, picked up a lose puck inside the Vermont blueline and fired a shot through a screen which was deflected pass Vermont goalie Dave Reese by sophomore wing Tom Peters.

The Redmen outshot Vermont by a fantastic 28-15 margin. When asked to comment on the tough loss, sophomore wing Woodie Cook remarked, "What made this game especially frustrating was the fact that even though the UVM goalie (Reese) made many fine saves, he was shaky in spots and unable to control the rebounds."

Tonight the UMass sextet will attempt to snap their five game losing streak when they face Amherst College. The string of losses dates way back to Christmas vacation (Dec. 28) when the Redmen defeated UConn, 6-2 in the Yankee Conference Tournament. Game time is 7:30 p.m. at Orr Rink.

Frosh Icemen Edge Deerfield, 4-3

BY STEVE SHAMBAN

DEERFIELD - Like a whirlwind out of the roaring Twenties, Charlie Donovan came up with two third period goals, the decisive factors in a hard fought 4-3 Little Redman victory over a gritty Deerfield Academy sextet Saturday.

This is the sixth consecutive win for UMass and their record is now 8-2.

From the beginning it was a tough game which featured plenty of hard hitting and good skating even though UMass at one point held a 4-0 lead, Deerfield refused to be intimidated by its bigger and older rival.

UMass enjoyed a slight territorial advantage in the first period and emerged with a 1-0 lead. Jack Edwards, a Deerfield alumnus, tipped in Bob Bartholomew's long shot for the score.

In the second period highlighted by some real hard hitting in the Deerfield end, the Little Redmen came up with another marker. Al Nickerson on a pass from Donovan banged one in from the right point. Finally the third period arrived, and with it an opportunity for Donovan to emerge from the shadows and display some of his own ability. At 2:22 he got his first goal. After stick handling to the point, he unleashed a low hard bullet which found its way past goalie Carl Civesi.

Several minutes later at 8:12 'Cholly' skated around the net and hooked a puck into the right corner. The result of this was a form of restrained pandemonium on the Little Redman bench.

UMass was not out of the woods however, and only the clock thwarted a determined Deerfield rally in the last six minutes.

At 9:20 on the power play, Don Olchowski scored on a break away. UMass goalie P.J. Flaherty came out to cut down the angle but Olchowski faked right and slipped the puck into the left corner.

Frank Mayer made it 4-2 at 10:50 scoring from right out in front. Ted Lindsay a slick skating center made it 4-3 at 14:43, assists going to Olchowski and Mayer.

The last 17 seconds were frantic as Deerfield, now with six skaters, maintained constant pressure on the UMass end and only the welcome sound of the buzzer made things peaceful.

The Little Redmen will face AIC tomorrow at Orr Rink. The Aces bowed to UMass 4-2 in December, so this should be a good one. Face off is at 4 p.m.

the UMass wrestling team returned to their winning ways on Saturday afternoon as they defeated Williams College by a score of 35-8. Due to an injury to sophomore Bob Willman and a lack of a suitable substitute, most of the wrestlers fought at a higher weight class they they usually fight.

Nick DiDominico, normally a 115 pounder, moved up to 123 lbs. and won easily by a 10-4 score. At 130 lbs., Howie Kaplin wrestled a strong match, leading his opponent 5-1 when he pinned him in the third period. Phil Davis won by a forfeit in the 137 lb. class, as did Brian Urquhart (152) and Glen Cummings (Unl.) to give the Redmen 15 easy points.

145 pounder Bob Freeman had another outstanding match as he completely demolished the Willans wrestler 15-1. Bob had over six minutes of riding time and came close to pinning his man on several occasions. Mike Brauner moved up to the 160 lb. class and scored a hard earned 3-1 victory.

Tom Young wrestled for the first time at 167 and looked very impressive in an 8-3 victory. Tom is normally a 160 pounder but moved up to replace Tom Andrewes, who was replacing the injured Willman at 177 lbs. Andrewes, however, ran into a tough man in Williams' Hugh Hawkins and lost 7-3. George Zguris wrestled one of his best matches of the season as he won the 191 lb. match 6-4. The match was deadlocked with less than 15 seconds left when George scored a takedown to insure the victory.

Coach Homer Barr was very pleased with the performance of the team. He was unsure about moving around the wrestlers to different weight classes, but as the results showed, the experiment paid off.

Severest Storm in a Decade Closes Down University

By MARK SILVERMAN
Friday Issue Editor

The worst storm to hit New England in ten years paralyzed the University yesterday, and prompted the Administration to "close all non-essential activities on campus" after 3:00 p.m. With this, all classes after 3:00 were cancelled, and all University personnel except those working in the dining commons and on maintenance crews were given the rest of the day off.

This was the first time since John W. Lederle became President of UMass that the weather was considered to be so hazardous as to make anthing resembling normal campus life impossible.

A majority of morning classes were cancelled by snowbound professors and most fraternity and sorority smokers and other R.S.O. activities scheduled for last night were also cancelled.

Dean of Students William F. Field reported, "the biggest concern we have is to get as many cars as possible off campus so that the snow removal job can be done. This is primarily the reason why we 'closed the University' after 3:00. I hope that teachers will leave and commuters will stay away so that the clean-up job can be done as best and as soon as possible."

The storm, which dumped over a foot of snow on the Amherst area Sunday, forced approximately thirty students to spend the night in the Student Union and left, according to a State Police estimate, 3,000 cars stranded in the State. Roads were reported in poor condition for much of the day yesterday, and one State Trooper explained, "The only reason the speed limit on the Mass. pike was 30 is because that is the lowest speed we can post without closing the road." Rt. 91 from Springfield to Greenfield was closed, as 8 foot drifts made that road impassable.

High winds wiped out power lines in Eastern Massachusetts Monday, and left 80% of Dedham without electricity. Boston Edison officials declared a "state of emergency" in an effort to restore power.

Phone lines in much of Eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island were downed by the storm, but the Associated Press reported that repair to these lines came quickly.

Traffic in Boston and New York ground to a standstill for most of Monday, with air traffic reduced to a minimum. Drifts at Kennedy airport in N.Y. completely covered one Boeing 707 jet, and a freighter The Exiniater, was reported to be taking water and "sinking very slowly" in 17 foot seas 100 miles off Nantucket yesterday. Coast Guard aircraft and cruisers escorted the ship to port last night.

Apart from the inconvenience which blizzards bring, every major snow storm seems to awake people's sense of humor. WMUA, which broadcast class cancellations throughout the morning yesterday, reported, "Skiing on Orchard Hill Mountain is good to excellent with a 24" - 36" base." When a student called to see if her class was in session yesterday, a janitor in Skinner Hall replied, "No, I don't think so, there aren't any teachers here and I can't teach too well."

And in New York City, the Associated Press reported that people stranded in traffic jams talked to each other for the first time since the Great Northeast Blackout of 1965.

Black College Answers Protest With Repression

The administration of all-black Mississippi Valley State College here has responded to student protests against its repressive nature by taking still more further repressive action.

Two hundred students who staged sit-ins over the weekend were given the choice of arrest or forced transportation to nearby Jackson, where they were "sent home." College officials provided bus fare and told the students they could apply for re-admission after 40 days. "The students were not expelled," said school President J.H. White. "But that doesn't mean we'll take them back."

Fifteen of the students identified as leaders of the protest by the administration were arrested by state police, who ended a sit-in Sunday morning. They were charged with disorderly conduct, trespassing, or malicious mischief.

No hearings were held by the administration. Students were not told of the impending police raid.

Ironically, lack of due process in disciplinary matters was one of the grievances the blacks presented to the administration Thursday. They criticized school President J.H. White for worrying too much about discipline instead of academic matters. Student government President Wilhelm Joseph told CPS that Dr. White is "obsessed" with the school's image being proper. He sees the college as "his', Joseph said. "White is black, but white in thought,' Joseph added.

Ad-Hoc Committee Demands Debate With Dow Recruiter

by Louis DiMonaco

A group of forty UMass students, calling themselves the Ad-Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow, formed at the Student Union yesterday to march on Whitmore and present a demand that Dow Chemical not be allowed to recruit on campus Wednesday unless the recruiter and a representative of the administration publically debate with a member of this committee.

The march began at 1:30, and proceeded peacefully, without signs or slogans, to the Administration Building and President Lederle's office. Once the forty students were assembled in the presence of President Lederle and Fean Field, Gus Tengberg, acting as spokesman for the committee, read the demand as follows: "Large segments of the student body have expressed interests concerning the moral, political, and social activities of American corporations. Dow Chemical is but one of many thousands of corporations which recruit on this campus. The activities of Dow are however somewhat more notorious than those of many other corporations, and these activities have aroused the interest of many people. We therefore demand that before Dow Chemical be allowed to recruit on our campus that an open forum and debate be conducted between the recruiter and students. We further demand that the administration send a representative to this debate to clarify its position in regard to industrial recruitment."

To this demand President Lederle said, "If Dow Chemical has someone they want to send all well and good, but those people involved in recruiting should not have to be involved in speechmaking." The President also said, "the University has a written policy concerning recruitment by industry and government and that this policy will be carried out, until it is changed."

Following President Lederle's statement, Dean Field suggested that he get in touch with Dow Chemical, immediately, and ask if they would meet the demands of the committee.

Six students acted as representatives for the committee and met in Dean Field's office to contact the Dow Chemical Company. After the conference in Field's office, Michael Minsky, an organizer of the march, said that Dow "stipulated at a possible meeting," and that they had to go through "certain bureaucratic channels." He also said that the moderators at the debate would be chosen from the administration or faculty and that the three moderators suggested by the committee were acceptable. It was not disclosed who the suggested moderators were, pending their notification.

Dean Field made a point in saying that this incident did not mean that there would be no interviews prior to an open forum, and that the University policy on industrial recruiting "does not demand that they also debate." Dean Field is waiting for a reply from Dow Chemical and he said he would "contact the committee as to Dow's reply as soon as possible."

The University policy of placement as stated in the Philosophy of College Placement developed by the College Placement Council is as follows: "placement activities must operate in the climate of academic freedome. They must provide opportunity for individual initiative, maintain institutional and professional integrity, and be concerned with the needs of the public."

The deadline for Student add and drop cards has been extended to Wednesday, Feb. 12, at 5:00 p.m. The deadline for return of admit cards by faculty has been extended until Friday, Feb. 14, 5:00 p.m.

Goodell Urges Support of Dissenters

(CPS) - Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York, who filled the vacancy created by the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy, has urged the older generation "to make common cause" with young people and "reform the practices that inspire dissatisfaction."

Speaking at the State University College of Buffalo, Senator Goodell said the younger generation's views have been 'misinterpreted' as anarchistic. "Those who sit in comfort and complacency, who are blind to the screaming needs of our time are the passive anarchists (and) the ones most guilty of destroying, bit by bit, the potential of a meaningful and healthy society.'

"I cannot comprehend the way many people view student dissent in our country," the senator said. "We praised the gallant, desperate indignation of the martyred Czech student, Jan Pallech. At the same time, we condemn and fear all dissent at home, as if the ideals of justice and freedom were different in different parts of the world.

UMass Will Review Security In Face of Expected Growth

The University of Massachusetts has retained a special firm of consultants to examine the entire security system on its Amherst campus Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson announced.

The firm of John W. Powell Consultants, Inc. of Hamden, Conn, will examine the entire security program including police duties, residence hall safety and security, and the organization and equipment of the University security forces.

President of the consulting firm is John W. Powell, who has had extensive experience in this field. A graduate of Dartmouth College, he was an FBI agent for 17 years, serving at one point as a Special Agent in the New Haven office. Prior to forming his own security consultant firm, he was Associate Dean of Students and Director of Security at Yale University.

Powell will be assisted by Edward C. Steele, the firm's chief consultant. A former Connecticut State Police officer, where he commanded the Hartford District, Steele later served as Powell's assistant at Yale.

Kenneth W. Johnson, University Treasurer, said "The University is a growing community of more than 20,000 students, faculty and staff working and living in 110 buildings. The responsibility for their safety is too important to be left to haphazard growth. We need solid plans.

"Our consultants will be talking with students, faculty, staff and administration before arriving at security recommendations that will meet the needs of all of our people now and as we grow in the future."

Johnson said that the consultants are expected to have a report and recommendations ready for the administration and trustees before the end of this semester.

Hampshire Hosts History Course With U.S. Grant

Hampshire College is the host institution for a grant of $99,000 from the United States Office of Education to support experimental work in United States history for secondary schools. Hampshire's Director of Admissions, Van R. Halsey, is Chairman of the Committee on the Study of History which supervises the project.

Since its beginning in 1959, the project has conducted numerous week-long workshops all across the country to train history teachers and to construct new materials for both college-bound and academically disadvantaged high school students. The new grant will enable the Committee to continue and to expand its current work.

Sword Instruction Is A Necessity For B.U. Theatre Actors of 'Macbeth'

Careful coaching in sword play is a necessity if a production of Macbeth is to include realistic combat, yet insure against any injury to the players.

And careful coaching is what Boston University theatre arts students received in preparing for the production of Macbeth, which will be staged at the Boston University Theatre, Feb. 19 - 22, 8:30 p.m.

The special instruction was provided by Howard Harned, a graduate student in theatre at Columbia University and a fencing master in his own right. On two successive weekends in mid-January, just as the Macbeth cast began rehearsals under director Ted Kazanoff, Harned journeyed to Boston, complete with broad swords, to instruct the young actors on how best to "have" at each other.

In day-long sessions, Harned taught Macbeth, his allies, and his enemies, the proper way to lunge, swing, chop, and all the other maneuvers needed to emerge victorious (or to suffer defeat realistically, whatever the plot has in store for them), while fighting for the throne of Scotland.

Macbeth is the opening production in the second half of the 1968-69 season at Boston University Theatre.

And It's Removal. . . Or Lack Of It

In its initial attempt to beat the elements of God yesterday, the UMass administration failed miserably. Why? Could it possibly be that Provost Tippo and Dean Field failed Meteorology 101?

In what has been called the worst storm in over a decade in this area, the administration decided that students living on campus should attend classes on a normal basis. Yet how could classes be held on a normal basis when there weren't any parking lots open? And if there weren't any parking lots open then how could the teachers come to campus? This brings us to the basic question: Why did the administration decide Sunday night, when there was already a foot of snow on the ground, to have classes?

Other obvious inadequacies in the snow removal (?) operation were apparent. Even though it stopped snowing shortly after midnight Sunday, by midnight Monday there had yet to be a complete path made to the Southwest complex from the Union, even though the Whitmore area was relatively clear of snow.

Due to these questions and many others which have been raised in dormitories around campus we urge an appropriate committee of the Student Senate to investigate the snow removal procedure of the University maintenance department. This committee should also study the needs of both student and University employees during and after snow storms and make appropriate recommendations to the Student Senate and the administration.

Despite the Whitmore fiasco, however, certain other organizations came through with flying colors during the storm emergency, in particular WMUA. The campus radio station provided a valuable service to the campus by airing class cancellations called in by teachers who apparently have much better judgement than administrators.

Also deserving praise is Northampton radio station WHMP which stayed on the air all Sunday night with M. K. Smith from Amherst College providing listeners with information and the latest weather bulletins.

And, of course, we can never forget the dining commons workers who loyally struggled to campus under almost impossible conditions in order to serve breakfast at 7 a.m.

That brings us to another question? What time did Lederle, Tippo, and Field arrive on campus?

Inside Report:

The Tax Revolt

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - In a dramatic turnaround unthinkable even a month ago, President Nixon is now gingerly pushing passage of a tax reform bill in 1969.

The President disclosed his switch Monday night (Feb. 3) in a private meeting at the White House with the two top tax-writers in the House: Rep. Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and Rep. John Byrnes of Wisconsin, the committee's senior Republican.

With Secretary of the Treasury David Kennedy sitting in, Mr. Nixon expressed disagreement with some specifics suggested by Byrnes - a conservative Republican who is becoming the leading Congressional firebrand for tax reform. But in general, the President gave his blessing to Mills and Byrnes for some kind of tax reform.

Before Monday night's meeting, that same surprising word had been passed to Congressional tax reformers by the new high command at the Treasury. Although it will not have specific recommendations ready for the Feb. 18 opening of Ways and Means tax reform hearings, the Treasury says it will testify before the hearings end - probably in mid-April.

Thus, both executive and legislative branches are now pushing a cause that seemed dead beyond revival as the year began.

Aside from pledging retention of the oil depletion allowance, Mr. Nixon said nothing about the tax structure during his campaign. His lieutenants patronizingly gave that subject a very low priority, to be considered late in his Administration - if ever.

As for President Johnson, he had denied his own Treasury team's reform program the status of a Presidential proposal, despite a Congressional mandate.

So gloomy was the atmosphere that in late December Mills, long an advocate of tax reform, was ready to postpone his long-planned reform hearings scheduled for early 1969.

What revived both Mills' optimism and the general prospect for action this year was that rarity in American politics: a spontaneous grass roots revolt. Without any organized propaganda campaign, the middle-class tax-paying public suddenly rose up in rebellion over giving the government a good hunk of their weekly paycheck while millionaires and near-millionaires escape taxation.

The much-quoted warning of a tax revolt from Joseph Barr, Mr. Johnson's last Secretary of the Treasury, was merely new gasoline on a fire already roaring. With protest mail pouring into the Hill, Byrnes took the lead in demanding reforms and Mills scheduled his hearings. The Nixon administration was late to pick up the demand, but it has done so.

There remains, rightfully, considerable skepticism among tax reformers about how deep the Administration's desire for the program really is. Kennedy, a Chicago banker, and his Under Secretary, Charls Walker (a former spokesman for the banking industry) are by no means enthusiastic reformers. Nor is tax lawyer Edward Cohen, expected to be unveiled this week as Assistant Secretary for Taxation, regarded as a zealous loophole closer.

Moreover, pocketbooks of business men who contributed heavily to the Nixon campaign will be a direct target once the tax-writers get to the thorny details in the Ways and Means Committee.

Against this, however, is the rare agreement between Mills and Byrnes on major aspects of the bill. They both want to crack down on real estate tax-shelters, tax-exempt municipal bonds, and tax dodges involving charitable contributions, among other abuses. They both want an increased minimum standard deduction to discourage taxpayers from itemizing their deductions and thus simplify the tax collection process. And they both agree the 1969 bill should NOT attempt reduction of the oil depletion allowance.

Since tax reform for many liberals begins and ends with oil, that last agreement could cause trouble among House Democrats. But plans are now underway for higher taxation of the oil industry, such as trimming deductions for intangible drilling costs, that avoid the emotional question of the depletion allowance.

Overall, the most important ally of reform is the public outcry. If ignored now, Byrnes has warned the Administration, the tax revolt might escalate, forcing Congress to legislate in a mood of hysteria. Agreeing, a conservative Nixon fiscal adviser told us: "We now regard this as an idea whose time has come." It was this recognition that the President acknowledged at the White House Monday night.

UMass Policy Statement

On Placement

"Placement in its broad context is the assistance given to students in searching out the career choices which are most consistent with their individual interests, aptitudes and abilities. Such assistance involves career counseling on an individual as well as group basis, accumulating student credentials, providing career literature and other information on further training opportunities, advising concerning summer jobs, and career oriented part-time jobs when possible.

"The Placement Office has a responsibility to keep the lines of communication open among students, faculty, administrators, the institution itself, industry, government and all employers and agencies in whose operation our students may one day find themselves. This is accomplished by providing contact with employers for visitation to the campus for lectures and discussion as well as employment interviewing, by maintaining liaison with faculty and other staff keeping them informed of the world of work, and aiding them to counsel students through curriculum suggestions, and by the continual study and search by the placement officer himself to upgrade his own knowledge to be more useful to the student and the university community.

Student Health Panel Formed To Examine Health Programs

At a meeting of the Student Health and Welfare Committee a student panel was formed which will interview candidates for positions on the professional staff of the University Health Services.

This panel will hold informal discussions with applicants to estimate non-professional qualifications. Many other suggestions for means of student participation in and evaluation of health programs were brought forth for consideration.

The next meeting of the Committee will be Wednesday, Feb. 19 at 7:30 p.m. at which time there will be more discussion of a sex education program being developed for this spring. Interested students are urged to attend. In the meantime, any student who wishes to be included on the interview panel should send his name, campus address and phone to Dr. Gage at the Infirmary.

YONKERS, New York - Sarah Lawrence College will have a co-education week, February 17 to 22, to give men guests from other colleges a chance to learn at first hand about the style of education and special programs at Sarah Lawrence.

Invitations have been issued to 20 men's colleges in the East, Midwest and South, asking students to come to the campus for the week, attend classes and take part in social and entertainment events and discussion groups.

Sarah Lawrence plans to accept as many as 65 men students to enter in September, 1969, President Esther Raushenbush announced today. The deadline for applications from men has been extended, therefore, beyond the February 10 limit for transfer students.

"The experience of the 20 men students who have been enrolled at the College during the past year has shown that the Sarah Lawrence style of education is effective for men as well as women," President Raushenbush said. "Sarah Lawrence is known for its emphasis on individua l curriculum design, with no required courses, no prerequisites and individual evaluation reports in place of competitive grading. It is a College of 600 with small classes and much opportunity for independent study. The curriculum include s the arts as an integral component, and field work and community service are encouraged as extensions of more academic studies.

"The trend toward coeducation makes this a most exciting time for education," President Raushenbush continued, "because it opens the gates for the widest educational opportunities for men and women. So far as I know there is no men's college with quite the same curriculum design as Sarah Lawrence.'

The men students who are presently enrolled at Sarah Lawrence all transfer students, are studying urban and community affairs, creative writing, literature, physchology, physics, music and chemistry. They previously studied at Columbia, Amherst, Wesleyan, Princeton, Washington University, Boston University and City College of New York.

Men are not new at Sarah Lawrence. After World War II men were admitted into the undergraduate program and since the College's early history, men have been graduate students there. Now, for the first time, however, the College is recruiting male applicants. A recruitment committee, appointed by the President and the President of Student Council, is soliciting applications from transfers and one-year guests at the College.

Catalogues and applications can be obtained by writing to Miss Alice M. Bovard, Director of Admissions, Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, New York 10708.

But it could happen.

Jerry came to Marine Midland Grace in the summer of 1963, shortly after receiving his M.B.A.

He was assigned to the National Division the following spring and was elected an officer in January, 1965. He became an Assistant Vice President in 1967 and in January 1968 was promoted to Vice President in charge of our entire Midwest District.

Jerry's rapid advancement gives you an idea of what's happening at Marine Midland.

We're going to need 100 new officers in the next five years. Men willing to work hard and assume responsibility fast.

If you'd like to know more about the opportunities in domestic, corporate, international and trust banking at Marine Midland, please add your name to our schedule in the placement office.

Striking Professors Lose Jobs Says S.F. State Administration

SAN FRANCISCO (CPS - TEL-EX) - The administration of San Francisco State College has notified 199 striking professors that they have lost their jobs under California's five-day-rule.

California law says any professor who misses five class days is considered to have automatically resigned.

The American Federation of Teachers has been on strike at San Francisco State since Jan. 6 in support of a student strike which began Nov. 6 and over the faculty's own grievances over salaries and teaching loads.

Acting President S.I. Hayakawa, who had been reluctant to enforce the five-day-rule because he feared adverse reaction by organized labor, which has sanctioned the AFT strike, said he would rehire any fired professor who applies by Monday. However, he said they would be rehired without tenure and other benefits.

He also suggested that they apply to the State Personnel Board for full reinstatement and that the college administration would support such requests.

Those strikers who do not apply for either rehiring or full reinstatement will probably lose their jobs and be replaced by other teachers.

AFT President Gary Hawkins said Friday the AFT is advising its members to ask to be rehired and is investigating possible appeals to the State Personnel Board. "Not to do so,' said Hawkins, "would in our opinion indicate that we have quit the college. We have not quit. We are on strike. Nor will be bear the responsibility of locking ourselves out and abandoning the college when it needs us most."

At San Jose State College 26 professors earlier lost their jobs under the same rule for participation in a strike supporting the San Francisco teachers.

The San Francisco State campus is closed for the break between semesters. It re-opens Feb. 17, when both the faculty and student strikes are expected to continue.

Redmen Hope To Improve New England Position

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

UMass gets a second chance at moving up a notch in the New England-ratings when it invades Worcester tonight for an 8:15 encounter with the Crusaders of Holy Cross. The Redman record stands at 11-5 while the Crusaders sport a fine 14-5 start.

Ed Siudut, a 6'7 senior forward, will be the man UMass must stop in this one. Siudut is averaging 23.1 and is generally considered the best shooter in New England. He also finds time to crash the boards at a 12.2 per game rebounding average.

"Mr. Ed", as he's called around Worcester, has an unorthodox jump-hook shot which he fires from behind his right ear. The Everett native now ranks only behind Jack "The Shot" Foley, Tom Heinsohn, Bob Cousy, and Togo Palazzi in total career points among the Holy Cross players.

Siudut has plenty of help up front in the persons of two 6'8 sophomores, Bob Kissane and Don Sasso.

Kissane, whose brother starred at Boston College last year, has done well at the center position for Coach Jack Donahue. The Long Islander has been averaging 14.5 points per game and is up around the 10.0 norm in rebounding.

Sasso, who plays a fine first base for the Crusader baseball team, became a starter after the sixth game of the season. Since then the Waterbury, Conn. son has been the top Holy Cross revounder and has averaged above ten points as a member of the top five.

Another great sophomore, 6'1 Jack Adams, is the pride of the backcourt. Adams, a former Trenton Cathedral standout, scores at a 15 point clip while leading the Crusaders in assists. He likes to fire a running jump shot while moving across the lane.

Co-captain Gerry Foley, a 6'4 hometown boy, rounds out the starting five. Foley isn't the outstanding offensive performer, but Donahue likes his defense and all-around hustle.

The Crusader bench is rather thin and this has hurt them in games in which Adams and Siudut have fouled out. Chuck Mullane, 6'2 senior, is the sixth man although Joe Phelan, a 6'5 sophomore, has been seeing more and more time in recent games. Phelan, brother of the BC freshman standout, is a deadly foul shooter.

Tony Barclay, Jack Lahey, and Hohn Harlin are the rest of the second string. Lahey and Harlin have seen very little action thus far this season.

UMass Coach Jack Leaman is hoping for a repeat of last year's 71-65 upset at the Worcester Auditorium. That was perhaps the best Redman effort of last season with Dick Samuelson, Billy Tindall and Ray Ellerbrook playing the feature roles.

Holy Cross lost to Duquesne, 79-60, Sunday and has been having trouble getting home from Pittsburg. UMass will have to be sharper than their Saturday night performance against Vermont, however, if they're to catch the homesick Crusaders off-guard.

The Redmen will go with Pete Gayeska, Ken Mathias, Dennis Chapman, Joey DiSarcina and Ellerbrook again, but fans can look for Jack Gallagher, John Shockro, John Dreyer, and Samuelson to see some playing time.

Streaking Frosh Seek Number 10 at Cross

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

It will be the task of an off and on team to try and stop the streaking meet tonight in Worcester at 6:30.

The undefeated (9-0) Little Redmen seem to get better and better with each game but they will have to maintain their strong performance against what is a sharpshooting high - scoring young Crusader squad.

Leading the Holy Cross frosh will be high-scoring Buddy Venne. The 6'3 Xavier (Concord) product is averaging around 28 points a game and has hit for one 39 point performance.

Also starting and playing a big role for the Crusaders is 6'4 center Stan Grayson from AllSaints high school, Detroit, Mich. Grayson leads the team in rebounding.

A key performer also has been former Rockwood Academy performer Joe Baron. The 5'11 guard's importance is shown by the fact that in three of the losses suffered by Holy Cross, Baron was injured for the game.

The other starters will be 6'2 Holy Cross freshman basketball UMass frosh when the two teams forward Larry Haley from Albany, N.Y., and 5'11 guard Peter Kennedy from Providence, R. I.

The Crusaders have beaten among others, B. B., Fairfield, Northeastern, Rhode Island, Yale, and Leicester Junior College, while losing to Yale, Stonehill, Springfield, and Boston College frosh teams.

UMass will start big Tom Austin at center in addition to Rich Vogeley and Julius Erving at forward and John Bettan court and Mike Pagliara at guard. Little Redman coach Peter Broaca said of Austin, "He played his finest game against Amherst the other night and deserves to start."

REDMAN RANTINGS - As of late yesterday Holy Cross had not arrived on the Worcester campus following a Sunday game at Duquesne....Reports have them snowed in, and with Bradley airport not opened until this morning, their arrival is uncertain.

Mermen Dunked by Central Conn.

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

The UMass swimming team lost a heartbreaker to the Central Connecticut Blue Devils last Saturday. The final score of 60-38 was not really indicative of the closeness of the meet. The basic difference between the two teams was one of depth.

There are only 13 men on the Redmen team, a bare minimum. Although the UMass team captured six of the 12 first places with Bob Asquith winning the 200 individual medley and the 200 backstroke in which he set a pool record, Dave Larson winning both diving events and Mark Miller winning the 50 and 100 yard freestyle, the Redmen had only two seconds to Central Conn.'s 7 and only three thirds to the home team's five.

This lack of depth has hurt the Redmen all year, making them give up valuable points in the medley relay because of lack of manpower.

Highlights of the meet were close races in the 50 freestyle and the 200 breastroke with Miller winning the first and Northrup who has been plagued with a bad knee most of this year, coming from behind to take second place in the other.

Co-captain Asquith won both of his events easily and in good times. He also led off the final relay, followed in order by Senior Flip Morton and Miller. The Redmen lost this relay to make it only the second losing relay in all meets this year.

Others on the scoreboard for UMass were Morton, third in the 200 yard freestyle, Jim Kaveney with a second in the one meter diving and Ed Jazab with a third in the 500 yard freestyle.

The freshman team was at CCSC and although only composed of four men, managed to score 16 points in the seven events they were able to enter. Herb Schuster was high scoring with two seconds and a third for seven of the points, with Greg Donohue close behind with six.

Dow Appointments Postponed; Minsky Calls For Demonstration

In a statement released by the University administration, it was announced that due to the weather and road conditions, all appointments for Dow recruiting will be held tomorrow.

All of the Dow appointments have been moved to tomorrow for this reason. Dow will also not be able to send any representatives to debate with SDS and the Ad Hoc Committee.

Michael Minsky, co-chairman of SDS and a member of the Ad Hoc Committee released the following statement to the Daily Collegian last night:

On Monday, Feb. 11, 50 UMass students calling themselves the Ad Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow conducted a peaceful march to the administration building where they demanded that before Dow Chemical be allowed to recruit on campus (Feb. 13,14) a public forum be held in which the recruiter, a representative of the administration, and a member of the committee would participate.

The administration contacted Dow and informed them of the students' demand. Tuesday the Ad Hoc Committee informed the administration that instead of Tuesday night the forum could be held on Wednesday night. It was hoped that the administration would have the two interviews scheduled for Wednesday moved to Thursday. The administration refused to do so-claiming it regarded the appointments as a private affair between Dow and the student to be interviewed.

Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. a representative of the administration personally contacted a member of the committee to inform him that all interviews had been postponed until Thursday and that Dow would send a representative to debate at some future point. The recruiter himself was unwilling or not allowed to debate.

The Ad-Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow therefore calls upon the students of the University of Massachusetts to demonstrate against Dow recruitment, in particular, and military industrial recruitment, in general. The demonstration will begin Thursday at 11:30 a.m. The assembly point will be the main lobby of the Student Union. The demonstrators will then proceed to the administration building where a picket line will be set up and maintained.

Flaming Napalm Dropped by Isreal On Jordanian Troops Near Dead Sea

Israeli pilots dropped flaming napalm on Jordanian troops in a fight Tuesday at Ghor Elsafi, in the desert near the southern end of the Dead Sea, Jordan reported.

A spokesman in Amman said four Jordanian soldiers were killed and six wounded. He said a 20-minute raid by eight jet fighters and two helicopters backed up Israeli ground forces who had shelled the area with artillery and mortars.

Israeli sources charged Jordanian machine-gun and mortar crews started it Monday night.

An Israeli army position near kibbutz Tiryat Zvi, in the Beisan Valley 22 miles south of the Sea of Galilee, was reported to have been one target. Others were the Asbdot Yaacov settlement, three miles south of the Sea of Galilee, and Neot Hakikar, in the Negev Desert 12 miles south of the Dead Sea.

"Fire was returned, silencing the enemy positions," said a spokesman for the Israeli army.

In Jerusalem, Deputy Prime Minister Yigal Allon declared Israel is well-entrenched along borders and cease-fire lines and will continue to fortify these positions until there is an effective peace settlement.

Allon defended the government in parliamentary debate on a no-confidence motion filed after Prime Minister Levi Eshkol was quoted in the magazine Newsweek as saying Israel did not want to keep populated areas of Jordan won in the 1967 war.

Behind the lines, Jordanian land under Israeli occupation was reported quiet for the first time in more than a week.

Accompanied by top aides, Dayan chatted with Arab traders and students who closed shops and abandoned schools last week to protest the occupation.

Qalqilya, Tulkarm, Jenin and Nablus were peaceful for the first time since a stone-throwing demonstration by girls in Gaza, on the Mediterranean, sparked the trouble.

King Husseim of Jordan sent two top aides to Cairo with a message for Egypt's president, Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Informed Arab sources said the Jordanians - Premier Bahjat Abdul Talhouny and Foreign Minister Abdel Moneim Refael - would discuss coordination of policies regarding the forthcoming Middle East talks among the Big Four powers.

Volunteer Army May Be Too Costly For Uncle Sam

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon may find he can't have prosperity and an all-volunteer military force at the same time.

This is the opinion of experts citing past government studies which concluded it costs too much to attract enough volunteers for the armed forces when there are plenty of civilian jobs available.

One Pentagon study has calculated it would cost as much as $17 billion more a year to support a force at the pre-Vietnam war level if unemployment fell as low as 4 per cent of the national work force.

This is but one of many problems which new studies ordered by Nixon will have to face.

Pentagon officials forecast it will take a year to come up with a fresh set of finds to guide a special commission Nixon is expected to appoint to develop what the White House has described as "a detailed plan of action for ending the draft."

President Lyndon B. Johnson reported to Congress in March 1967 that "we cannot realistically expect to meet our present commitments or our future requirements with a military force relying exclusively on volunteers."

Johnson spoke of surveys which he said disclosed that two out of every five enlistees in the years before the Vietnam buildup were motivated to sign up because they faced the threat of the draft.

That 1966 survery also led defense experts to a finding that improving fringe benefits such as leave, retirement and medical coverage "would have limited effect as an enlistment inducement."

An earlier study had concluded: "In the absence of the draft, our surveys indicate that the sharpest reduction in voluntary enlistments would occur among individuals with above-average educational attainment. . ."

Officials in the Nixon administration's Defense Department will take these past studies into account.

They also will concentrate on finding ways to elevate the status in society of military men.

The Nixon administration, regardless of what its studies produce, faces formidable opposition in Congress to the idea of substituting an all-volunteer force for one that is at least partially raised through Selective Service.

The present draft law does not expire for about 2-1/2 years.

Police End Picketing at U. Wisconsin

MADISON, Wis. (AP) - About 150 armed police forced picketing students from an administration building on the University of Wisconsin campus Tuesday.

"This is our building," the demonstrators had shouted, while others chanted "On Strike, shut it down." The chant was one the protesting students have used in their boycott of classes to draw support for black student demands.

The classroom strike was launched Monday in an attempt to force the university to meet 13 demands of black students.

Chancellor H. Edwin Young issued a statement saying that the university would make an academic response to the demands but would not stand for disruptive tactics. He said the school had begun a management training program for graduate Negro students three years ago, plans to hire 20 more Negro instructors as soon as possible and wants more Negro students.

Winter Carni Tries Out New Speaker System

Winter Carnival 1969 has been chosen by Electer Voice of Buchanan, Michigan for the introduction of what they believe to be the most powerful portable, hi fidelity sound system in existance today.

The Chambers Bros. concert Friday night will be the first time these speaker systems have assaulted the eardrums of a full audience. But it is not the loudness per se that is the aim . . . rather, clear undistorted sound at the level necessary for everyone to hear.

Four of the speaker systems (named Eliminators) will be employed for the concerts plus assorted amplifying equipment and microphones with a net worth of $5,000. The equipment and personnel for operating it are being provided free of charge by Electro Voice and Bigen Communications, along with their New England representatives, the Michael Scott Co., of Wellesley Hills, Mass.

The amplifiers have a total output of 1,000 watts with a twelve microphone capacity. The equipment is priced to be within the means of local groups and is locally available.

After the performances there will be technical people available to answer questions.

National News Briefs

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) - An intelligence technician testified he did not hear the intelligence officer of the USS Pueblo issue any orders while the ship was being attacked by North Koreans, the Navy said Tuesday.

The technician said that he himself gave the order to start destroying classified equipment and papers, and the crew spent only 10 or 15 minutes of the hour the ship was under siege trying to burn secret documents, the Navy said.

Chief Communications Technician James F. Kell said burning of classified documents ceased when he received word from someone to stop burning. He couldn't remember who gave the word . . ."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell has authorized federal agents to resume wiretaps in investigating organized crime, it was learned Tuesday.

But it was learned also that no use has been made so far of the emergency 48-hour wiretaps.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - A key state witness at Clay Shaw's conspiracy trial who testified earlier he overheard Shaw and others plot to kill President John F. Kennedy said today he never heard an actual "agreement" to carry out the plot.

Perry Raymond Russo, under cross-examination for the second day, testified he overheard Shaw, Lee Harvey Oswald and David W. Ferrie plotting but "I don't know if they agreed."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward W. Brooks, R-Mass., has declined to head a U.S. delegation to an African conference, his office announced Tuesday.

The request came from the Nixon administration.

A Brooke aide said the only Negro in the United States Senate had been asked to head the U.S. delegation to the U.M. Economic Commission for Africa that began Feb. 3.

Brooke considered the assignment a fact-finding mission that could be handled by professional personnel from the State Department, the aide said.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - The Harvard Faculty of Arts and Sciences voted Tuesday to accept the recommendations for a faculty committee to be set up to plan an Afro-American studies program.

The recommendation by a faculty committee called for appointment of a six member committee to review program proposals and to conduct a search for qualified people to run the studies center.

The original report also called for the committee to include three students.

CHICAGO (AP) - Hubert H. Humphrey, who declared Monday night that he "intends to be the leader" of the Democratic party, met today with Mayor Richard J. Daley in what the former vice president called a "peacemaking mission."

encountering in a disciplined way the social reality of urbanization.

4. Social Life: It seems to me that the time has come to begin to question the value of expensive weekend entertainment as the way "to have a good time" and to spend our leisure moments. Instead of supporting the existing cultural patterns, ($20,000 for Johnny Carson, indeed!) the university ought to be on the cutting edge of creating new forms of responsible entertainment.

5. Government: The proposal to suspend the business-as-usual curriculum should and must be a decision made by the whole campus community. But this probably would not happen as the University is now governed in its fragmented way by the student and faculty senates, deans offices, administration offices and Trustees. We ought to move towards the establishment of a university-wide governmental structure perhaps initially in the shape of monthly forum where issues and concerns of the whole university and the metropolitan area at large are brought to attention and discussed openly.

In the suggestions outlined above, I have gone far afield of what might be typically called curriculum concerns. But that is part of the point, the university can no longer see curriculum as having to do with the classroom alone. Total involvement and participation in the crisis of our day is the agenda, the curriculum if you will, for the University.

Winter Carni Has Snow, But The Rest Of Mass Isn't So Glad

New England battled its way to partial freedom Tuesday from a choking snow storm that left at least 47 dead and millions of dollars in damage, lost wages and sales.

The storm struck Sunday and continued Monday, and the U.S. Weather Bureau at Boston eyed a low pressure system to the west and said a little more snow could be expected Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

Most of the deaths attributed to the storm resulted from heart attacks, usually brought on from shoveling or operating snow blowers. The snow blowers also took a heavy toll in severed fingers. Other deaths resulted from highway accidents.

Driving Tuesday was slow and torturously challenging at best. Hundreds of stalled and abandoned cars clogged streets and highways, blocking entry and exit ramps on limited access roads and preventing plows from getting at the two-foot covering of snow.

In other sections, packed and rutted snow jarred motorists inching their way to work or to markets for food. Suburban commuters to Boston found the trip taking six to eight times longer than usual in stop-and-go, bumper-to-bumper lines.

Electric power companies in eastern Massachusetts said they hoped to have all power restored by Tuesday night. Some persons had been without electricity since Sunday night.

Emergency shelters were set up for persons without heat and for stranded motorists.

The New England Telephone Company said most lost service would be restored by Wednesday.

Highways were hardest hit in Massachusetts, except along the Connecticut coast near New York City where the New England Thruway was closed. Other major roads in Connecticut were clear.

The Massachusetts Turnpike was opened to traffic for its full length at midmorning Tuesday, but a 30 mile per hour speed limit was posted. Three interchanges on it remained closed.

In Boston, Post Office officials said yesterday that 129 carriers in the Boston postal district have been disabled in falls since Sunday's snowstorm, including one who broke his leg today.

In Cambridge, the scene had been repeated over and over again in eastern Massachusetts in the preceding 48 hours - a car stuck in a snow bank and its occupants, in this instance two young boys, trying to flag down a passing vehicle for assistance.

But when help finally arrived, the boys took off, scrambling through drifts waist deep.

The car that stopped to lend them assistance was a police cruiser. The boys, neither of whom were identified because of their age, were chased, caught, and charged with stealing the stuck auto.

Student Occupation Ends Violently in Montreal

A two-week-old occupation at Sir George Williams University in Montreal ended violently Tuesday after police arrested 79 students - blacks and whites - in the school's computer centre.

The arrests and final clearance of the centre took over 10 hours and, before the process ended, the occupiers had smashed over a million dollars worth of computers, set fire to the ninth floor of the school's hall building and destroyed a complete set of the school's academic records.

The occupation began two weeks ago after students, primarily black, gave up on a hearing committee investigating charges of racism laid against a biology professor by six blacks.

Over the weekend, it appeared as if agreement might be reached in the dispute. The administration agreed to repudiate the hearing committee and set another one in its place that would be agreeable to both parties but this plan was rejected early Tuesday morning by the faculty who favoured a more militant stand against the occupation.

In mid-afternoon, the students were driven out by the combination of police and smoke. 79 were arrested and charged with arson, willful damage to property, resisting arrest, assault and a host of other charges.

Biafra Journal

A People in Agony

"Nothing I had seen in Korea, Vietnam or during the Arab-Israeli War was adequate preparation for the agony that awaited in the rain forest," writes Michael Mok in BIAFRA JOURNAL, published this week by Time-Life Books.

Twice during 1968, LIFE magazine sent correspondent Mok to Biafra, now a 60 x 40 mile fragment of jungle jammed with more than 6 million members of the Ibo tribe, fighting a mismatched war of independence against Nigeria.

BIAFRA JOURNAL, is a 96-page impassioned account in words and pictures, of what he saw and experienced during these trips to the war-torn and starving Republic of Biafra.

"Eight hours from London by air is a pocket of pain called Biafra" Mok goes on to say in the introduction, "where thousands of people die of hunger every day. We who were witnesses from outside knew that our own part in the tragedy was insignificant; we had our tickets home, in a manner of speaking. But it was hard to eat the food we had brought with us because every bite swallowed made a man feel like a war criminal. It was impossible to rest because remembered screams of children drove off sleep."

BIAFRA JOURNAL is not an objective analysis for readers seeking historical perspective. It is an anguished and often angry testament of one witness who tells a story the way he saw it.

Mok portrays the leaders on both sides, the missionaires - mainly Irish Catholic priests and nuns - who remained behind to minister to the Biafrans, the mercenaries and the warriors, the refugees and, most sadly and most vividly, the generation of Biafran children who have already died or are doomed by kwashiorkor - protein starvation that no amount of fruits and vegetables can correct.

In addition to the author's powerful text, the book contains a number of exclusive and graphic pictures by the photographers of LIFE and TIME magazines as well as a chronology of this stark and brutal war. The story begins in 1959 when the Federation of Nigeria - a national entity made up of disparate and unfriendly tribal groupings - was born. It traces the collapse of this shaky union and the proclamation of the Republic of Biafra in 1967, up to December 1968 when the monthly death toll of starving Biafrans reached 750,000.

As the desperate fight for survival goes on in Biafra, Mok concludes his journal with this hopeful prediction by Father Joe, the pastor of a mission house perched on the edge of Biafra's sole airstrip, "however this thing is settled militarily, somehow, somewhere, something called Biafra will continue to exist."

BIAFRA JOURNAL is on sale throughout the country for $1.95, at newsstands and wherever books and magazines are sold.

"Let Him Aboard, But Ask Him To Consult With You On The Destination"

Even the children who survive will have sustained such massive brain and kidney damage from lack of protein that they will never be able to lead normal lives. In the photo above, a girl, barely six, comforts her brother.

Curriculum

To the editor:

I have recently returned from the King Council Forum which discussed the problems of curriculum and even more recently have turned from reading the Collegian article about the Forum. Dick Story's story for the Collegian was probably pretty accurate and so I would like to make an effort to ungarble what Story claimed "were points well made but became garbled in subsequent handling":

My thesis that evening was that there are two major forces at work in our day which make the present curriculum irrelevant: one is the impact of electronic technology which is rendering the present educational enterprise obsolete, and the second is the crisis in humanness (the urban, black/white, affluent/poverty, etc. nexus of crises) which I think is calling the meaningfulness of the traditional curriculum, indeed the university itself, into question. As far as I am concerned the crisis in civilization is too great to allow the university to function as usual, turning out people qualified for jobs in the "military industrial" complex-as though somehow those who are dependent on the system will dare to change it.

What, then, should be done about the curriculum to make it relevant is the question that was not answered at the Thursday night panel discussion. To this end I would make the following recommendation:

THAT THE UNIVERSITY WITHIN THE NEXT FOUR YEARS SUSPEND THE BUSINESS-AS-USUAL CURRICULA FOR ONE YEAR. In the words of a University Christian Movement proposal called "The University Inside-Out", such a suggestion would mean: "the entire student body and faculty would be called upon to commit themselves to a full year of community-wide (metropolitan area-wide) re-education. Re-education for what? For justice, against guns, police and the military as the answer, against paternalism as the attitude, for a society in which we respect one anothers dignity and value". I would hope that the implementation of such a proposal would provide students and faculty alike to engage in proscriptive research instead of the usual descriptive kind; would force courses and the curriculum to be problem and issue oriented instead of department oriented; and hopefully would force the rather privatistic and competitive academic attitude which presently prevails to give way to a corporate and involved style.

1. Orientation: Instead of just freshmen, the whole University community might be involved in an orientation marathon for three or four days dealing with the crises confronting civilization and proposals for working on them with specific emphasis on the use of the university as a working resource.

2. Curriculum: Right away we could alter the typical curriculum structure and initiate a 4/1/4 plan. In the fall and spring, students would take courses as usual. But in the winter session (a 5 or 6 week block of time), the WHOLE University community could be involved in a Social Reality curriculum with, for example, three issues available for all to work on: Urbanization, Technology, World Poverty, etc. The emphasis here would be to get on top of the material available, to approach the problem from a variety of disciplinary viewpoints, and then to arrive at some possible modes of solving the problems. For example; the 5-6 week Social Reality emphasis might deal with the problem of Technology - is it good or bad, what are its problems and possibilities, what is the relation of technology to work and leisure, to poverty and affluence, to urbanization and the ghetto, to transportation and social patterns, etc.?

3. University Living-Patterns: The recent efforts of Dwight House in the Quad to achieve some semblance of community in a university dormitory ought to be applauded rather than bogged down in tricky legalisms. We need more serious efforts of this type at this campus which struggles with what it means to be a community responsible for and accountable to one another instead of the typical dog-eat-dog attitude of a collection of individuals struggling to survive.

In connection with University Living-Patterns, people of various ages and interests ought to live in our midst. We need, in short, to break out of the four walls of the campus and we need, in turn, an invasion of the real world onto the campus.

Such a theory acted upon might mean the university would establish an urban house in the greater Springfield area where students could live and from which they could take on urban citizenship if only for a semester or year. It seems a little foolish to take courses in "urbanization" without

Music Department Will Dedicate Concert To Late Professor Lebow

A memorial concert is being held for Professor Howard Lebow who died last January 15. Thirty-two year old Lebow was one of UMass' newest and most popular musicians. The University's major pianist and a noted concert performer had succumbed to injuries following an automobile accident.

Though a member of the Department of Music faculty only a short time, Howard Lebow had managed to endear himself to his colleagues and had forged a deep relationship with hundreds of students. He had gained more than respect as their teacher; he was their friend.

Mr. Lebow's duties at the University of Massachusetts permitted him to continue his busy concert career and he was considered by leading pianists and critics as one of the most exciting of the "young" generation of artists before the public. His reviews from leading newspapers in this country and abroad clearly established Howard Lebow as "a remarkable artist", to quote the N.Y. Times.

In an effort to perpetuate the ideals of Howard Lebow and to provide financial asistance to worthy music students at the University, a memorial fund in Mr. Lebow's name was established in 1968 by his friends. His colleagues in the Department of Music at UMass have decided to dedicate their concert on Wednesday, February 26, 1969 to Mr. Lebow's memory and to contribute all proceeds from this event to the scholarship fund which bears his name.

The Lebow Memorial Concert will be held on Wednesday evening, Feb. 26, 1969 in Bowker Auditorium on the University's campus in Amherst at 8 p.m. The event is open to the public without charge and those wishing to contribute to the scholarship may do so then or by sending their tax-deductible check for the Howard Lebow Scholarship Fund to the Treasurer, University of Massachusetts, % Mr. Robert Brand, Treasurer's Office, Univerity of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002

Now Hijacked Planes Can LeavePromptly

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department said Tuesday the Cuban government has agreed to allow passengers whose flights are diverted to Cuba to leave promptly aboard the hijacked plane.

Press office Robert J. McCloskey, announcing the development, called it a "good step in the right direction."

He said the agreement was reached with the help of the Swiss embassy in Havana in advance of the Monday hijacking of an Eastern Airlines plane.

Passengers aboard that plane were permitted to travel to Miami on the plane the same day.

Heretofore, Cuba has transferred the passengers to Varadero, 90 miles east of Havana, where they could be picked up by propeller-driven planes sent for the purpose. Cuba had said Havana's Mose Marti airport could not accommodate the large jet airliners.

Amherst 70 Players Present SCAPIN; Newly - Translated Farce by Moliere

Have you had a good laugh lately? Perhaps you will this weekend. SCAPIN, a farce by Moliere, presented in English by The Amherst Seventy Players in conjunction with the Amherst College Department of Dramatic Arts and The Independent Study Committee, opens Friday, February 14 in Buckley Recital Hall in the Amherst College Music Building.

The production will be the first to use a recently completed translation written especially for this production by Amherst professor James Bierman. His wife, Peggy Bierman, designed the costumes, and Dan Whitaker '71 designed the set.

In the "Commedia" tradition whereby the play was brought from town to town, SCAPIN will go on a Valley tour. Performances will be held in the Laboratory Theatre at Mount Holyoke College on Saturday, February 15 at 8:30 p.m. and at the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre at Smith College on Sunday, February 23 at 2 p.m. Other performances at Amherst will be Sunday, February 16, Friday, February 21, and Saturday, February 22. All Amherst performances are at 8:30 p.m.

Ticket s for SCAPIN are $1.50 and are sold on a reserved seat basis. Although there may be tickets available at the door, it is recommended that they be ordered by sending a check with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to The Seventy Players, Box 1047, Amherst College Station. Or, if time does not permit writing, call (413) 253-5664 in the afternoon or evening, and tickets will be reserved.

MICHAEL CASSIDY (Amherst College '72) and Jane Rodgers (MHC '69) play cat-and-mouse in Moliere's SCAPIN, produced and directed by Drew Kalter '70 at Amherst this weekend and next. Kalter has "striven for a production of humor and comedy...to parallel the treatment the play was given in the court during Moliere's own life time."

Girls Compete Tonight For College Girl Title

In past years the competition was based solely on the basis of fashion and appearance, but because the college girl has expanded herself and her interests, Glamour has expanded the contest to include her involvement and leadership in the campus community.

To be a leader today's college girl must develop an interest in committing herself to doing something about her world and her appearance - she must make the most of herself, her looks, and her life.

The winner of the competition at UMass will be our entry in the national competition. As the local winner she will receive gift certificates from local merchants; the national winners receive national recognition for themselves and their school in the August issue of Glamour Magazine, personal gifts from the editor, and an all expense paid trip to a foreign country.

Four Classes To Sponsor Spring Trip To Montreal

By PATT FRANCIS
Staff Reporter

The four classes of the University are sponsoring a trip to Montreal, Quebec, Canada, during spring vacation. The trip is tentatively scheduled for March 24-27. It may be extended to the 28th.

Why Montreal? Dick Palomba, chairman of the Four-Class committee, explained that Montreal is a combination of a miniature New York City, and an old Parisian-type city. Another factor to be considered is the city's proximity to the Laurentian Mountains, which boast excellent skiing facilities. In addition, there is an abundance of shops and sights, for those who are more inclined to be spectators.

According to Palomba, the cost will be kept at a minimum. Although not definite yet, it is being projected at under $40, which will include transportation and lodging. Three of Montreal's best hotels are under consideration for housing.

Arrangements are being made for the chartered busses to leave from both Boston and Springfield.

The Four-Class committee is working to arrange for ski trips to the Mount Gavriel Lodge ski area, for under $5. Other arrangements are being contemplated for guided tours of the city and surrounding points of interest, for those who wish to participate.

Taller Holy Cross Clobbers Redmen, 97-68

BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

WORCESTER - The Holy Cross Crusaders killed UMass, 62-40, off the boards and proceeded to bury the Redmen, 97-68, before 2500 at the Worcester Auditorium last night.

Ed Siudut pumped in 36 points and Bob Kissane chipped in with 23 in the runaway for the Crusaders. Holy Cross shot a big 54 per cent from the floor and 78 per cent from the line.

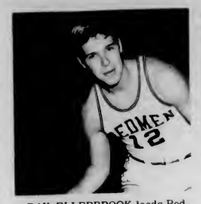
The Redmen took a brief five point advantage before an avalanche of Holy Cross shooting, and their own poor shooting put them down, 10-5.

Don Sasso, Kissane and Suidut then took over complete command of both backboards in the six minute stretch to heighten the Crusader margin to 26-11 as UMass could only counter with fast breaks by Dennis Chapman, Pete Gayeska and Ray Ellerbrook.

The visitors ran away in an effort to get back into the ball game, but only Ellerbrook could find the court from medium range on jump shots. Holy Cross' tall front line, meanwhile, put the ball through the hole and scored on free throws with unnerving accuracy.

In the last five minutes of the first half, the Redmen went into a forecourt press, and this maneuver caused some turnovers but more often the taller Crusaders were able to feed the ball into Siudut for deadly hooks.

At half time, the visitors were down 21 points at 48-27, and the Crusaders outrebounded the Redmen by a phenomenal 38-15 margin the the opening period.



The second half proved no more hopeful for the invaders despite good boardwork by Ken Mathias and Gayeska and the shooting of Starsiak and Ellerbrook. Siudut and Kissane remained top for the home boys.

When Gayeska fouled out with 13:44 left and Holy Cross up 64-42, it was all over. The Crusaders played even more deliberate offense and were content to settle for free throws and follow ups by Siudut.

At the 8:13 mark UMass went into a forecourt press, but this couldn't stop their taller foes who passed the ball up slowly but surely and with six minutes to go the Crusaders held an 80-50 margin.

John Shockro and Ellerbrook were good down the stretch for the Redmen, but by that time the game was in the bag.

Coach Jack Donohue cleared his bench of his subs, and they held their own against the UMass subs to account for the final 97-68 outcome.

RAY ELLERBROOK leads Redmen scorers in losing effort.

UMass was hampered by the loss of Co-captain Joey DiSarcina. The senior backcourtman injured a left thigh, missed the game and will be out at least a week.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Mathias led the Redmen with 10 rebounds... Siudut was top man in the game in the rebounding department with 15 for the Crusaders followed by teammate Kissane at 11...Siudut led all scorers with 36 points...Ellerbrook was high for the Redmen with 21...Also in double figures for the Redmen were Mathias 12, and Gayeska 13...Dick Starsiak played a good game in his reserve roll for UMass...Team record for the Redmen is now 11-6...The Crusaders stand at 15-5 for the season...

UMass Gets Six In First, Tops Amherst, 12-3

Hat trick performances by sophomore Bob Madore and senior Tom Babson triggered UMass to a 12-3 rout over Amherst Monday night at Orr Rink.

The Redmen all but blew their cross-town rivals off the ice by scoring six goals in the first period. Bill McMann, the flashy UMass defenseman, had a goal and two assists in that period.

Madore, who finished the night with five points, had a goal and an assist. McMann started the scoring when he banged home a slap shot at 2:00 of the opening period. Just 52 seconds later, Captain Jeff Sanborn scored a nifty goal. The play was started in the UMass end when Joe DiCicco fed John Hartnett at the blue line. Hartnett then started up ice, passing to Sanborn crossing the Amherst blue line. Hartnett took a quick return pass, drew the Amherst goalie to one side and slid the puck back to Sanborn for the goal.

Doug Powling scored next on a screen shot at 11:06. Then Babson scored what proved to be the winning goal at 14:22 of the first period. Sophomore Paul Riley and Madore finished the scoring in the opening period.

UMass got two goals from Madore and a goal by Babson in the second period. Sanborn also added his second goal of the night.

The Redmen finished the scoring in the third period on goals by Babson and Ed Riley.

UMass had a total of 57 shots on the net for the night while Amherst could only muster 22. Goalie Larry Walsh had 15 saves in the first two periods and Stu Kadish made seven stops in the third period.

Madore has played very well of late and since being moved up to the first line to center for Charlie Hanifan and Riley has given that line some extra scoring punch. They accounted for six of UMass' 12 goals. Hanifan, a senior from Malden, had four assists while Riley had a goal and two assists.

All the UMass defensemen played well. Powling had a goal and two assists as did McMann. DiCicco had an assist while playing well defensively and Rocky Stone, who sustained a cut over his right eye, gave his usual good effort.

It was inevitable that the Redmen would explode after playing well against Army, Penn, Vermont and losing a heartbreaker at Williams when they arrived at the rink just 11 minutes before game time only to have the Ephmen score three of their five goals in that first period.

The Redmen play at UConn tonight in a 7:30 game in Storrs, and their next home game will be Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m. against Holy Cross.

Matmen Win; Now 5-3

The UMass varsity wrestling team won its' second straight meet by a score of 25-18 over the University of Connecticut last night at Boyden gymnasium. The Redmen now have a 5-3 seasonal record.

UMass wrapped up the meet early by dominating the lighter weight classes. They led 25-8 after the 177 lb. match and then held on to the lead as both of their remaining wrestlers were pinned by their UConn opponents. Tom Young was the outstanding Redmen wrestler of the night as he topped his opponent by a 10-4 score. In the interesting match Glen Cummings was pinned in the third period by a 350 lb. UConn heavyweight. Glen, who weighs about 250 lbs., looked like a lightweight against his adversary.

The Redmen return to action this weekend when they travel to Pennsylvania for weekend meets against Wilkes-Barre and East Stroudsburg.

Frosh Icemen Top AIC For 7th In Row

BY STEVE SHAMBAN
Sports Day Editor

A blistering 83 shot attack proved to be too much for a game but outmanned AIC frosh sextet as the Little Redmen triumphed 6-2 in a hockey game played yesterday at Orr Rink. UMass' record is now 9-2, the last seven wins coming in a row.

From the beginning, this affair had all the makings of a farce as AIC arrived with only 10 players. Only outstanding play by Yellow Jacket goalie Don Cochrane, some fairly effective scrambling tactics by the defense and luck prevented an out and out rout.

Cochrane was superb. He had 77 saves on the night and often made two or three great ones in a row.

By the same token, the UMass offense was tremendous. A conservative estimate would have them controlling the puck for nigh on two thirds of the game. The UMass score could easily have been two or three times larger. Time and time again, a Little Redman shot would hit the post or slide just past an open corner of the net.

despite UMass' obvious advantages, a couple of fluke scores kept the game close in the first period. Bill Davis broke the ice for AIC, scoring at :58. The goal developed when UMass goalie Bruce Crawford misplayed a rebound off a long shot, giving Davis an easy chance. George Henderson got the assist.

Jack Edwards tied it up at 1:28 with the first of his two goals, the assist going to Dan Reidy. Bruce Winter made it 2-1 at 2:12 with his first goal since December 6 when he had the hat trick. Winter kept swinging away from right in front and finally scored. Charley Donovan and Mike Waldron assisted.

AIC's last goal came at 6:32 on a deflection by Yves Locas. Henderson got his second assist on a pass which floated in the air like a knuckleball.

It was a long time between goals for center Winter before this game, but he took little time in getting a second goal as he put one in at 19:59 for his sixth goal of the campaign. Waldron and Ken Steeves received credit for the assists.

Waldron made it 4-2 at 15:36 of the second period. Assists went to Winter and Donovan. With 1:38 left, a Boston Bruins type altercation developed in the AIC end which resulted in the ejection of Henderson and the Little Redmen's Al Nickerson and Dennis Grabowski scoring heavily in the fracas.

The third period was more of the same with UMass applying constant pressure. Edwards got his second of the game at 1:04 on an unassisted play. At 3:38 Bryan Sullivan scored his second goal of the year to make it 6-2. Eric Serafield had a break away down the left side, flipped the puck to Sullivan on the right side where he made a nifty fake and put it in the left corner.

Today's game with UConn has been cancelled. Next game will be Saturday at Orr Rink against Holy Cross. Faceoff is at 2 p.m.

Frosh Pin UConn, 23-20

The freshmen wrestling team defeated the UConn frosh 23-20 in a dual meet on Tuesday night. It was the fifth win for the Little Redmen against only one loss. The key to victory for UMass was that three of their five victories were falls compared to none for UConn, who actually won more matches. UMass victors who pinned their opponents were Dave Reynolds, Clay Jester, and Sam James.

115 Garber (C) won by forfeit.
123 R. Garber (C) decisioned Barry Godowsky (M) 9-5.
130 Dave Reynolds (M) pinned Volpa (C) 4:00.
137 Clay Jester (M) pinned Ladato (C) 1:23.
145 Sciola (C) decisioned Steve Jones (M) 7-4.
152 Bercovitch (M) decisioned Erdman (C) 10-2.
160 Larry Piccioli (M) won by forfeit.
167 Friedlander (C) decisioned Ernie Lepore (M) 8-5.
177 Dadoli (C) decisioned Rod Loiselle (M) 12-2.
191 Sam James (M) pinned Adiletta (C) 1:35.
Unl Hooks (C) decisioned Carl Damman (M) 10-7.

Frosh Top H C For Tenth

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

WORCESTER - Bill Kesgen's second half scoring and rebounding led the UMass freshman basketball team to its tenth straight victory last night as the undefeated Little Redmen repelled a scrappy Holy Cross team 75-61, here last night.

The smaller Crusaders kept coming back on numerous occasions from margins of as much as 10 points. The closeness of the contest is indicated by the fact that Holy Cross trailed by only three, 61-58, with 2:30 to go.

However, Kesgen, along with Julius Erving led UMass to eight straight points to put the game beyond reach. Kesgen was the clutch performer for the Little Redmen getting 14 of his 16 points in the second half and consistently coming up with the key hoop for UMass.

Kesgen's performance offset the brilliant performance of Buddy Venne who poured in 31 points for the hometowners. The majority of the conquered native's points were from the 25 - 30 foot area as he wasn't bashful about launching the long one.

UMass led throughout the game. Erving was the big gun in the first half that had the frosh leading 35-30 at the end of the first 20 minutes. Erving, 6'5, scored 14 in the half as he held off the Venne-led Crusaders.

UMass led by eight points on several occasions in the final half, but Holy Cross kept pecking away to trail by only three with 2:30 left. However, Erving, Kesgen and Erving again hit field goals in succession and the Little Redmen remained undefeated.

Venne led all scorers with 31 points. He was supported on the Holy Cross side by Joe Baron with 14 and Stan Grayson with 11.

Erving led UMass with 20 points, Kesgen had 16 while Rich Vogeley had 12, John Bettancourt and Mike Pagliara each had 11 in the balanced Little Redmen scoring.

Don Epstein Succeeds Jack Dean as Editor-in-Chief

BY RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

Donald A. Epstein, '70, was elected to succeed J. Harris Dean as Editor-in-Chief of the MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN, in the annual elections held last evening. By this action, Epstein moves up from his former post of Managing Editor.

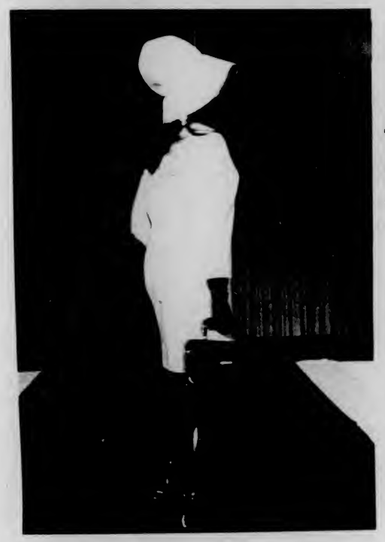
Further elections brought Joel Fox to the Managing Editor's desk, Keith Bromery to the slot of Executive Editor, Mark Silverman to be News Editor, Peter Pascarelli into line as sports editor, and Frank Wandry into the Business Manager's office.

The election results were ratified by the paper's publishing board immediately afterwards.

As he left office, Dean, one of relatively few to last a full year term as Editor-in-chief, spoke warmly and fondly of the things that the paper had been able to do in the way of progress and innovations. He cited expanded coverage of both local and national events, better distribution (with yet further improvements for the immediate future); but continued by cautioning the staff that there were, nevertheless, many things still undone - remaining for future improvement.

A further point made by the outgoing Editor concerned the educational value of his experiences with a daily newspaper: "It gave me the education I could never have found in the College of Arts and Sciences," he said sadly. Reflecting on the future of journalism training here, he hoped that the presence of a thriving daily paper would be instrumental in bringing the University to recognize the need for far broader training in this area than is presently available.

Expanding on the theme of major changes coming to the DAILY COLLEGIAN, both Dean and Epstein announced the formulation of a scheme whereby all the paper's elected editors may be paid minimal incentives during the present semester. (See story below.)



Dean, saying that students can't be expected to work from 40 to 50 hours per week "for fun," said that the salaries under the trial arrangement will be derived from revenues paid to the newspaper for bulk distribution to faculty and administrators.

In cooperation with the Dean of Students, plans have been made for this bulk distribution through the daily campus mail; the payment for these additional papers will come, for this semester, from funds in the Dean of Student's accounts. Payments to editors will alleviate a problem which has long plagued the COLLEGIAN - that of holding the best student writers in the face of financially-tempting offers made by other outside papers or news services.

In his acceptance speech, Editor-in-Chief Epstein echoed Dean's comments on staff salaries, and added that with the incentives he hopes to make the DAILY COLLEGIAN, "not only New England's largest college daily, but also its best college daily." Also on Epstein's list of priorities are greater editorial consistency and the reorganization of the business staff.

Robin Sanders, Best-Dressed Girl on Campus, models her "shocking pink" evening wear.

Robin Sanders Wins Title Of Best Dressed Girl

By HELEN KENSICK

A petite brunette, Robin Sanders, won the title of Best Dressed Girl on the UMass campus last night in the Student Union Ballroom. She is now the UMass candidate to the nation-wide Top Ten College Girls Contest sponsored by Glamour Magazine.

The contest stressed leadership ability in campus as well as community activities, individual thinking in fashion choice, and poise.

Robin is an exchange student from New Mexico, a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, the Revelers, serves as advertising assistant for MADEMOISELLE Magazine on campus, and is president of the Exchange Club.

Her choice for evening attire was a shocking pink dress and hat ensemble. For formal dress, Robin chose moss green velvet culottes with a matching vest.

As the winner of this contest, Robin will receive gift certificates from local merchants. She must submit a five hundred word essay to GLAMOUR Magazine describing her interests, but more importantly the reasons for her commitment to these interests.

Senate Favors All Campus Recruiting, Approves Payment of Collegian Editors

By CHRIS MCGAHAN
Student Government Editor

In an extrodinarily long-winded meeting in a Senate Chamber thick with hot air, the Student Senate last night managed to pass, reject, or otherwise dispose of six pieces of legislation by press time.

Most important of these was a motion introduced by President Paul Silverman regarding on-campus recruiting. The basic intent of the bill placed the Senate on record in favor of recruiting and opposed to what Silverman referred to as "selective morality" regarding who should or should not be allowed to recruit on campus. The bill also provided that "Any organization wishing to recruit on campus will be asked to provide a representative to take part in an open forum with interested students upon the presentation of a petition to the Placement Office at least three days before the organization's first recruitment date by at least 50 students."

The Senate first refused to consider, and then passed, a bill approving the transfer of $3,800 in Cultural Enrichment funds from the Dean of Students Office to the Daily Collegian. This move will pay for faculty subscriptions for the spring semester and at the same time provide approximately $2600 in salaries for MDC editors.

In a move that is bound to have some effect on the up-coming Senate officer elections, Student Government Affairs Committee Chairman John Dubois announced his resignation from that chairmanship. President Silverman noted that he expects to fill the vacancy by next week.

A bill providing for a potential reduction in the Student Activities Tax for commuters was also passed. Senator Bill Perkins, speaking in favor of the bill, said: Passage of this bill will provide options for area governments to evolve in a proper atmosphere.' Since an area government for commuters is deemed "probably infeasible" according to Senator Larry Marcus, their tax rate will be reduced by the amount that resident students pay for support of area governments.

Another reconsideration motion committed a recommendation previously passed, to lower the state's drinking age to 18, to the Student Matters Committee until the second meeting in April.

Two bills attempting to define the status of Chorale and Band as RSO, Fine Arts, or departmental groups, and their eligibility to receive student funds, were committed to the Activities Committee for two weeks' study.

Senate Bill #92, a motion recommending the publication of semester departmental course and teacher/section bulletins was passed. The motion was introduced by Senator Kathy Souza and amended by Senator-at-large ('70) Bruce Balboni to provide the instructor-section number information that is lacking in the regular University course bulletin.

Noting that it is "getting harder and harder to find a good gut course on this campus" in relation to his arrival four years ago, and noting the need to find not only a gut course but a gut professor, Senator Brad Johnson claimed "These are certainly times that try men's souls. This is exactly what this campus wants and needs."

The vote was overwhelmingly in favor.

Wisconsin Nat'l. Guard Called In To Quell UWisc. Disruptions

MADISON, Wis. (AP) - Gov. Warren P. Knowles called out the Wisconsin National Guard Wednesday to put down student disruptions on the strike-troubled University of Wisconsin campus.

Nine hundred guardsmen were ordered to active duty in Madison, scene of three days of classroom boycotts on the 33,000 student campus.

With the troops gathering at an unspecified point outside the campus area, a scheduled rally by demonstrators went on without incident and broke up into "liberation school" groups assigned to plan Thursday activities.

Knowles said he was determined that the university "will not be closed down" and would continue to function "in pursuit of its primary mission - the education of our young citizens."

Six students were arrested Wednesday as jeering protesters kept harassed police busy breaking up picket lines outside major classroom buildings.

Demonstrators launched the classroom boycott Monday in behalf of black students, who have submitted 13 demands to the university. The demands include the creation of a separate black studies department and admission of 90 Negroes who were ousted at Oshkosh State University after a violent protest last November.

"What started out as black demands has become secondary," said Marshall Colston, a Negro faculty member. " The third world Liberation Front, Students for Democratic Society and some other militant revolutionary groups have used this as a pretext to do their thing."

Knowles said he had ordered out the guard at the request of Madison Mayor Otto Festge, who said many of the city's police officers had been on duty for 18 hours.

There are about 500 Negro students on the Madison campus but only about 50 of them appeared to be taking an active part in the demonstration.

New Course Explores Students' Prejudice

The School of Education has begun its popular "Race Relations in Education' course.

The 300 students taking the course for the first eight weeks of the semester were introduced to a lengthy questionnaire, a short lecture and finally meetings with their discussion groups at the first meeting last week.

The first order of business for the students was to fill out a multiple choice questionnaire, designed by course leaders to measure one's feelings toward black and white people. The leaders are graduate students who explained that "Race Relations" is an "experimental project" which, if successful, will become an accredited course next year. This semester it is being conducted on a pass-fail basis, with a value of three credits.

Dan Jordan, who will present four lectures during the first eight weeks explained the meaning of "Race" and the course's goals. The same questionnaire will be offered again at the end of the eight weeks in an attempt to see if anyone's basic feelings toward race have changed, he said. In other words, if any prejudice was displayed at the start, will it prevail after experiencing this course?

Mr. Jordan stated that it is not the course's intention to change anyone, but only to make known the truth concerning black and white, so that the student can form his own judgements.

In the final segment, each student was assigned to a discussion group. The faculty believes that these small groups, numbering under 15, will provide the most lasting and fruitful experiences of the whole course. Each group is led by two graduate students who get discussions under way and take a back seat once the talk begins. Everyone will be reading BLACK RAGE, along with selections from a supplementary book list. Discussions, carried on by both blacks and whites, will pertain to the readings, lectures and everyday experiences students consider relevant.

Representative Disputes CAB Ruling, Defends Airline Youth Half-Fare Policy

Special to the Daily Collegian

U.S. Representative Arnold Olsen (D. Mont.) today charged that elimination of airline youth fares would "encourage thousands of young people to resume the illegal and dangerous practice of hitch hiking or to attempt long, exhausting automobile trips, frequently in unsafe vehicles." He argued that no one would benefit from a discontinuation of youth fares.

Olsen said a Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) ruling against the half-fare standby tickets for persons under 21 "failed to combine prudence and justice, the compatible format necessary to formulate any dictate of society, according to Oliver Wendell Holmes.'

The CAB ruling , written by Examiner Arthur S. Present, last month judged the special fare discriminatory to adult passengers. If upheld by the five-member Board, youth fares will be dropped by Feb. 28. In a letter to CAB Chairman John H. Crooker, Olsen asked that the Tuesday decision be reviewed and rescinded.

"I fail to see how permitting a young person to fly half fare on a seat that would otherwise go empty discriminates against regular passengers,' Olsen asserted.

Continuing, Olsen argued that "prudent justice in this situation would be influenced by the facts that most passengers over 21 are restricted by personal demands or schedules from flying space available; that a change to include all age groups in the standby fares would mean havoc for the reservation system; that the revenue loss resulting from elimination of the existing regulations could mean increased fares for all passengers; and that present youth fares contribute substantially to the cause of education.'

The Montana lawmaker said he views the youth fare as a "bright spot in a world that generally discriminates against young people. The safest driver in the world has to pay twice as much for car insurance if his age happens to be 22 or 23,' Olsen said.

Persons under 21 cannot vote," he continued, "persons under 25 cannot serve in Congress; persons under 62 cannot receive Social Security retirement benefits; persons under 35 cannot be President of the United States; persons over 21 cannot enter our military academies; and persons over 18 cannot serve as pages in the U.S. Congress. In each of these cases," Olsen said, "there is some age discrimination."

"Further," Olsen went on, "travel alone is a form of education. Thousands of young Americans - students and non-students - have been enabled by the youth fare to see much more of their country. They have benefitted from the current youth fare arrangement, and it has not been at the expense of full-fare passengers because space available seats are empty seats."

Concluding, Olsen asserted that "strict, imprudent application of the non-discrimination ruling would threaten half-fare tickets for youngsters between 2 and 12 years of age (reservations can be made for such tickets), for military personnel, and several other special fare categories now properly and prudently provided by the airlines."

UMass Now Accepting Frieburg Applications

Applications are now being received for the 1968-69 program of the University of Massachusetts Atlantic Studies Center in Freiburg, Germany.

Designed primarily as a graduate center for studies i n all areas of the humanitie s and social sciences, the center offers a program through which students may pursue their own major interests while at the same time broadening their outlook by participating in courses of a comparative and interdisciplinary nature.

Courses, all taught in German, are by a resident UMass staff and by Freiburg University faculty. A limited number of qualified undergraduates, juniors and seniors only, are accepted each year.

Freiburg is one of Germany's oldest and most distinguished universities. It is in the Black Forest area close to the borders of France and Switzerland. The UMass program there is in its third year.

The program is open to students from accredited institutions in the U.S. and Canada. An outstanding academic record and a thorough knowledge of German are the major criteria for selection. Information and applications are available from Vice-Dean John M. Maki, College of Arts and Sciences, South College, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Study of Draft Law Published by Yale

One of the best explanations of the Selective Service System and how a registrant should proceed through it was published recently.

Entitled THE DRAFT LAW, a 'College Outline' for the Selective Service Act and Regulations, published by Yale University, written by John Griffiths, Assistant Professor of Law, Yale University Law School, this 72 page pamphlet takes the layman through the maze of Selective Service law in a highly effective way. It is not a substitute for a good lawyer, but it is extremely helpful. It was described in THE NEW YORK TIMES, Sunday, December 8, 1968.

The writer of this article has read most similar literature written since the draft law was passed in 1940 and recommends that this piece be given widest possible publicity and sales. Just having it may keep many a young man from making fateful mistakes.

University Press Designer Richard Hendel Earns Two New England Book Show Awards

Richard Hendel of the University of Massachusetts Press is a designe r who believes that how a book looks is as important as what a book says. Hendel had his work recognized at the New England Book Show in Boston where two publications of the University Press, "Native and Naturalized Plants of Nantucket" and "Figures of Dead Men by Leonard Baskin," were selected for awards on the basis of design and production quality.

Richard Hendel, University Press designer, oversees the total design and appearance of all books published.

"Figures of Dead Men" was selected for award in the general trade category. The judges commented that the book accurately reflected the theme of death Baskin was trying to convey in his originals.

"Plants of Nantucket" was the first and unanimous choice of the judges for the category othe r than normal trade or text books, because they felt that for a catalogue especially, the format and typography were effective.

Richard Hendel is concerned with total design and appearance. Since it is possible to print an attractive book for the same amount of money as an ugly one, Hendel spends a great amount of time making type face and material selection.

Currently design consultant for the Massachusetts Review, Mr. Hendel will teach a course in book design at Smith College next year. A resident of Belchertown, he has a print shop at his home where he can experiment with typographical problems and techniques.

Students Value Participation in Society According to New "Careers Today" Poll

"Students toda y want and expect to make a lot of money, but they seem equally determined that they do not want the almighty buck at any cost. Actually, 85 per cent of today's college seniors automatically assume they will enjoy a good income."

This is one facet of the first part of the CRM Poll findings, co-authored by sociologists Jeffrey K. Hadden and Victor Thiessen, appearing in the February issue now on the stands and in the hands of subscribers of "Careers Today," the new magazine published in Del Mar, California.

"The fast-paced article reveals that students are more concerned about finding a job where 'they will do things that matter,' " editor T. George Harris says. "An overwhelming majority of the men now completing their undergraduate years place their lifepriority more on the quality and worth of their participation in society's work and above the amount of their potential pay-checks!"

These are a few of the many facts revealed in the CRM Poll contained in the new issue of "Careers Today". Other hard-hitting articles keyed to the younger, "aware" generation deal with the "daring young money managers in wide ties who are taking over Wall Street"; "Black-White teams creating 'Zebra Capital' " which can transform ghettos into livable communities, and a visit to the Corporate Kindergartens of America.

"Careers Today", a young monthly directed at college students and recent graduates is published by Communications/Research/Machines, Inc., with headquarters in Del Mar, California.

According to 27-year old Nicolas Charney, publisher, the new magazine "is an upside-down 'Fortune' for newcomers rather than board chairmen. The two paramount concerns for young people are sex and work. Playboy seems to have cornered the sex market. Our new magazine, 'Careers Today', will cover the kaleidescopic world of careers, some of which verge on the realm of impossibility!"

What We Must Work For Now

In prior comments made by newly elected editors-in-chief, promises of modification, vast expansion and a complete rebuilding of the staff were made. At this date, however, I don't believe any of these changes are needed. Of course we shall always strive for improvement, and in the next year we shall focus primarily on continued improvement in the actual product and in better dissemination of the product.

Our first priority will be to build a business staff suited for a business. A ten per cent commission for those people getting ads will be essential if we are to continue to strive to reduce the amount of money allocated to us from the student activites tax. I hope to form a working relationship between the Daily Collegian business staff and the marketing club.

Secondly we must work for a consistent editorial policy which is formulated by all of the editors, in contrast to the past when editorials were solely the responsibility of one individual; for this is the personality of the paper and for a paper to be responsible it needs a personality.

Concerning this new policy I found two very interesting quotations in former Student Senator Pat Petow's 1967 incentive survey. The first one is: "The primary function of the college newspaper is to give the students a sense of awareness as to what and who are affecting their situation." This cannot be done solely in the news pages. It must be supplemented by opinion on the editorial page. Those words, by the way, were spoken by Dick Wood, president of the Class of '68.

Another interesting quote which I found was that of a faculty member, H. B. Kirshen. He said that the purpose of the Collegian is to "report the news and views as accurately and objectively as possible; to take stands on issues remembering that the Lord has not delegated all truth or brains to the Collegian staff."

Every member of this staff should be very proud that he is a member of the staff. The one voice of the students which is essential to the campus is the Daily Collegian. As Dean Field said at our fall recruiting session, "the campus just couldn't function without the Collegian."

Proud we should be, but not so proud as to ignore constructive criticism, and by constructive criticism I don't mean unsigned threats sent under the door, anonymous telephone calls or student senators threatening budget cuts.

In conclusion I promise to continue the work of Chet Weinerman and Jack Dean in making New England's largest college daily, New England's BEST college daily.

Well Done

To the editor

I work in the SWsection of campus. On Monday, after a one and a half hour drive, to come 18 miles into work, I arrived to find that most of my fellow workers were unable to make it. My first thought was, "Boy, this is going to be one heck of a day!"

I went upstairs to start my day's work, and found not only my manager, dietition, and the Common's secretary serving on the lines, but also, right along beside them were the "student workers" who really pitched in and saved the day. Without these people we (the Commn'n's Employees) would not have been able to operate.

I have read articles in the papers commending the Commn's Employees for the great job that they are doing, now the Commn's Employees want to take this time to thank the "student workers" for the really wonderful job that they have done to make our job a lot easier.

These are the people that are behind the picture and very little is said about the really great job they have done and I'm sure will continue to do.

These are the people who help to get the meals out, or keep the dishes done, or help to keep the Commons clean. Without them all would be lost at times like this!

I not only speak for myself, but for all the Food Service Employees when I say, "A job well done," and our sincere heartfelt "thanks."

Inside Report

Racism In Labor

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - a revealing clue to why a labor leader so well regarded as I. W. Abel faces any challenge at all for reelection as president of the United Steelworkers Union (USW) tomorrow (Tuesday) can be found in the tempestuous mail he received last year.

Steel workers are not prolific letter writers. But they kept Abel's mailbox filled last year with abusive - often obscenely abusive - letters protesting his support of Negro political candidates and his condemnation of white racism as a member of the Kerner Commission on Urban Riots. A favorite form of correspondence was to mail Abel clippings from "Steel Labor" (the official USW publication filled with praise for such extracurricular activities) after scrawling outraged comments in the margin.

The same Negrophobia responsible for this poison-pen activity explains the alarm that seized the USW hierarchy when a little-known union functionary challenged Abel for the presidency with indications of a close race. Since then, only prodigious efforts by the Steelworker establishment has insured a comfortable margin for Abel.

But quite apart from the size of Abel's victory tomorrow, this much is clear: rank-and-file union members are showing deep resentment of what they consider pro-Negro policies of their leadership.

Racial feeling is not the only and probably not the most important factor behind the campaign against Abel by Emil E. Narick, an assistant general counsel for the USW when he announced his candidacy last September (since demoted to the union's research department). The fact that Narick, unknown to USW rank-and-filers, could frighten Abel, considered by many as heir-apparent to AFL-CIO president George Meany, cannot be explained only in racial terms.

Narick has benefited in part by the alienation between membership and leadership throughout the labor movement (which, ironically, benefited Abel when he unseated David McDonald as USW president in 1965). Specifically, Narick has capitalized on down-to-earth complaints against the Abel leadership over such issues as letting management schedule vacations in winter.

Beyond this, Abel has suffered from what one labor intellectual calls the "philistinism" of rank-and-filers who resent Abel's taking time off to serve President Johnson as an ambassador to the United Nations or as a member of the Kerner Commission.

It is only a short hop from philistinism to racialism. Irritation with time spent by Abel on the Kerner Commission is aggravated by the commission's leniency toward black rioting. Furthermore, USW members in Gary and Cleveland still resent Abel's 1967 trips to those cities in behalf of successful Negro candidates for mayor.

While not inciting racial feeling either directly or through code-words, Narick's campaign literature nevertheless craftily recalls the Kerner Commission and Abel's Gary-Cleveland trips by pledging: "Mr. Emil Narick will be a FULL TIME president and will not become involved or preoccupied with assignments or projects that are not related to the best interest of the total membership."

Moreover, Narick's vote is expected to run highest where resentment over Abel's civil rights activity is most intense - particularly in Alabama's Bessemer mills.

With cool heads calculating last Christmas that Narick could roll up 45 per cent of the vote, the USW machinery hurriedly organized a detailed campaign that should limit Narick to 30 per cent at most and perhaps down to 10 per cent. For instance, although Abel won only 9 per cent of the election committee's vote in Local 2227, Braddock, Pa., last Nov. 26, he now is expected to carry that local.

But inbreaking down Narick support, USW leaders skirted the racial issue rather than meeting it head-on - just as they did in diverting Steelworker support from George Wallace to Hubert Humphrey. Instead of defending Abel's civil rights record, they stressed his fattening of paychecks without a strike.

Indeed, some USW functionaries - such as Orval Kincaid, anti-Negro sub-district director for Gary - have supported Abel against Narick despite vehement disapproval of Abel's racial liberalism. Even more liberal USW chieftains prudently advise that "Steel Labor" should play down Abel's civil right activities.

The question thus remains whether a labor leader strongly for civil rights can withstand the future challenge from a formidable adversary support not only by rank-and-filers but by the Orval Kincaids.

"Welcome Dow Confrontatation" To Be Held Today in S.U.

Students sit in last February in S.U. lobby.

By NEAL NOVACK

The newly formed Ad Hoc Committee on Dow Chemical Co. will hold its second annual "Welcome Dow Confrontation" today at 11:30 in the S.U. lobby. After assembling, the demonstrators plan to march from the Union to Whitmore Administration Building.

Pre-demonstration programming has included a restatement made yesterday morning on one-sheet handouts demanding "that BEFORE Dow Chemical be allowed to recruit on campus (Feb. 13, 14), a public forum be held in which the recruiter, a representative of the administration, and a member of the committee would participate."

In addition to this demand, the Ad Hoc Committee has asked University students to demonstrate against the presence of the Dow recruiter on campus, in particular, and military-industrial recruitment, in general.

Dow's response to sentiments of the Ad Hoc Committee has been, if not noncommittal, at least undefined - the Ad Hoc Committee asserting that "the recruiter himself was unwilling or not allowed to engage in public debate."

Although contrary to sentiments befitting the occasion, Valentine's Day - 1968 was a day which witnessed the formation of the Ad Hoc Committee on Dow Chemical Co. and a new idea of dissent on campus. Two days later, Feb. 16, this new idea on dissent manifested itself in an 80-student sit-in at the S.U. lobby. This dissent overshadowed the Ad Hoc Committee's original concern and led to a confrontation at the Cage, where some 3000 students presented complaints ranging from the war in Vietnam to UMass open house policy and core curriculum requirements.

The Ad-Hoc Committee to protest Dow, formerly the Ad-Hoc Committee for an open forum, strongly urges that the demonstration today, Feb. 13, be kept at a non-violent level. It is to be strongly emphasized that individual acts of terrorism or disruption only serve to harm the movement.

People interested in serving as monitors for the demonstration should meet by the Ad-Hoc Committee table in the Student Union lobby at 11:00 a.m. one half hour before the demonstration begins.

Excerpt from Student Handbook Concerning Picketing on Campus

(Editor's note: Dr. Noffsinger has requested the the DAILY COLLEGIAN publish the following excerpt from the STUDENT HANDBOOK concerning picketing on campus.)

Picketing and Other Forms of Demonstrations

The University community must provide, promote, and protect an environment for the free exchange of ideas and without regard to whether this communication is effected through a formal class, a meeting, a public address or private conversation, or by some form of demonstration. The campus must be "open" to all forms of intellectual persuasion. In a community dedicated to such intellectual dialogue, all members of that community must be free from any obstruction of coercion that may jeopardize the effectiveness of the discourse. Lest restraint of right and privilege be exercised on this campus, and to the end that all dialogue be conducted with dignity and courtesy, the following guidelines for all members of this community are established.

1. Demonstrators must confine their activities to the outside of all University buildings and by such activities not block free entry to or exit from such buildings, not interfere with the free movement of any person on University grounds, nor interfere with the normal conduct of University affairs.

2. Counter-demonstrators must observe the same standards as set forth above and interference with demonstrating by other than duly constituted authorities is prohibited.

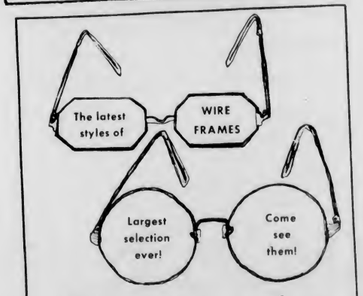
3. It must be recognized by all that the ultimate consequences of any violation of the standards as set forth above cannot be foreseen; that the penalty for such violation may be separation from the University or such lesser sanctions as may be judged appropriate, with the determination of guilt and penalty to be by due process. However, separation from the University shall not be the penalty for a first offense in a case where there has been compliance with the requests referred to in 4A, and where the violation has not involved significant personal abuse or property damage.

4. The procedures to be followed by the President of the University or his designated representative in the event of violation of the standards set forth above are:

A. A verbal attempt will be made to persuade demonstrators to desist from all practices in violation of these standards.

B. Upon failure of the demonstrators to respond in accordance with these standards they will be warned of the consequences and given a reasonable period to desist.

C. After expiration of the reasonable period of time, the names of those in violation will be requested. If those requested to give names refuse to do so, such names may be obtained by any means short of force. Such means shall include repeated demands, photographing, or any other procedure reasonably designed to elicit such information. Any photographs and negatives used for identification of a student shall become exclusive property of the appropriate judicial bodies, not to be distributed, and shall then be destroyed upon final settlement of the case.



D. If persuasion and warning fail, the University Police may be employed to put an end to the violations.

E. If the University Police are unable to cope successfully with the infractions, then the appropriate authorities may request outside assistance.

Hillel to Sponsor Folk-Rock Service

What can a folk-rock band called "Things that go bump in the Night" have to do with religion?

The connections, in the minds of area college students, will be sought in an event open to them and the public at Smith College. The Amherst College band will be part of a Folk-Rock Sabbath Service to be held at 7:30 p.m. Friday (Feb. 14).

Jewish students, as B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation members at the two campuses, are sponsoring the service. It will be held in Smith's Helen Hills Hills Chapel.

"Judaism Goes to College" will be discussed as a topic by invited area student groups. The Smith choir will perform as part of the service. It is an Hillel effort to find additional forms of religious expression to add new meaning to traditional liturgy.

The service, "Edge of Freedom," was written by Raymond Smolover, a young composer of religious music. The five-member band takes its name from an anonymous Scottish prayer intoned to ward off evil: "From ghoulies and ghosties And long-legged beasties and things that go bump in the night, Good Lord, deliver us."

Soloists for the service will be: Margaret Webb, Whitney Bath, Kendall Stearns, and Elizabeth Whitlock, all of the class of 1970.

Nestle's Destroys Contaminated Product

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP)-The Nestle Co. recalled about 28,000 cases of its Butterscotch Morsels, a confectionery product, after the company learned some of it was contaminated, a company spokesman said Wednesday.

"We believe there are no contaminated products in the consumers' hands," the spokesman added.

He said 90 per cent of the contaminated cases were in company warehouses when Nestles' quality control division discovered the contamination at the end of January.

Some 1,000 cases could not be identified, and as a result, the spokesman said, Nestle destroyed another 5,000 cases in an attempt to make certain the missing 1,000 also were destroyed.

Governor Calls Up National Guard at U of Wisconsin As Rejected Black Students Demands Spark Protest

(CPS) TELEX - The National Guard was called up Wednesday to maintain order on the University of Wisconsin campus as student protests, and conservative re - action, intensified.

City officials reportedly asked Wisconsin Governor Warren Knowles to put the Guard on alert after Madison police said they could no longer handle the situation. Gov. Knowles said he is determined to keep the campus open.

Major violence was averted Wednesday afternoon as protesters blocking entrances to major classroom buildings allowed students to pass. Several fistfights broke out between demonstrators and counter-demonstrators, but riot equipped police prevented full-scale trouble.

The dissidents' non-violent protest began Friday after the school administration rejected 13 demands of black students. The class boycott and rallies have not drawn widespread support. Some members of " the movement" (protesters' alliance) think more militant action might work better.

University officials claim they have done all they can in the area of race relations, considering financial troubles and pressure from a conservative legislature.

Counter-protesters at Windsor University in Ontario, Canada may precipitate violence in their efforts to evict some 150 students occupying theology offices.

About 60 conservative students tried unsuccessfully to storm the occupied building Tuesday night, and planned to return.

A school official said the university will not be "blackmailed" into rehiring a fired professor, which is one of the student demands. Also at issue is amnesty, open committee meetings, and student representation in hiring-firing deliberations.

Student leaders Wednesday reaffirmed their pledge to call a general strike if the university administration continues to refuse to negotiate.

"Turn On" Is Turned Off

A question frequently asked about shows like "The Smothers Brothers' and "Laugh-In' is just how far can television go with sex humor.

This week an answer of sorts was provided.

ABC's "Turn On" - amid charges that it was "dirty" and "vulgar" - was canceled after its premier performance on Feb. 5.

Did "Turn On" step over the thin line between humor and bad taste?

George Schlatter, executive producer of Rowan and Martin's "Laugh-In" and "Turn On," says, "Turn On' was adult, sophisticated, loaded with double entendres. But dirty? No."

Perhaps "Turn On's" sin wasn't that it was so dirty - just that it wasn't very funny.

In one vignette a girl pulled frantically on the lever of a pill-vending machine. A sign on the machine said it was "the pill." In another quick vignette called the "Body Politic," the show indulged in a double-meaning many viewers thought questionable.

Schlatter, reached in Burbank, Calif., by telephone during a taping of "Laugh-In," said, "I think that humor and satire can be as healthy as some documentaries, I've seen. You can have a contemporary outlook on contemporary subjects. The way young people react to the pill shouldn't be just confined to the area of statistics."

Asked why "Turn On" didn't succeed, Schlatter said, "This kind of show - it's a startling change - is bound to ruffle a few feathers. 'Turn On' was no more outrageous or in bad taste than anything that's ever been on 'Laugh-In' or Dean Martin. It was the form that was distracting.

"The people were new, it had a new look, new sound. It was offbeat. All that contributed to a sense of uneasiness and disorientation. They didn't know that it was provocation, so they said, aha, bad taste."

American Friends Report Finds Anti-Communism a Peril to U.S.

Fundamental American traditions and freedoms are being corroded, political values and policy responses are being profoundly changed by the phenomenon of anti-Communism in the United States today, according to a report prepared for the American Friends Service Committee.

The book, ANATOMY OF ANTI-COMMUNISM, A Report Prepared for the Peace Education Division of the American Friends Service Committee, will be published by Hill & Wang on March 6.

Since anti-Communism has been a basic part of the American way of life for over 50 years - an almost unconscious state of mind - its correctness is generally accepted without question. Yet, anti-Communism, the authors of the Report show, has not stopped Communism nor has it advanced human liberty at home or abroad. In fact, blind, fanatical, anti-Communism from its inception, analyzes its sources, content, and role in American life. It reports its consequences in American domestic affairs and foreign policy and concludes with suggestions for reform and alternatives to a situation which, the authors warn, is extremely dangerous with time running out on both sides. For attitudes, if they are not changed on moral and religious grounds, must be changed for strategic and practical purposes, the authors of the Report insist. To continue our present course is to exacerbate international tensions and imperil our own existence along with that of the Communists.

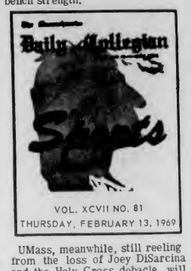
Reeling Redman Quintet Brace For the Iona Gaels' Invasion

BY MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

Iona College, a little known school with a good basketball heritage, sends its hoop squad up to Amherst tonight for an 8 p.m. clash with Jack Leaman's 11-6 Redmen.



The Gaels from New Rochelle, N.Y., are having an up and down season but sport a decent 9-6 mark. Iona plays in the tough Metropolitan Conference which includes such classy fives as St. Peters, L.I.U., Manhattan, N.Y.U., Seton Hall and Fairfield.

Bob MacMahon, a 6' senior guard, has been the Gaels most consistent performer thus far this season. Mac quarterbacks the Iona offense and still finds time to average close to 20 point s per game on a good outside jump shot.

Bob Spivey, a 6'1 transfer from Ranger Junior College, joins MacMahon in the backcourt. His excellent play has been primarily responsible for the Gaels three-game winning streak coming into this contest.

Joe Marzzella, a freshman phenomenon a year ago, Tony Morgan and John Casey, a diminutive 5'7 guard who scored the winning hoop in the Maroon and Gold's 63-62 upset of LIU, give veteran Coach Jim McDermott plenty of bench strength.

UMass, meanwhile, still reeling from the loss of Joey DiSarcina and the Holy Cross debacle, will try to get back on the victory trail against the sturdy invaders.

Leaman could call on either Billy Greeley, Dick Starsiak or Bob Dempsey to fill the backcourt vacancy. Each played adequately in the Holy Cross game. The rest of the starting line up will be the same with Pete Gayeska, Ken Mathias and Dennis Chapman up front and leading scorer Ray Ellerbrook at a guard position.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Iona's most famous graduate is perhaps Ritchie Guerin, the former NBA All-Star with the Knicks and presently coach of the Atlanta Hawks . . . The Gaels own a big win this season over powerful Jacksonville . . . Last Monday night the Iona-Bridgeport game was postponed due to the blizzard . . . In fact, the New Rochelle campus was so crippled by the snow that classes were cancelled Monday and Tuesday . . .

Starsiak played against Holy Cross despite a five stitch gashon his right arm as the result of a "Dave Newmark move" when he put his hand through a window in the Cage after Sunday's practice . . .

Coach Jack Donahue of the Holy Cross Crusaders called his team effort against the Redmen "our best of the season" . . . Holy Cross is 9-0 at the Worcester Auditorium this season . . . The Crusaders entertain St. Johns and Boston College there in the coming weeks . . .

Little Cagers Host Westfield JV's

It's been quite a year for UMass freshman basketball coach and his unbeaten Little Redmen. The frosh, going into tonight's 6:30 Cage contest with Westfield State Junior Varsity have won 10 straight including wins over Boston College and Holy Cross.

Last night's Crusader conquest was the first UMass freshman hoop win over their Worcester rivals, since 1953. It caused Broaca to jokingly comment, "I've beaten B.C. and Holy Cross for the first time. Maybe I should retire now."

All joking aside, Broaca was pleased with win. He saw the key as being the second half performance of Bill Kesgen, who scored 14 points in the final 20 minutes to squelch a determined Cross upset bid.

The coach said, "Billy did a lot for us Tuesday night, and picked up the whole team. It was his best effort.' Broaca will start Kesgen at center tonight.

Kesgen will be the third player to start at the fifth spot with Julius Erving, John Bettancourt, Rich Vogeley and Mike Pagliara. In previous games, Chris Coffin and Tom Austin have also started. Broaca said concerning this fifth spot, "We have been lucky at that fifth spot, in that someone keeps coming with his best performance to lift the whole team."

In Westfield St. the Little Redmen will be playing someone who they have beaten decisively once already this season. Westfield does not have any height to speak of or apparent talent and it is from all appearances an easy evening for UMass. PFP

Skiers Move Up From Sixth to Second In Mittersill Ski Area Slalom Event

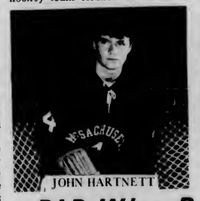
Redman skiers managed to better their performance of a year ago in the slalom by nailing down the number two spot at the Mittersill Ski Area Saturday. They placed sixth in this event two weeks ago at Middlebury. The giant slalom was another matter. After dominating this season's earlier G.S., the team fell behind Amherst, Boston College, Tufts, Northeastern and Bentley in Sunday's race.

The slalom course was set on a steep pitch and the loose snow cover rapidly deteriorated to blue ice after the first few races. More than seventy five per cent of the skiers wiped out or had some difficulty on the first course, but the second course was less demanding.

Dick McHugh and Chuck Walker managed to handle both courses without trouble to set up the runner-up honors for UMass. McHugh finished seventh overall and Walker, who started much later in the running order managed to place 17th. Dave Kamilla and Jim Garstang completed the team effort for the Redman.

In the giant slaloms, Co-captains Kamilla and McHugh posted respectable times, but the inconsistancy which has plagued the skiers caught up with the rest of the team. Garstang and Walker were not able to complete the course after falls and the burden fell on sophomores Ted Martin and Jerry Curran. Both experienced difficulties on the long course and turned in times which were off the pace.

Chuck Walker who skied well in the slalom was turning in a strong run in the G.S. when he hit an ice patch and lost control. Walker fell with such force that, in addition to losing both skis, he tore the top off his new Lange plastic boots. With a new pair of boots and longer skis for the downhill, Walker and UMass hope to get back into winning form this coming weekend.



UMass Ski Co-captain Dick McHugh.

State Police Breakup Whitmore Sit-in; Carry off 34

12-Hour Dow Confrontation Ends; Demonstrators Face Court Today

By RON LaBRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Approximately 50 riot equipped State Police entered Whitmore Administration Building at 11:35 Thursday night and arrested 34 persons, 32 of them students, who had been part of a 12 hour long protest sit-in against University open recruitment policy.

The police acted on instructions from University President John W. Lederle who later stated "We were left no choice but to enforce the University's regulations". The demonstrators had been warned several times throughout the day and evening that they were in direct violation of the University picketing code as set by the Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on Picketing.

The demonstration began at 11:30 a.m. Thursday when approximately 75 students marched from the Student Union to Whitmore. Calling themselves the Committee to End Military Industrial Recruitment, formerly Committee for an open forum with Dow, they demanded "an end to the University's complicity in the immoral and politically disastrous activities of the government of the United States of America."

The protest against all recruiting began Monday when the Committee brought a demand to Dean Field asking that a public debate with the Dow Chemical recruiter be held before he met with interviewees. One member of the committee stated the debate would enable those being interviewed "to understand what kind of company they would be working for."

Dean Field contacted the Dow Company with the request but no statement was returned by the company. Postponed for one day, the Dow recruiter began interviews Thursday.

The group divided upon entering the building with approximately 35 positioning themselves outside the Dow recruitment office on the first floor of the Administration building. A small group had already begun "sitting in" in the placement office on the second floor.

During the afternoon, emphasis shifted from the Dow recruitment office to the Placement office where a demonstrator said "the focus of our being here is to stop all University recruiting."

Dean Field spoke to the group in the Placement office at 1 p.m. He distributed copies of the Faculty Senate Picketing Code. He warned the group that they "were in technical violation of the code."

Following this statement those of the Committee who had "committed themselves" prepared for "a long wait". A group had stated they would "sit in" until arrested. One member gave instructions on procedure for being arrested. He warned the group not to resist but to "go limp" when picked up by the police.

Throughout the afternoon the group prepared for the evening vigil. A large supply of food was purchased and instructions on courses of action when the police came were given at periodic intervals.

The University administration took no further action until shortly before 5 p.m., the official closing time of Whitmore.

Dean Field told the group "It is my attempt to dissuade you from remaining. This was not the appropriate way to bring about a change" he told the demonstrators. "I must warn you of the consequences".

He told the group that at 5 p.m. they would be "in violation of the building security. Individuals will be subject to action of some sort" he said. In accordance with the University Picketing Code, Dean Field gave the group " a reasonable amount of time to disperse", and said they would have 15 or 20 minutes to disperse.

At 6:30 Dean Field returned once again to the group which was still refusing to leave. "The President has sought the assistance of the State Police to ensure security of the building" he said. Field told the group that the police would arrive in approximately an hour and a half.

Dean Field assured the group that the police had been informed that the demonstrators were not hostile or destructive. "I plead with you not to do anything that can be misinterpreted" he said.

In response to questions from the group, Dean Field said that "This demand of yours cannot be met". He said that it did not express the feeling of the "vast majority" of the students. He explained that Wednesday evening the Student Senate had voted the approval of the University policy of open recruitment.

Delay in the arrival of the police continued for the next several hours. At 11 p.m. the group moved to the main lobby of Whitmore. At 11:30 p.m. Associate Dean of Students Mark Noffsinger entered the lobby to announce that the police were on campus and preparing to enter the building. He asked that all staff present leave the room.

Several minutes later the state police , in full riot equipment entered the lobby and carried the students out in a swift operation. Each student was carried by two policemen. In response to a manner which some present believe to be overly forceful, several authorized spectators and demonstrators shouted at police to "take it easy, take it easy, they want to go". A State Police officer supervised the operation with the same warning to "take it easy".

The 34 arrested were quickly placed on busses outside of Whitmore and brought to the Hampshire County Jail where they were booked on charges of trespassing. All were released on their personal recognizance and will appear in Hampshire County District Court this morning.

Approximately 150 students had been waiting outside of Whitmore and cheered those arrested as the busses drove away. The Police were heavily jeered by this group.

Following the arrests, President Lederle issued the following statement:

"I have deep affection for all our students. It is a matter of great sorrow that I have had to ask the State Police to arrest a small group of students who have rejected the duly adopted code of this academic community.

"As recently as last evening the Student Senate reaffirmed the University's policy of open recruiting regardless of a com - pany's product.

"An open campus has always been the rule at the University of Massachusetts, and this rule has been endorsed by the student and faculty senators and approved by the Board of Trustees.

"I am always willing and anxious to discuss issues of policy with students. However the demand of this group today offered no opportunity for discussion. They indicated that their demand was not negotiable, and rejected out of hand the policy adopted by a majority of faculty and students.

"By sitting in the administration building in order to enforce this demand, they repudiated the normal channels for change in this institution. We were left no choice but to enforce the University's regulations."

Among those arrested was Gil Salk, Interim Executive Secretary of the Martin Luther King Social Action Council who joined the group in late afternoon. He said he joined the demonstrators "because I heard the University was calling in State Police over whom they have no control if anything gets out of hand". He said the proper order of administrative action according to the picketing code was not followed as the campus police were not called upon to attempt to remove the demonstrators.

STATE POLICE marched into Whitmore at near midnight and dragged the sit-in demonstrators out of the building, into a bus, and off to Northampton. (MDC photo by Dickinson)

Most all of the demonstrators put up no resistance when the Police entered Whitmore. The State Police, as a result, were not as harsh in escorting the protestors after it was apparent no major conflict was to develop.

THE DEMONSTRATORS marched from the student Union to Whitmore at 11:30 yesterday, and formed their sit-in in the hall way just outside of the Placement Office in Whitmore.

Stop reading

The Way They Did 100 Years Ago

100 years ago, people read the way you're reading right now.

Word by word. About 300 or so words a minute.

And 100 years ago, that kind of reading didn't cause any problems. You could keep up with what was happening pretty well.

But today, our knowledge is exploding so fast that people who want to keep ahead are actually falling behind. There's simply too much to read. Too much homework. Too many books. Too many reports and memos.

What's the solution? Learn how to read faster and better.

You can do it, too. So far over 100,000 other people have done it. People with different jobs, different educations. Students, businessmen, housewives.

These people have all taken a course developed by Evelyn Wood, a prominent educator. And all of them have at least tripled their reading speed with equal or better comprehension. Most have increased it even more. Some have increased it 10, even 20 times.

Think for a moment what that means.

All of them—even the slowest—can now read an average novel in less than two hours. They can read this ad in 15 seconds. They can read an entire issue of Time in 15 minutes.

They don't skip or skim either. They read every single word. Nor do they use machines. Instead, they let the material they're reading determine how fast they read.

And—mark this well—they actually understand more and enjoy more than when they read like you. That's right. They remember more. They enjoy more.

You can do the same thing—even if you're a relatively slow reader now. In fact, if you don't at least triple your reading ability, the course won't cost you a thing.

This is the same course President Kennedy had his Joint Chiefs of Staff take. The same one Senators and Congressmen have taken.

It's eight weeks long, 2½ hours a week, with classes held regularly in Boston and suburbs.

Shouldn't you find out more about it? You can, simply by coming to a free one-hour demonstration.

We'll show you a film. Explain the course more fully. Answer any questions you might have.

You'll be under no pressure to enroll. If you don't want to, fine. But do come. It could change your life.

For further information use the coupon below or phone KE 6-6380; In Providence, 272-4830.

A class will begin at Amherst College on February 19 or 20. Enrollment is limited. If interested, call Jim Elster (5-College rep.) at 253-9284, Sunday thru Thursday after 9:00 P.M.

Consultants to Examine UMass Security Plans for Reorganization to be Made

The University of Massachusetts has retained a special firm of consultants to examine the entire security system on its Amherst campus, it was announced today by Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson.

The firm of John W. Powell Consultants, Inc. of Hamden, Conn., will examine the entire security program including police duties, residence hall safety and security, and the organization and equipment of the University security forces.

President of the consulting firm is John W. Powell, who has had extensive experience in this field. A graduate of Dartmouth College, he was an FBI agent for 17 years, serving at one point as a Special Agent in the New Haven office. Prior to forming his own security consultant firm, he was Associate Dean of Students and Director of Security at Yale University.

Mr. Powell will be assisted by Edward C. Steele, the firm's chief consultant. A former Connecticut State Police officer, where he commanded the Hartford District, Mr. Steele later served as Mr. Powell's assistant at Yale.

Kenneth W. Johnson, University Treasurer, says "The University is a growing community of more than 20,000 students, faculty and staff working and living in 110 buildings. The responsibility for their safety is too important to be left to haphazard growth. We need solid plans.

"Our consultants will be talking with students, faculty, staff and administration before arriving at securing recommendations that will meet the needs of all of our people now and as we grow in the future."

Mr. Johnson said that the consultants are expected to have a report and recommendations ready for the administration and trustees before the end of this semester.

The Staging of A Tragedy is a Terrible Business

BY RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

About fifteen of us sat in the President's office to begin the appraisal of the situation. It was 5 p.m., and the first order had been given to clear the building for closing. Dean Field had read the passages of the picketing code, setting a time about some 20 minutes away as that "reasonable time" to follow the direction to leave the building. Very few had left, most indicating that they would stay for whatever was to come. We assembled upstairs to determine what that would be.

The picketing code itself was the general subject of the beginning of the discussion - its origin and history were found to be somewhat clouded - the applicability of some of its provisions to the present situation were uncertain. The feeling which ultimately prevailed was, however, that the building had to be cleared. This opinion was far from unanimous; and there still exists a strong and appreciable body of sentiment holding that this was the wrong decision to make. Time, I strongly suspect, will vindicate this opinion.

It was decided to call in the state police to remove the students - the campus police were not considered strong enough to deal with the situation. The later turn of events did not seem to support this. We begged the President to make the strongest impression he could that force was unnecessary and should be avoided. Once police are called, and have taken command of a situation, their control is beyond our hands, apparently. The students downstairs were peaceful - there was no damage to the offices or building, and from every indication there would be none. We counseled restraint and minimization of force, and were assured that this would, of course, be the order of business. So the state police were called.

We sat waiting. Before we were done, we had waited 6 hours for their arrival. The powers that be sent down for sandwiches and coffee; and in due time they arrived. We ate sitting in the outer foyer of the President's suite. The talk was of the students downstairs - what if they were right? The idea was unacceptable to a few; but some of us broached the partially-heretical notion anyway. As the evening set in, and then wore on, we wandered the halls of Whitmore, talking with students, listening to students, and wondering just what it was that was really happening to our campus. There they were downstairs - we could go down and talk to them, come back up and rehash our ideas - and the situation persisted. The police did not arrive.

They were expected by 6:30, then by 9:30, they by - well, we just weren't sure. Various groups formed for discussion, then broke up, to pursue their separate interests or aspects on the situation. We watched the 11 p.m. news in the Trustees Room - the first 5 minutes brought films and reports from six campuses, all having trouble that day. There were 900 National Guard troops with fixed bayonets in Wisconsin. It seemed to have something of a sobering influence on those of us there watching the color TV. It was real, all right, and it was about to happen on our campus.

Just what it was that did happen made a profound impact on those of us who were unfortunate enough to have to stand and see it. The few plainclothes advancemen came, finally, to survey the situation. Then, with surprising suddenness, they came around the corner and approached the group sitting just inside the north doors in that brick-paved entryway there. Blue-uniformed fullback giants in full battle dress - helmets, face shields, gas masks at their belts, clubs at the ready - they bore down at a rapid walk on the sitting group. With astonishing speed, two per student, they dragged everybody from the lobby. In just a minute it was over. The impression it made will live on forever with everybody who saw it. The sheer enormity and force of the situation overpowered everybody. There was no resistance.

About a hundred had gathered at the east entrance to the building - they watched in animated excitement as the students were loaded aboard buses for the short ride to Northampton. Then it was over, and we went home. But it was not over. It had only begun.

The University had failed. The students sitting in the lobby had failed, and the administration which ordered their arrest had failed. Brute power applied in a community which lives by the reasoned discussion, or which should, or which purports to, is not the way to do business. But two wrongs don't make a right; and the all too clear lessons to be learned from campus disturbances of the past few years were lost to our situation.

Where we will go from here is not clear; but the answer will come, as it will have to, in the next few days.

Dean Argues to Save MDC Campus Center Site

By DONNA WADSWORTH
Staff Reporter

At a meeting of the Student Union Governing Board last night, Daily Collegian Editor Emeritus Jack Dean voiced his disapproval over plans for the new Student Activites Center. According to the proposed lay-out, the offices of the Daily Collegian and other campus publications would remain in the present Student Union building under the guidance of a Publications Coordinator.

Dean asserted that SUG Board was not adhering to original contract plans of housing the MDC in the new section.

Susan Brady, chairman of the Board, defended the revised plans by stating that accomodations for the newspaper in the new Center would necessarily cut MDC space in half and that some large student organization would have to remain in the present site.

"It doesn't seem possible that we would have only half the space," Dean said. "Everyone having anything to do with publications calculated from the original plans that the present room would be doubled. It doesn't seem possible that we all could have figured wrong."

"As far as having all the publications together, it's not necessary," he continued. "Each is an individual entity, run separately with little interrelation. My main objection is that the original plans were revised without consulting or at least notifying the Daily Collegian. We are one of, if not THE, largest student organization on campus, and we heard of the change first as a rumor."

Biafrian Grad Student Tells of Country's Plight

Sam Ajiri, UMass graduate student, will tell the story of his country, Biafra, Monday afternoon at 3:30 in the Student Union Council Chambers.

Ajiri was born in Umu Ahai, the present provincial capital of the besieged state of Biafra. It is his home, and he will return there after he completes his graduate work in a field most vital to his country's survival, agricultural engineering.

He hasn't seen his family since the beginning of the war.

Ajiri was told in June 1967 that he could not return to his newly independent country for security reasons. He responded by turning to the most effective means he could find to help his country - Biafran Relief.

What does the relief effort mean to his country? "Nothing can really be accomplished until there is a cease fire," Ajiri explained, "but our people must be alive for that cease fire to mean anything when comes. Every dollar goes direct to my country. The money food, and builds hospitals and rehabilitation centers inside Biafra." Doctors all over the world are volunteering their help, Ajiri stated, and the money given them, "makes the difference between their being priceless and useless."

The Demonstration

The committee to end military industrial recruitment, a faction of the Ad Hock Committee for an Open Forum with Dow, began a sit-in at the Placement Office in Whitmore Hall which lasted almost 12 hours yesterday.

The statement of the committee was: we demand an end to the University's complicity in the immoral and politically disasterous activities of the government of the United States of America. We believe these acts arise from the decisive role the corporations play in formation of the ideology and policies of that government. We therefore demand an end to all military and industrial recruitment.
The University has a policy of open recruitment.

Dean of Students William F. Field followed the procedures listed in the Student Handbook in an attempt to persuade the demonstrators to leave the Placement Office. The demonstrators did not choose to leave, and the decision was made to call in the State Police to remove them.

As a result, approximately 30 demonstrators were removed by a contingent of State Troopers at 11:45 p.m. last night. They were taken by bus to Northampton District Court, booked and released on personal recognizance. They will appear in District Court at 9 a.m.
For the University, demonstrations are not new, however this is the first time outside help has been summoned to enforce a University policy.

The emotional impact of the day's events - the march, the sit-in, and the state police - all happening in such a short span of time makes it practically impossible for one to take all of this into consideration and to arrive at an accurate editorial evaluation of the situation.

Snowride

To the editor:

Lots of snow Monday morning! Radio! No mention of UMass. Guess I'll go. Half an hour shoveling out the driveway. Forty-five minutes to go 11 miles to school. Two hitch-hikers in the front seat with expressions of disbelief and horror. Saw two accidents and many abandoned cars. Fun and Games driving through places only one lane wide with snow blowing so thick that visibility is about 10 feet. Blow horn, flick lights, and proceed slowly.

Point of destination. F lot. Two or three feet of snow all around. Abandoned cars in the road. Only lot plowed is Whitmore. Cop not letting anybody in. Miss eight o'clock class. Drive around for half an hour. Park in unauthorized lot near the physical plant. Twenty minutes rushing to SBA 120.

Professor doesn't show up. Thoughts of education-learning that one doesn't go through immoderate distress to get to "stupid" classes in Business Law on Economics. Further ramifications of old-style alienation. Think they'd warn commuters not to come over if no parking places.

Think they'd plow out better places than animal barns. Wonder about those three plows I saw just sitting there. Drivers probably too smart to try coming over. Or maybe they couldn't park either. Stupid University! Stupid commuters, putting up with it. Stupid me, writing this stupid letter to the Collegian to vent my rage. Next time, if it ever comes, I'll stay home with my wife. Open the picture-window drapes and watch the snow.

GOP Patronage Blues

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - Sen. Hugh Scott, the assistant Republican leader in the Senate, has quietly advised the White House that the failure of the Nixon administration to bring a single Pennsylvania Republican into the new Administration could badly damage his reelection chances next year.

Scott's grievance, politely delivered to top White House lobbyist Bryce Harlow, is symptomatic, and not all the complaints are that polite.

The truth is that Republican politicians are beginning to wake up to the fact that, far from the top-to-bottom housecleaning promised by candidate Nixon, President Nixon has ordered department chiefs to go slow in weeding out Democratic holdovers and replacing them with Republican party faithful - an unprecedented reversal of custom.

Moreover, Republicans in Congress have also been bitterly complaining to the White House about the lack of political clearance procedures for Johnson administration holdovers. For example, Postmaster Gen. Wilton H. (Red) Blount decided to retain several Assistant Postmasters General. But their names were sent routinely to the Senate without the customary - and, to the Senate, mandatory - requests for approval from Republican Senators in their home states.

Republican Senators have now, belatedly, been assured that Johnson holdovers needing Senate confirmation will be put through the same clearance mill for new appointees.

Nevertheless, Sen. Karl Mundt of South Dakota was so aroused by the number of holdover appointments and the slipshod clearance methods that he privately warned the White House he will object to confirmation if the job is in any department under the jurisdiction of any of Mundt's Appropriations subcommittees. Mundt wants these jobs filled with Republicans.

Thus the Nixon administration, which has made a smooth start in most other areas, is running badly afoul of its own party over jobs and patronage. Some such trouble is inevitable in any new Administration, but what sets the Nixon administration apart is the unprecedented decision not to clean house.

One week before the election, for example, a top Nixon political manager told us that a major housecleaning would get top priority if Mr. Nixon was elected. This housecleaning would descend to the second and third level of Federal bureaucrats - to the "memo-writers," as he put it, whose memoranda on new policy questions so often establish policy.

Precisely the opposite has occurred. In Atty. Gen. John Mitchell's huge Justice Department, for example, most first and second level assistants to the new Assistant Attorneys General are being retained. This means that scores of government lawyers hired by John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson are staying on.

Moreover, top-rank Justice Department job-holders - the directors of Prisons, Immigration, and Narcotics Enforcement - now are slated to stay, though none has civil service protection.

It was partly to complain about this lack of change that about half the Republican Senators attended a closed-door grievance session with Harlow on Feb. 5 - a meeting revealing the depth of party unhappiness over patronage policies.

The meeting was originally called at the request of administrative assistants to complain to Harlow that they couldn't get him on the telephone to discuss legislative problems. When Sen. Hiram Fong of Hawaii and other Senators heard Harlow had agreed to the session, they were boiling over because Mr. Nixon had just declared postal workers out of politics without first discussing it with Republican Senators. The meeting quickly changed from a routine session with administrative assistants to a major gripe session with the Senators themselves.

Out of it came clearance procedures for new Nixon appointments, as well as a pledge from Harlow that communications between Senators and major departments of government would improve. But there was no assurance from the highly-respected Harlow that more jobs would open up for Republicans.

To the contrary, Republican politicians are convinced that Mr. Nixon is so concerned about getting along with the Democrats, who still control Congress, that the promised bureaucratic housecleaning is indefinitely postponed.

That may help Mr. Nixon with the Democrats. But it is a far cry from the party-building operation Republicans were absolutely certain Mr. Nixon would put into sweeping effect if he ever entered the White House.

WMUA Airs Grievances of English Majors

Monday evening at nine, WMUA ushered in its FOCUS for this semester with a discussion of the alleged grievances of English majors. Moderator Ken Mozakowski treated an estimated three listeners to the results of a private survey taken by dissident members of EDUC.

What is EDUC? No one seems to know quite what the initials mean, but they imply a mammoth (40) committee of ungrammatical English majors. They carefully plotted their organizational meetings at class times, and their constitution is understood only by its creator (a certain Mr. Sanders is blamed). EDUC has already spawned subcommittees of subcommittees. So far it has borne out the Collegian's quiet grim forecast in October.

Mr. Mozakowski, a member of the House, objects to its general inadequacy. Obviously, EDUC is just too big. And so his splinter group started a questionnaire, the supposed equivalent of Action of this campus. Questionnaires make things ineffably clearer.

There are about 1300 ungrammatical English majors. Mr. Mozakowski found only 300 of them, mostly commuters. He asked his victims about grading, and class sizes and Garry Goodell, and asked them to evaluate one course they took last term, which is an invalid silly thing to do and Mr. Mozakowski apologizes.

He got more replies from juniors than from other classes. A lot of them want to be teachers. Apparently that's why they expressed their tacit approval of the department's distribution system, which everyone knows is geared for teachers of English. And overwhelmingly of straight red-coat English, not American English. Very few objected to distribution, a fact probably tied in with the stagnation of Creative Writing. The next creative person to come along will fabricate a new imaginitive rationale for the distribution. It probably won't be Dwight Allen or anyone who cares about the teaching of english.

Our purportedly radical splinter group showed its Fascist colors, too. The surveyors were shocked that the Ungrammaticals think Garry Goodell is adequate. Of course it is. Does an English major ever need the library (i.e. to take out books), before he writes his thesis?

Many of the Three Hundred indicated they would have faith in EDUC and support its many projected reforms. There will be an OPEN MEETING of EDUC on Thurs., 13 February in Room 301 Bartlett, at 7 p.m. Give them a break. Do you want your grandchildren to take English III?

Redmen Edge Iona, 71-64, With Clutch Foul Shots

Mathias Leads UMass Where Was the Crowd?

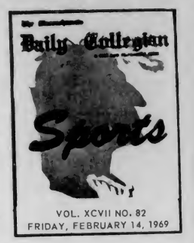
BY MIKE CURRAN
Senior Reporter

UMass, scoring its last 13 points from the free throw line, held off an Iona rally to down the Gaels, 71-66, before a slim turnout at the Cage. The Redmen's record now stands at 12-6, while the guests saw their seasonal mark fall to 9-7.

Ray Ellerbrook, making good on three one and one situations, was the clutchman for the home boys while Bob Dempsey with two successful bonus jobs and Jack Gallagher with one, also came through under pressure at the line in the waning moments of the contest.

The DiSarcina-less UMass attack was again in getting off the mark. Ken Mathias and Pete Gayeska scored all but two of the Redmen's first 15 points as they outmuscled the smaller invaders on the offensive boards. After ten minutes UMass was up only 15-13, however as Iona's sharpshooting Bob McMahon showed a good eye from the floor.

Dick Samuelson's rebounding hiked the Redman lead to 20-15, but the followups of Art Wiggins and Bill Spivey kept the UMass margin within five for the remainder of the half. The Gaels were only down 31-29 at intermission.



A goaltending call on a Tony Morgan jumpshot knotted the score at 31 all after the teams emerged from the locker room, but three on target jump shots by Bill Greeley, Dennis Chapman, and Ellerbrook got the home boys back into the lead quickly.

With Chapman and Gayeska controlling the boards the Redmen managed to hold off the Gaels until a Wiggans turnaround jumper narrowed the advantage to 44-42 at the eleven minute mark.

After free throws by Ellerbrook, Samuelson, and Mathias, and a drive by Chapman of a pretty Greeley feed, opened the lead once more, Iona went into a full court press. This maneuver resulted in some turnovers but more often a UMass player went to the line. In fact, the Redmen made 20 of their last 24 markers from the charity stripe.

Little John Carey and McMahon, showing some fancy outside shooting, struggled to get the Gaels back into the contest, but when they missed from the outside, either Chapman, Gayeska or Mathias was in position for the carom.

The last five minutes were dragged out by numerous Iona fouls which the Redmen successfully converted into points to account for the final 71-64 verdict.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - UMass outrebounded Iona 59-34. Gayeska led the parade with 18 followed by Chapman's 17 . . . The Redmen placed four starters in double figures . . . Mathias on seven from the floor and five from the line was high man with 18 points . . McMahon, the leading Gael scorer, led all players with 22 . . . UMass shot 43% from the field and 75% from the foul line, but 24 turnovers kept Iona in the game all the way . . The (11-0) UMass frosh won again easily, 101-46, with six men in double figures.

Icemen Win; Play Sat.

BY KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

STORRS - The UMass hockey team exploded for five goals in 4:43 of the third period to rout UConn, 7-1, Wednesday night at the Huskies home rink.

The Redmen completely dominated play for the first two periods but could only manage a 2-1 on goals by John Hartnett and Tom Babson. Both players scored again during the five goal barrage.

Hartnett's goal at 11:14 of the middle stanza proved to be the winner. He took a pass from defenseman Doug Powling in his own zone and made a rink length dash before beating UConn goalie John Santucci.

Babson scored his first goal in the first period on a fine individual effort taking the puck away from a Huskie defenseman behind the net and skated out front to dent the cords with a short shot.

In the third period, co-capt. Jeff Sanborn started the fireworks at 5:06 and was followed by goals by Hartnett, Joel Brebbia, Babson and co-capt. Jim O'Brien.

The Huskies scored their lone goal with only 49 seconds left in the second period. It was only their second shot on net in the period.

The only thing that kept UConn in the game for two periods was the fine play of Santucci in the nets and the blocking ability of the Huskie defenseman.

Santucci had 24 saves and the defenseman blocked at least ten more Redman shots. The Redmen forwards backchecked and forechecked well all night disorganizing the UConn team.

UMass has played well since the exam break and are now 7-10. Their next opponent will be once beaten Holy Cross at Orr Rink tomorrow afternoon at 4:30.

The Crusaders are 8-1-1 with their lone defeat a 7-2 loss to UConn.

UConn Next

UMass meets a UConn team Saturda y that is in the midst of a season that is one of the worst in the long proud Storrs basketball history. Gametime at the Cage is 7:30 with the frosh game starting at 5:30.

The Huskies lost two fine ballplayers to the academic route, they being Bob Boyd and Steve Koski. UConn, who is 4-14 after a big win over B.U. has a fine sophomore however in forward Ron Hrubala a 16 point scorer.

The frosh Huskies, who gave UMass their toughest game all season, before losing by only two are led by a fine shooter, Paul Zorsky and also Jim Jachym.

UMass can just about wrap the Yankee Conference title with a win. Rhode Island, the closest challenger, has two losses. The Redmen will be again without star guard Joe DiSarcina.

Mermen Score

The Varsity swimming team traveled to Worcester Tech Wednesday night and scored a resounding victory over the WPI swimmers. In winning the meet 58-36, the Redmen won ten of the eleven events, losing only the final relay. The medley relay was won by the team of McCarthy, Northrup, Donohue, and Jazab.

Miller won the two hundred yard free-style in 2:00.5 to make the score twelve to four. Co-captain Flip Morton won a close race in the sixty yard free-style, touching out George of WPI in the time of 29.3 seconds.

Bob Asquith, swimming well in the 160 yard individual medley, broke the pool record he set two years ago at WPI, winning in 1:42.5, with Al Northup third.

As the meet continued, Dick Donohue won the two hundred yard butterfly in the slow time of 2:26.4. UMass swept the hundred yard freestyle with Miller winning in the time of 52.3 and Morton second.

Pat McCathy, a sophomore, won the two hundred yard backstroke easily in a time of 2:28.1. Bob Asquith swam the five hundred yard freestyle for the first time this year, winning in the good time of 5:29.2, also a pool record, with Tom Beck a close third. Al Northrup won the two hundred yard breaststroke for UMass for the last five points.

The swimming team now has a 2-4 record, having won two of their last three meets. They meet Holy Cross at Boyden at 2 p.m. The team hopes for a large turnout.

Runners Meet Strong N.U.

UMass' track team, entering their second meet with an 0-1 record, meets Northeastern's undefeated squad which has already competed in seven or eight dual meets. The strong Huskies team, which recently placed second to Harvard in the Greater Boston Invitational, host the Redmen at Northeastern's Cabot Cage , on Saturday.

Ken O'Brien, the UMass coach, terms this NU team as the best "well balanced" team UMass will meet this season. "They are usually strong in the field events and middle distances, but this year they are strong in all events."

'Again the results of the meet will depend on how well we can exploit our strength and hold them down in their strengths. In the past we have been beaten badly in the field events but this year (Dave) Schlatka, (Bill) Wilen, and (Ed) Arcaro will pick up more points for us.' NU's top weight man is Andy Kenny who throws the shot around 58'. The Huskies have three pole vaulters who scale the 13' mark with Jeff Eaton being the top man in this event.

The UMass coach feels that the Redmen jumpers will have to open up a wide point spread against NU. In the high jump, three men who have leaped over 6'4 this year will battle each other. They are NU's Fred Scribner and Cal Carpenter and John Ariensen of UMass. Huskies captain Jay Jellson will broad jump against UMass' strong triple of Dave Canterbury, Dick Dyer, and Clarence Gaynor.

Coach O'Brien is hoping that his sprinters and hurdlers will also open up a wide point spread against the Huskies. The sprints will again be handled by Walter Mayo, Dave Marble and, running for the first time this season, soph Ed Heywood. Hurdling for the Redmen will be the strong duet of Jerry Spellman and Marc Lefever.

UMass runners will try to break even in the point column with Northeastern in the 600 and 1000. Bob Hasselbaum will man the shorter race against Mike Roberts. Diego Gonzalez and Bill Donaldson will battle Mike Scanlon and Larry Josephs in the 1000 yard run.

The Redmen also hope to break even or pull ahead in the distance events. Ron Wayne, Paul Hoss, Charlie Lang, and Leo Duart will try to outrun the Huskies distance men.

The only relay that will be run at the Northeastern meet will be the mile relay. Bob Hasselbaum, Steve Chase, Jerry Spellman, and Diego Gonzalez will man the relay for the Redmen in hopes of anchoring the team to victory.

Also entering their second meet will be the Little Redmen who will battle a very strong Huskies pups team. The depth of this NU team, one of the strongest frosh teams NU has had, should prove to be the difference in this meet. UMass' strong performers will be Al Mangan, the frosh record holder of the 600, in the 600 and 1000, miler and two miler Don Dunsky, high jumper Ed Shaunessy, and the frosh sprinters. JDF

Demonstrators Appear in Court, Ask University To Pay Fees

BY JAN CURLEY
ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITOR

Appearing before Judge Luke Ryan in Northampton District Court, the 33 demonstrators arrested late Thursday night when they were removed by State Police from the lobby of Whitmore Administration Building, pleaded not guilty to two charges of trespassing and disturbing an assembly.

The spectators and defendants were warned by the clerk that they "were not in a barroom or love in, but a court room" and told there was to be no smoking. Any ladies present in the court room who were not "properly attired" were requested to leave and three did so who were wearing slacks.

All of the cases have been continued to Wed., Feb. 26, at 9:30 a.m. The defendants were released on personal recognizance. One defendant was given a verbal warning by Jude Ryan to "watch his tone of voice" when pleading to the charges or another "outburst would bring a contempt of court fine."

According to Gil Salk, the group had no formal plans to talk with the Administration Friday, but a meeting of those who had been arrested was planned for 3 p.m. in the new part of the Hatch.

The meeting was shifted later in the day to the Ballroom and scheduled for 3:30 p.m. During the day five bomb scares were reported on campus. Whitmore and the Student Union were evacuated while a search was conducted by University Police and the Amherst Fire Dept. Bartlett Hall, the scene of the fifth call, was not evacuated while a search was conducted.

In the meeting in the Ballroom, Salk from the Martin Luther King Jr.

President Lederle's Statement Released On the Demonstration

(Editor's note: The following is the text of President Lederle's statement which was released to the press after the state police removed the 33 demonstrators from the foyer of Whitmore.)

"I have deep affection for all of our students. It is a matter of great sorrow that I have had to ask the State Police to arrest a small group of students who have rejected the duly adopted code of this academic community.

"As recently as last evening, the Student Senate reaffirmed the University's policy of open recruting regardless of a company's product.

"An open campus has always been the rule at the University of Massachusetts, and this rule has been endorsed by the student and faculty senates and approved by the Board of Trustees.

"I am always willing and anxious to discuss issues of policy with students. However, the demand of this group today offered no opportunity for discussion. They indicated that their demand was not negotiable and rejected out of hand the policy adopted by a majority of faculty and students.

"By sitting in the administration building in order to enforce this demand, they repudiated the normal channels for change in this institution. We were left no choice but to enforce the University's regulations."

Legislator To Seek Answer For Using State Troopers

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

The DAILY COLLEGIAN learned yesterday that Representative George Rogers (D-New Bedford) met with three representatives of the UMass student government to get some background information on the demonstration last Thursday. Representative Rogers stated he plans to call President Lederle some time today.

Rogers, who is chairman of the House Committee on Education, said the intent of the phone call is to seek an explanation from the President "why 88 state troopers had to remove 34 students."

Rogers met with Student Senate Vice President Rick Hartwell, Senator John DuBois and Richard Story, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee in Dartmouth for what he termed "one side of the story."

Rogers called President Lederle's decision an "unfortunate" one based on the know-

Mass Movement Is Possible on the UMass Campus

Demonstrator Tells Why He Protested

BY MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

"I am interested in forming a mass movement on campus...and know that we can have one on this campus." This was how one member of the 33 UMass demonstrators arrested Thursday night explained his personal "motivation in staging the sit in."

Appearing on "Of Cabbages and Kings", a weekly radio show on WFCR hosted by Tom Paine Saturday night, Sid Finehirsh said Dow was only a symbol. "It represents the military-industrial complex which is perverting American morality and running the corperate state of American imperialism. Our protest against Dow, at least for me, was a protest against the University which is an essential part of the military-industrial state, and against the country as a whole."

"I don't believe in confrontation for confrontation's sake, but only when I feel that confrontation can accomplish something," he declared, "I think what we did was to make a lot of people think". In supporting this statement, Finehirsh explained that he took "the crowd of about 300 in front of Whitmore cheering us on Thursday night as 300 people we have awakened.'

However, another panelist on the show, Paul Casey, disagreed. "Many of the people outside were just curious, many were waiting around after the basketball game, and some were waiting to see the cops bash somebody's head in."

There was the general consensus among panel members that "the committee on Dow can not claim those people as any victory."

In accomplishing its goal, Finehirsh said that the committee staging the Dow demonstration was not "media conscious", that it did not really care what the media reported. He said, "I've never read a newpaper report of something I witnessed that was accurate." He charged the press, in general, with "unbelievable bias in reporting protest demonstrations", and concluded that, with this bias existing, he "could care less what they print."

However, other members of the panel questioned whether the Committee on Dow could afford to be completely unconcerned with the media's treatment of protest demonstration."

Much of the discussion centered around "absolutes", the absolutes of morality, the absolutes of conviction. James Collins, assistant area-coordinator in the Northeast residential area and former president of the Student Senate concluded, "I agree with much of what you (Finehirsh) say, but I don't think that you can be so confident of your own moral position; there is just as much chance of you being wrong as of the people with whom you disagree being wrong."

To this Finehirsh replied, "I'll let history be the judge of who was right and wrong."

The Aftermath

The Student Senate's resolution concerning on-campus recruiting passed Wednesday on a roll call vote of 45-1-3, was another step to insure that our campus would continue to be an "open campus". The size of the vote reflects the view that by far the majority of students on this campus is "In favor of and supports on campus interviewing; and...is opposed to selective morality in deciding which groups are permitted access to campus and which are not."

Any student on this campus has the right to meet with any organization or group (with exception of the nationally recognized subversive groups) on this or any campus. Those students who on Thursday attempted to prohibit this interaction from taking place must be condemned for trying to abridge the rights of others.

However, those students who protested "legally" against Dow Chemical for the purpose of expressing their dissatisfaction with that company, or of military industrial recruiting in general, should be respected for demonstrating one of the most privilege rights of American students: that of expressing their dissent through legal demonstration. Demonstrations are a healthy sign in an academic community. Demonstrations should lead to questions and in turn the questions should generate a search for answers. And this search for answers is the raison d'etre for a university.

Up until 5 p.m. the group sitting-in, in Whitmore were flagrantly violating the University code on picketing and demonstrations written by a joint committee of students and faculty. The code in part reads: "Demonstrators must confine their activities to the outside of all University buildings..."

Administrators, led by Dean of Students William F. Field, apparently followed the set procedure, established by the Code, when the violation of the code occured.

The code also reads: "If persuasion and warning fail, the University Police MAY be employed to put an end to the violation. If the University Police are unable to cope successfully with the infractions, then the appropriate authorities may request outside assistance."

After 5 p.m., the official closing time of Whitmore, the students were not only still violating the University code, but were also violating the state law concerning trespassing. Even though it appeared the students had no malicious motives, the administration building had to be secured for the night. It should be noted that the computer equipment in Whitmore is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars and also the University payroll to be distributed Friday was in the building by Thursday night.

Unless something was done Thursday night it could have been too late Friday morning to reflect back.

The 34 persons who were "sitting-in" knew they were violating these laws. Several times during the afternoon, evening and night, they said they would go only when the police arrived. Administrators told them that state police would be called to remove them from the building. The demonstrators replied that this would be fine with them, probably theorizing they would get better publicity for their cause with state police arresting them rather than local police.

In all probability it was better to call the state police rather than campus or Amherst police. The local police departments are not large enough to handle a demonstration of such size. Also campus and Amherst police are not adequately trained in such matters. One can only speculate, but probably the chances of violences in Whitmore would have been enhanced by the use of the local police who might have pushed the panic button and resorted to brute force earlier than the better trained and more professional state police. Finally there is the obvious fact that tensions between campus police and students are already high.

However, the administration should not be praised for "bringing in the cops", even if the protesting students wanted the police. For when the police arrived, the administration, faculty, and students of this University failed in maintaining an environment of reason. In place of reason force prevailed.

We cannot answer the question whether or not the administration did all it could before the police moved in. Were all elements of reason tried? Maybe it would have done some good to have a faculty member, whom the protesting students respect (ie. Putnam Barber, Ryan Drum) talk to the students and attempt to reason with them. Perhaps the students were so adamant that this too would have failed. It should have been tried.

Also we must severly condemn those that are responsible for the five bomb scares on campus Friday. These "chicken-hearted" attempts to disrupt the process of reason must be ceased, and we hope those responsible for the threats are found and prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Finally, we must reject attempts to dismiss the incident as one which should be left for a student judiciary to decide.

The University is real life. This is not a place where one can escape the laws of this state and this country. When one breaks the laws of the state, anywhere in the state, then one must face the courts of the state. Trespassing is a state law, not under the jurisdiction of a campus judiciary.

We have all failed. But some good can come from this failure if we can question together the "whys" of the failure and go forward to seek the answers.

"They Asked For It and They Got It"

TO THE EDITOR:

About this time many of you may be agreeing with Pres. Lederle; ie: "They asked for it and they got it."

Yes, they got it, they most certinly got it. I can't begin to tell you how much they got. We've all read about arrests and disturbnces on other campuses, I saw the stories, you saw them. But try, just try, to conceive of what happened Thursday night at Whitmore, ---- If you weren't there, you can't.

Anyone who had any thoughts of UMass as an ivory tower can damn well forget them; anyone who thinks we aren't in intimate contact with the "real world" is living a dream. For the real world in all its brutility came to UMass last Thursday.

Picture if you will three busloads of riot-equipped State Troopers in front of Whitmore. Picture the strong arm of the law, replete with hard hats, face shields, riot clubs, and loaded guns, "protecting" the "academic community" against itself. Picture if you will the campus bus (yes, that ubiquitous little blue and white UMass bus you ride every day to class), being loaded with your fellow students for the trip to the Northampton jail, accompanied by riot troppers, travelling with a state police escort. That touch was just a little too "expedient".

The whole thing was surreal, a nightmare, a "bad trip". Yes, maybe they did violate the University's sacrosanct "Picketing Code". Yes, the "Student' Senate did vote last week to support on campus recruiting (for the first time, I'm glad I wasn't in the Senate last week). Yes the police were restrained (and they had to be) by their officers.

I guess if you want to, you can just dismiss the whole thing as a bunch of trouble-making radicals getting their just deserts. I'm far from a radical, as anyone who knows me can confirm. I disagreed with the aims and methods of the demonstrators. But the sight of that little UMass bus carting my fellow students off to jail was a little too much. The sight of the storm troopers deployed with startling precision around Whitmore was a little too much. And the sight of my fellow UMass students being herded (and I use the term advisedly) off the bus and into the jail in Northampton was again a little too much.

I've used the term students throughout, but they were a bit more than just "fellow students"; they were men and women, men and women who believed in something enough to lay their future on the line to prove that belief. How many of us could do the same? Could you? Could I?

Students Risk Future For Their Ideals

TO THE EDITOR

On Thursday of last week a significant situation crystallized on our campus. This was a situation not unique to the academic community; in the case of UMass, however, President Lederle responded in a way that would foster rather than inhibit further expressions of student unrest.

Thirty-three of my fellow students -- intelligent, thinking, feeling individuals -- had enough belief in their ideals to risk their entire futures. They chanced the stigma of a police record rather than relinquish their convictions. The Administration, whose duty and allegiance should be first and foremost to their students, chose to abandon their accompanied responsibility. Rather than respond with equal conviction and belief in honestly and candidly attempting to rectify the failings in the system protested by the demonstrators, they delegated their responsibility to a militant and (if Thursday night was any indication) potentially violent organization. How could the Administration expect the State Police, men completely indifferent and insensitive to the feelings of the demonstrators, to ameliorate the situation? They obviously could not do this, and they certinly did more to hinder the progress of an agreement between the Commission to End Military-Industrial Recruitment and the Administration than to improve it.

Thirty-three people put their ideology on the line Thursday. President Lederle and the Administration, if they do not wish to alienate greater numbers of students, can afford to do no less.

Social Action Council explained his reason for joining the demonstration". I joined in protest of the State Police," he said "It was my own personal view, not the King Council."

"I think the campus Police could have handled the situation because they (the demonstrators) wanted to be arrested," he said. Salk also said the University was guilty of breaking the picketing code because they summoned the state police and not the campus police.

"When they called the state police in, they gave up all control of the situation," he said. He went on to explain this by saying that had the campus police been used, the University would have had control over their conduct had their been any violence by making it clear to them their jobs would be in jeopardy.

"There was no source of checks on the State Police. They didn't know what to expect," he went on,"and eame prepared for the worst."

He also disagreed with the stand which the Administration took that the state police were the only alternative. Salk said, "There were other alternatives. They could have let us stay in the building or picked the demonstrators up and locked them outside." Two other alternatives according to Salk would have been to use the campus police instead of the state police and resorting to campus judiclary methods rather than the state courts.

Salk proposed that "some kind of pressures be put on the Administration for three reasons.: The University violated the picketing code; the Administration has some obligation to the students and the University should make some attempt to repair damage by putting up the money to pay the baliff fees.

To implement his proposal, Salk suggested that people attend the coffee hour Tuesday afternoon sponsored by the King Council at which Dean Field will be the guest. He also said if there is another sit-in, those who aren't arrested should form a counter demonstration in support of those who are arrested.

Dean of Students William F. Field clarified some of the actions of the Administration. In explaining why the state police were used rather than the campus police, he said that they felt there were not enough University policemen to handle the situation.

In talking about what happened Thursday, Dean Field said, "It's not what we did, but what we didn't do. It was a failure on my part not to have anticipated this confrontation."

Representative George Rogers (D-New Bedford) is scheduled to talk with President John W. Lederle about the decision to call in the state police.

Legislator To Talk With Lederle

ledge of the situation which he has.

He went on to say that he thought the President used "poor judgment". He said, "It was a peaceful demonstration" and he (Rogers) "can't justify the use of state troopers "He said he thought that the campus police could have handled the situation.

He also said, "I do not have all the facts so it is difficult to make an evaluation."

Rogers said he also felt that a review of the question of the college's role in placing students should be made. "Perhaps it might be out of the college's jurisdiction," he said. "They are in the business of instructing" and placing students is "not the function of the University per se."

Rogers also said that his committee might make a trip to Amherst at "some other time."

UMass Breaks Fast To Easily Down UConn, 85-70

Redmen Near Conf. Crown Starsiak Sparks Win

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

Dick Starsiak, in an unaccustomed starring role, led a first half UMass onslaught that carried the Redmen to a 85-70 win over Connecticut Saturday before 2000 at the Cage. The win upped UMass' season mark to 13-6 and was the seventh Yankee Conference win for Coach Jack Leaman's charges, virtually assuring them of the Conference crown.

With a leg injury sidelining Joe DiSarcina, Redman co-captain and floor general, Leaman has been hard-pressed to find a suitable replacement in the last three games. But, he may have found the answer in Starsiak.

The 5'11 North Quincy junior scored 10 points in the first half as after, missing a couple, hit on soft medium range jumpers. He also hustled and came up with several loose balls and handled the play making chores well.

UMass pulled away easily in the first half. They were playing well, but an ice-cold UConn team had a lot to do with things too. The Huskies who are now a woeful 4-15 could not score for long stretches of time. One drought around the ten minute mark lasted for over four minutes.

UMass, meanwhile, behind Starsiak and his backcourt running mate, Ray Ellerbrook were upping the lead steadily. As early as 8:58, the Redmen led 19-8. UConn in the first 14 minutes hit on only two field goals to make things easy.

Although after taking a 44-24 lead into the locker room at half-time, UMass never was in serious danger, the second half at least was better to watch.

UConn finally began to play some semblance of basketball, as behind guard Dave Staak and forward Tony Budzinsky, the Huskies never made any serious inroads.

The closest, in fact UConn ever got was 12, at 81-69, but by then, the Redmen were only concerned with putting the icing on another win.

A big factor in squelching any UConn comeback bids was Dennis Chapman. The big forward was way off the beam in the first half, but he was deadly in the second 20 minutes as he connected on numerous long- range bombs.

Ellerbrook led all scores with 26 points. Chapman had 20 for the Redmen, with Peter Gayeska, playing his usual strong steady game on the boards chipping with 16. Starsiak, who was saddled in the second half by foul, trouble had 11.

Staak had 24 to lead the Huskies. Forward Ron Nrubala had 15 while, Budzinsky had 13.

REDMAN RANTINGS - The UMass freshman team keeps rolling along undefeated, at 12-0 as the Little Redman whomped the UConn fresh 88-67.... Rich Vogeley led all scorers with 24 points, with Julius Erving's 15, John Bettancourt's 17, Mike Pagliara's 13 and Chris Coffin's 13 rounding out the balanced attack.... UConn, in the first meeting between the two teams, succumbed to UMass only by two in the freshmen's toughest battle to date, but Saturday it was a wire to wire victory for UMass.

Icemen Win 3rd In Row Crush Holy Cross, 13-2

BY WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Displaying a powerful attack, the UMass hockey team rolled to its third straight victory, a 13-2 thumping of Holy Cross, Saturday afternoon at Orr Rink before a small crowd of Redmen rooters.

Ten players shared goal scoring honors with Jeff Sanborn leading the way with a three goal hat trick. Ken Reddick added two goals to the UMass column.

Ed Riley started the Redmen onslaught with his first goal of the season early in the opening period. Doug Powling set up the score with a nifty pass.

Two minutes later, Paul Riley caught Crusader goalie Bob Johnson moving the wrong way as his shot slithered through Johnson's legs. UMass goalie Larry Walsh made his first save of the game a beauty as he stopped Bill Butler on a breakaway.

Sanborn got the first goal of his hat trick on a 10 ft. shot into the corner. Defenseman Mike Murray tallied the fourth goal of the period on a good rush after taking a John Hartnett pass.

Sanborn notched the fifth Redmen goal on a pretty individual effort that ended when he lifted his shot over the Holy Cross goalie's shoulder.

In the second period, Charlie Hanifan scored the sixth Redmen goal as Bob Madore's shot deflected off Hanifan's skate. Jim Farley tallied the first Crusader goal when his shot deflected off a defenseman's leg high into the net.

Bill McMann added to the Redmen margin when he slapped in a rebound of a Hanifan shot. Reddick got the first of two goals on a breakaway after Rocky Stone's pass broke him loose. Jim O'Brien closed out scoring in the second period when his goal gave UMass a 9-1 bulge.

Sanborn completed his hat trick early in the final period when he scored from in front after being set up by Hartnett and O'Brien. Butler knocked in the second Holy Cross goal from a scramble in front midway through the period.

Reddick netted his second on an unassisted effort at 12:26 and two minutes later Tom Babson batted in the loose puck into an empty net. Hartnett completed the scoring with a goal four minutes from the end of the game.

UMass showed their superiority in the save department as the Crusader goalies came up with 49 saves while Larry Walsh and Stu Kadish combined for 23 stops in the Redmen nets.

UMass now has a 8-10 card while Holy Cross is 9-3-1. The Redmen are off for a week with their next opponent Norwich coming in to Orr rink on Saturday for a 7 p.m. game.

Leading the point parade for the Redmen was Jeff Sanborn with three goals and two assists. Other top pointmen were John Hartnett with a goal and three assists, Bob Madore with three assists and Jim O'Brien with a goal and two assists. The team as a whole split up 32 points on 13 goals and 19 assists.

Swimmers Easily Drown Crusaders

Winning 10 of 11 events and gaining sweeps in six of them, the UMass swimming team crushed Holy Cross Friday 70-23 in a dual meet at Boyden. The win was the Redman swimmers second in a row and upped their record to 3-4.

The meets opened with the Redman medlay relay team, of McCarthy, Northrup, Lynch and Beck losing a close race to the Holy Cross team of Ryan, Dick, Steffens and Johnson, who won in the slow time of 4:16.9. It was to be the only bright spot of the whole day for the Crusaders.

Bob Asquith began the UMass winning streak by taking the 200 yard freestyle in the fine time of 1:57.8 with Ed Jazab second, and Green of Holy Cross third. The score was thus tied at eight.

Mark Miller won the next event, the 50 yard freestyle in 23.1 seconds, followed by teammate Geof Senior in second place. Flip Morton, swimming the individual medlay for the first time this year won easily in the good time of 2:10.8, leading from the first lap in the race.

Dave Larson, who is getting better, it seems, with every passing week, and has his eye set on the New England Bevilacqua and Christopher of the Crusaders, second and third. The score now read, 26-16, in favor of UMass.

Dick Donoghue won the 200 yard butterfly for UMass as swimming resumed in the time of 2:20.2. Bruce Fulton was second for the Redmen. In the 100 yard freestyle, Miller and Senior again combined to go one-two with Miller's winning time being a record tying 50.9. Doyle of the visitors was third.

Pat McCarthy, who is improving with almost every race, won a closely contested 200 yard backstroke, nosing out the Crusaders' Ryan in 2:19.8, his fastest time to date.

Maurice Lynch and Tom Beck combined to sweep the 500 yard freestyle with Lynch winning in 6:05.6 Gran of Holy Cross was a distant third. In the 200 yard breastroke, Al Northrup continued to win, as he captured the event in 2:36.0. Jim Kaveny took second place for the Redmen in an exciting finish just touching out Dick of Holy Cross.

The freestyle relay team of Miller, Senior, Adquith and Morton, although failing in an attempt to break the record, won the race in the good time of 3:29.5. Miller who led off, also broke his record in the 100 with an official clocking of 50.8.

The team will host the U.S. Coast Guard Academy at Boyden on Wednesday, in an attempt for their third in the row and also looking forward to upping their season's record to the .500 mark.

UConn Coach Quits

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - Burr Carlson, head basketball coach at the University of Connecticut, and his assistant, Jack Conlam, announced Sunday their intention to resign after the current season.

Both have indicated in notices to President Homer D. Babbidge Jr. that they intend to pursue separate courses in private business.

Carlson, in his first year in UConn in 1967-68 directed the team to an 11-13 record. This season the team has won only 4 of its 19 games and is in last place in the Yankee Conference with a 2-5 record.

Protests Continue at UWisconsin, Demands Are Granted at Duke Univ.

MADISON, WIS. (CPS-TELEX) - National Guardsmen were posted in buildings on the University of Wisconsin campus Monday as student demonstrators carried their protests from the street to the classroom.

Some classes were disrupted. In others, students confronted professors with discussion of the black students' demands in attempts merely to restructure the day's classes.

In at least one case officials ordered students not enrolled in classes to leave or face arrest.

Some 1900 Guardsmen are stationed on the campus, but the only show of force Monday was inside the buildings. The blacks would like to draw the soldiers back outside where confrontations would draw more support from sympathetic white students.

The low turnout at a morning rally indicated the frustration many white students feel: the school administration is unwilling to negotiate, demonstrations have been unsuccessful, and there is studying to be done.

But as the numbers turning out for demonstrations dwindle, the chances for more militant tactics increase. A total shutdown of the 34,000 student campus is unlikely.

A further show of force by authorities could set off more violent confrontations. Thursday, National Guardsmen used tear gas to disperse some 5000 protesters and onlookers.

Demands include establishment of an autonomous black studies progra m and admission of at least 500 more black students. The dissidents also want amnesty, a black co-director of the scholarship program for ghetto youth, and control of the campus' new black cultural center.

A peaceful weekend brought hope that the Guard could be sent home, but if trouble continues, withdrawal is unlikely.

The Guard was first called to campus when city officials told Gov. Warren P. Knowles that Madison police could no longer handle the situation.

The Governor lunched with Guardsmen Sunday. That night, university chancellor H. Edwin Young went on television to explain his case.

He said the university has done as much as any other school to help black students. Insisting that all the demands could not be met, he said he would yield to threats of shutting down the campus.

The conflict on campus peaked Wednesday when striking students manning picket lines were charged by counter-strikers, members of a group called "The Hayakawas". The violence then precipitated the calling up of the Guard.

The soldier's presence brought out white student sympathetic to the blacks' demands and unsympathetic to the prospects of "pig power". Guardsmen unsheathed their bayonets to back the students away. Estimates of the crowd marching downtown to the State Capitol ran as high as 10,000.

Besides the counter-striking "Hayakawas", the left-wing students met conservative reaction from the State Legislature. The Senate voted Thursday to cut off financial aid from students convicted of a crime in campus disorders. The whole assembly joined in a resolution urging the University to suspend students who disrupt classes.

Duke students can be expected to support the workers' stand. Last April, some students held a vigil during a strike by janitors and others.

The Afro-American studies program will be run in part by black students - a compromise from the demand for an autonomous department. Other demands granted Sunday include:

A "significant increase" in the number of black students. (The students originally insisted on a student body with 29 percent black, the percentage of negroes in the area served by Duke).

Investigation by the administration of charges of police harassment of black students.

A black advisor paid by the University but selected in consultation with black students he would serve.

A black "living-learning" program. (This was in response to the demand for an all-black dorm.)

Sunday's concessions by the school were hammered out in a meeting involving the black students' leaders, Duke President Douglas M. Knight, and Trustee Chairman Charles Wade (of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.).

Black students are generally satisfied with the administration's reaction to their demands. "We got more done in that three hours than we ever got done before in two and a half years," said a spokesman for the Afro-American Society on campus.

The blacks agreed to drop their demands for amnesty, but it is rumored that the administration accepted it tacitly. Publicly, it promised "due process" before the school's disciplinary council.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN has learned that Massachusetts Senator Edward M. Kennedy will be the featured speaker at the University's Commencement exercises, May 31.

A source within the Student Senate disclosed last week that Kennedy, who will receive an honorary degree, will be joined on the graduation platform by CBS newsman Walter Cronkite, and poet Archibald MacLeish.

"Duke Univ."

DURHAM, N.S. (CPS-TELEX) - Students returned to classes at Duke University Monday as a three-day boycott ended after the administration agreed to establish the south's first black studies program. But further disturbances are possible when non-academic employees confront school officials Tuesday.

The student demand for collective bargaining for non-academic workers went unmet Sunday. A leader of the workers said their representatives would enter a meeting with the administration Tuesday with 12 demands over working conditions and pay, and would not leave until they are met.

U.S. May Withdraw Troops Despite Paris Stalemate

WASHINGTON (AP) - While the Nixon administration plugs for mutual troops withdrawal, the belief is growing that the United States will start pulling soldiers out of Vietnam whether or not the Paris stalemate is broken.

When that pullout will start is unclear, although there have been reports that the first reductions in the 537,000 U.S. servicemen in South Vietnam may come this summer.

The key appears to be the progress of the South Vietnamese armed forces toward the stage where American commanders feel those forces are sufficiently proficient and self-confident.

Some senior U.S. military officers are known to be thinking in terms of withdrawing a division by late this year.

That could amount to anywhere from 15,000 to nearly 50,000 men, depending on how much of the division's support is left behind to help the South Vietnamese with such assets as helicopter lift and artillery.

For the present at least, administration authorities are trying to avoid talking about unilateral withdrawal.

As Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird put it recently: "I think that this would certainly not strengthen our position in Paris if we moved toward unilateral withdrawal at this time."

Other high officials speak of mutual withdrawal as this country's current position in the peace negotiations with the North Vietnamese in Paris.

Neither the public nor private views of American officials rule out the possibility of this country starting a troop pullback when conditions are right in South Vietnam - and conditions are put in terms of Vietnamese political stability as well as military effectiveness.

President Nixon, at his most recent news conference Feb. 6, seemed to come close to suggesting that the U.S. troop withdrawal could begin separate from any agreement in Paris on mutual pullout by both sides.

Nixon said "Just as soon as either the training program for South Vietnam forces and their capabilities, the progress of the Paris peace talks or other developments make it feasible to do so troops will be brought back."

While the particular furor over campus towing of illegally parked cars has subsided recently, anyone who's ever had it happen to him will appreciate the fact that one of Anderson's trucks was seen towing a Peter Pan bus from in front of the Student Union just before noon last Friday. 4 English Profs. Are Promoted

Four members of the English Department faculty have been promoted, according to an announcement of Provost Oswald Tippo.

They are: Jules Chametzky and John C. Weston, Jr., from associate professor to professor; and Normand Berlin and Arthur F. Kinney Jr., from assistant professor to associate professor.

All are members of the Department's Personnel Committee, which makes recommendations for promotion of faculty and merit salary increases. The Committee comprises seven members elected by the Department, and the Department Head, ex officio.

Mich. May Drop ROTC Credit

ANN ARBOR, MICH. (CPS-TELEX) - The curriculum committee of The Literary (Liberal Arts) College of the University of Michigan will recommend that ROTC programs be stripped of academic credit.

Action by the full faculty is expected next month.

Other schools, notably Yale, Harvard, and Stamford have moved to withdraw credit for the military training courses. Late last week, a high-ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee said he would ask the Defense Department to withdraw ROTC units from such schools.

Sen. Muskie Calls Draft 'Unfair' Seeks Revisions in Procedures

OXFORD, Ohio (AP) - The nation's military draft system is "unfair and unjust" and should be changed, Sen. Edmund Muskie declared Monday night.

The Maine Democrat said the revisions should include arrangements for draftees to render non-military service, such as the Peace Corps, teacher corps and anti-poverty assignments.

Muskie commented in a speech prepared for an All-University Convocation at Miami University.

"Many of you feel - and with good reason - that the present system and its procedures are unfair and have little relevance to our goals and motivations."

The senator questioned whether the all-volunteer army being advocated by several of his colleagues was the answer.

The volunteer plan is keyed to providing sufficient pay and other incentives to attract enough manpower.

In other words, Muskie said, "we would force upon the poor by the use of pecuniary incentives the responsibilities which the affluent could afford to avoid."

Fine Arts Review

Moliere's Classic Comedy 'Scapin' is at Amherst

" Scapin ", a newly-translated farce by Moliere was first presented this past weekend by The Amherst Seventy Players in association with the Department of Dramatic Arts and the Amherst College Independent Study Committee. The scenario was the first to use the recently completed translation written by James Bierman, a professor at Amherst. His wife, Peggy Bierman designed the lavish and bright costumes. Dan Whitaker '71 designed the set which resembled the type used perhaps on the traveling theatre caravans.

A simple and predictable plot of lover's intrigue, the production is very light and farcical humor continues throughout. This is a good opportunity to see the popular Italian sixteenth and seventeenth century improvised comedy (Commedia dell'Arte). These plays were originally oriented toward the common people of the marketplaces and were performed by the various touring companies.

Apparently in this particular form of drama only the basic plot outlines, pantomimic devices, and connecting material for some of the scenes are the portions not improvised by the actors themselves. Drew Kalter '70, the producer and director of this independent study production comments that "much of the dialogue of the play has grown out of rehearsals and has never been recorded before this performance. We hope that you will enjoy this Valley tour, an effort to recapture the flavor of a very exciting style of comedy." I believe he succeeded very well in this endeavor.

Additional performances will be held February 21 and 22 at 8:30 at Buckley Recital Hall, A.C., and also on February 23 at two p.m. at Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Smith College.

Tickets are $1.50 and can be obtained by sending a check and self-addressed stamped envelop to The Seventy Players, Box 1047, Amherst College Station or by calling (413) 253-5654.

Educational Theatre Alliance Selects Freshman Playwright

Michael Mathias, head of the Educational Theatre Alliance, and Ken Eulo, director of the Courtyard Playhouse, New York City, have selected Bert Baker, a University Freshman, as a participant in the Theatre Alliance's new program of synergetic training for theatre artists.

Mr. Baker's short stream-of-consciousness play, "Cranial Instances Within Monticuline Streams" interested the English Department in recommending Mr. Baker to pre-professional training at the Courtyard Playhouse, a program offered only to the unusually gifted student demonstrating promise in the field of dramatic writing.

Mr. Baker will have the opportunity of attending monthly sessions at the Courtyard Playhouse, writing specifically for professional actors who will perform his work in the New York City environment. The Educational Theatre Alliance in its search for new playwrights, is initiating a revolutionary training program in which undergraduate playwrights may work continually with a professional repetory company with the promise of a full time position as playwright-in-residence upon graduation.

Although this year's program at the Playhouse is already closed, any undergraduate playwrights who wish to be considered for next year's program may submit samples of dramatic writing to Dr. Tamas Aczel, Professor of Creative Writing, English Department, Bartlett Hall, with a letter of application addressed to the Educational Theatre Alliance, Courtyard Playhouse, New York City.

Dean Field to be Guest At Open Coffee Hour Today

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council will present the third in its series of open coffee hours with University administrators today at noon with Dean of Students William F. Field. The program will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, and is open to all interested students, faculty, and administrators.

The program was initiated by the King Council as an attempt to open new lines of communication between the student body and the administration. Executive Secretary Gil Salk expressed the hope that this meeting will be attended by those with strong feelings of support for or opposition to the Dow sit-in and the calling of the State Police. "Discussion of the pros and cons of the motives and methods of both groups in open forum will do more toward increasing mutual understanding than a thousand dorm-room bull sessions," he said.

Other questions of widespread interest raised at earlier coffee hours with the President and the Provost were deferred to this meeting because Dean Field is more closely involved. Included among these are the questions of a cooperative bookstore and plans for the new Campus Center.

Racial Tension Will be Eased

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - The Nixon Administration will do more to ease racial tension than any previous administration, Housing and Urban Development Secretary George Romney predicted today.

Romney said the administration's approach to racial problems is realistic, down-to-earth and avoids "big talk."

However, he said the racial situation in America is tense. "We have the elements for civil guerrilla warfare," he said, but did not elaborate.

State Agency May be Solution to Recruiting Problem

By RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

The basic premise of the group working for the ending of military-industrial recruiting on campus seems so clear and apparent as not to require further arguing or documentation. The evidence on this score has been in for some time now; and has been readily available for all who care to investigate for themselves. This starting point, then, will not in itself be the cause of further campus disorder or confusion, we may hope. The problem, of course, comes in the extension of this premise to the conclusion that on-campus recruiting should be ended.

The University's position that the call for an end to on-campus recruiting is not negotiable is apparently based on the wholly laudable desire to be of such help to graduating seniors as may be done consistent with normal University business. The fact that the Student Senate had, only the night before, but in the absence of any alternative suggestions, re-endorsed the principle of "open recruiting" was supportive of this decision not to entertain the idea of ending on-campus recruiting.

The goal of placing graduating seniors in appropriate jobs is here overtly accepted a s desirable - the more complex question of the basic morality of their training is reserved to another time and place, together with that discussion of the morality of their even accepting military - industrial jobs, regardless of where the recruiting takes place. The issue should not be considered as one of simply recruiting or no recruiting, for there is a middle ground.

There is an easy answer to this recruiting problem, one which will, it seems, satisfy the opponents of on-campus recruiting as well as the legions of seniors with their right to interview for a job. Each side of this controversy might emerge with positive gains if the State Division of Employment Security were to undertake the recruiting and interviewing operations at an off-campus office in the center of Amherst. This seems to be an amicable arrangement - one which should have been suggested earlier.

First, this State agency is one expressly charged with ensuring employment for Massachusetts residents - it is the agency which, everywhere else that it operates, is responsible for bringing employers and prospective employees to gether. There seems to be no reason why the Division could not expand its services by one more office, locating in Amherst center. Appropriate petitions to the Division's main office, and perhaps to the legislature, could accomplish the opening of the necessary office downtown.

The advantages would be numerous: the University could reduce by several persons the staff of the Placement Office, perhaps transferring the clerks who presently handle this paperwork to the Employment Security office itself. There would be a greater centralisation of the job-placement operation - the Division of Employment Security has been in the jobs business for quite some time, and has already developed its own files and backlogs of jobs available. Amherst College seniors would benefit from the arrangement, putting them into easier touch with the greater number of recruiters who come to a university campus than to a small college campus.

Amherst residents themselves would benefit, since the nearest office of the Division is presently in Northampton. The office would, of course, handle all sorts of job placement; and local residents couldn't help but benefit from the arrangement. Many small Massachusetts firms are presently unable to support extensive recruiting efforts, even within their home state - they would benefit by listing their needs with the Division's own staff, and letting those personnel do interviewing and recruiting for them, thus giving them better access to the pool of university and college talent.

Most importantly, the serious and probably otherwise irresolvable source of conflict and tension arising over on-campus recruiting would be ended, by moving the operation off the campus and one mile up the road. The inconvenience to seniors would be truly negligable - the walk to the center of town is only 15 minutes, always easy; and, despite some allegations to the contrary, a great number of seniors so seem to have cars in the area. Transportation to the center of town would be - from the view of someone who's been walking there for years - no problem whatsoever.

I would like to suggest here, then, that everybody concerned with the problem of on-campus recruiting now get together and begin working for the implementation of what could be the solution to a serious problem.

Why and How

The confrontation in Whitmore is over and in the past few days those who were present have had time to think things over and to question the why and how of that event.

One thing is obvious. There is a credibility gap between the demonstrators and the Administration. The demonstrators do not believe that Dean Field made an attempt to have a representative from Dow here to debate with the committee seeking to end Dow recruitment on this campus. They do not believe that they could discuss their demand with representatives of the Administration nor do they believe that the state police were the only alternative to end the sit-in.

Dean Field berated himself for failing to anticipate the confrontation and rightly so. There need not have been any confrontation last Thursday. In the past President Lederle, Dean Field and Dr. Nottsinger all have demonstrated a willingness to discuss with students any issue. The best precedent of this is the Dow demonstration which was staged almost one year ago to the day. That demonstration brought to the surface student dissatisfaction with University requirements. And members of the Administration met in the Cage with students in an attempt to rectify the situation.

Why then did this group of demonstrators so completely reject Dean Field's offer to negotiate their demand? They stated from the outset that their demand was non-negotiable. How mature and intelligent a statement is this? Perhaps it is cynical to think that today there is no stand which is not debatable, but that's the way it seems to be.

A larger issue is that of the decision to summon the state police. Gil Salk asserts that he joined the demonstration to protest the use of the state police. He also claims the University broke the picketing code by not using the campus police. Dean Field says that the state police were the only alternative. It seems his decision was founded more on reality than Mr. Salk's statements.

The campus police force is small. They are not trained to handle demonstrations. Relations between the campus police and students are strained. If there had been any violence last Thursday, it would most probably have resulted from using the campus police. Perhaps it is time to think about training them for such situations. The Amherst town police were not used for basically the same reasons.

The decision to use the state police was a hard one to make, but it was made in an attempt to avoid violence and possible injury to the demonstrators. Capt. Anderson had been well advised of the situation. He was aware of the fact the demonstrators had agreed to be arrested by the state police. It was their intention to be arrested to reinforce their demand. When the state police began to remove the demonstrators, several members of the Administration stood by and told the state police that the demonstrators wanted to go; there was no need to be rough.

The demonstrators were clearly in violation of the picketing code. The picketing code is an expression of the majority; their feelings, an expression of the minority. Although the minority must have its wishes, they are also subject to using the accepted channels for redress of their grievance. Dean Field told them they had made their point at 5 p.m. After that, the matter was out of his hands because they were breaking not only a University rule but also a state law, trespassing. They will be made to make restitution for breaking the law, but they still have an opportunity on this campus to try and do something about open recruiting.

In the end, what was accomplished by breaking the law? They broke a University rule and a state law. They got the headlines across the state. But as far as affecting their goal - an end to military industrial recruitment on campus - what have they actually done? It is up to them now to resort to the legal methods of the University in attempt to change the open recruitment policy.

Moral Committment

If Thursday's demonstration accomplished nothing else, it did serve to awaken at least a few of the minds on campus to the very serious problem we are facing. This awakening, as everyone knows, is no small accomplishment. People are angry, if not at the demonstrators, then at the Administration for their abandonment of reason to force. The Administration called in the state police before making any attempt at communication with the demonstrators. There was no need for armed state police, in fact almost any of the other available alternatives would have been a great deal more plausible.

But the state police involvement Thursday night is no longer the issue. The first step toward the ultimate goal has been taken. A definite stand was taken by a very small number of people who could no longer abide by the moral laws guiding this educational institution. Faced with a question of morality, the administration resorted to what very easily could have become violence. A question of ethics was met by a purely physical answer.

Again, the first step has been taken, even though the ultimate goal, some sort of peace or brotherhood or humanity, is still merely an abstract idea. Another step is soon to be taken, and if you have been guilty of supporting, or even condoning, the ceaseless murder of our brothers, the opportunity has come for you to re-examine your beliefs and make known your point of view. If, when you have done this, you can honestly continue to support our government, and our university, in this policy, then you are free to do so. There are no police to arrest you for violations of moral laws. Your conscience is the only judge you will have to face.

"We've Got To Live, Don't We?"

Campus Comment

Faculty Support

To the editor:

We are writing this letter to those students who are trying to clarify their own positions on the recent arrests in Whitmore. We wish to inform them that many faculty members fully sympathize with the motives of the protesting students and deplore the insensitivity of the Administration and the Dow Chemical Corporation.

The Administration, in upholding its notion of neutrality, felt content some time ago to accept rules for a policy on student demonstrations. Once this code was approved by official University bodies, the Administration held that its responsibilities had been discharged.

We disagree. And we maintain that the Administration's manner of handling the situation itself validates the protesters' charge that the University is becoming a cog in the military-industrial machine.

The Administration could have avoided a dangerous situation by denying Dow the use of campus offices for recruitment. It could have done so out of deference to the moral sensibilities of a considerable number of its faculty and students. (Some other schools, perhaps more imaginative and courageous, have done exactly this.) Dow could have hired an office in town and bussed students for interviews. But the Administration, in avoiding this simple expedient, clearly found it easier to accommodate itself to a powerful corporation and representative of Big Business than to respect the sentiment of many members of its own university community.

The Administration also wasted a second chance. It claimed to be upholding the right of free speech in permitting Dow on campus. The protesting students were willing to test their own beliefs and challenged Dow to a debate. Dow, full of arrogant indifference to the basic goals of a university, refused to debate. The Administration, full of meekness towards Dow, acquiesced. Why, with its own professed champloning of open debate, did it not deny Dow the privilege of using University property?

By its acquiescence in Dow's refusal to debate, the Administration invalidated the policy on demonstrations, for that policy was entirely based on a concept of the university as a place for the free exchange of ideas. Having itself violated the spirit of the policy, the administration now has not the slightest moral right to punish the students who subsequently violated the letter of the policy.

In conclusion, we do not ask that our administrators show the courage of those students who, on a matter of conscience, took risks with their careers the other night. We do ask that these administrators show that their first concern is, not fawning on the Establishment, not polishing a public image, but the intellectual needs of the student body.

Professors Arnold Silver and John C. Weston, Department of English

E.g. Mr. Epstein

To the editor:

Anger requires that I not worry about being stuffy and that I must object to your use of my name in your editorial February 17. First, I have no evidence that the persons who were sitting in in Whitmore "respect" me in the sense you imply. Second, if they do I hope they do so because it is not automatically clear that I would feel it appropriate to "talk to" them in the sense you suggest. Third, for "e.g." you use "i.e.," erroneously suggesting that my friend Mr. Drum and I have some special virtue which we do not share with many of our colleagues.

Official Statement: Committee to End Military & Industrial Recruitment

The Committee to End Military and Industrial Recruitment wishes to make it clear that it did not request that the administration pay the various legal fees and it has no intention of doing so. Mr. Salk's statement reflects his own beliefs and not those of the committee. We appreciate his views; they are not however our views.

The Committee also wishes to make clear that it does not regard the issue concerning the employment of state troopers as being particularly relevant. We were pledged to remain until our demands were met; we were removed by physical force. Whether removed by the campus police, the local police, the state police, the national guard or members of the administration themselves is from our perspective irrelevant.

Our one aim is to end military and industrial recruitment on campus. This does not mean we wish to prevent people from getting jobs. Rather it reflects our adamant opposition to the corporate system which is the major cause and perpetrator of the war against the people of Viet Nam, economic and military imperialism against the peoples of Latin America and the black colonies within America. In attacking recruitment we are attacking the subordination of the University to the corporation and a system which makes profits and not people the first priority. The university itself is a corporate structure; in demanding an end to recruitment we also demand an end to the coercive, immoral and incredibly stupid philosophy of education by those who administer or rather rule the University.

To help the hungry feed themselves. CARE aid ranges from $2 seed and $11 hand tool packages to special purchases costing thousands. Last year, in packages alone CARE delivered enough implements to equip 38,000 farmers and their sons, plus seeds to grow 5,800 tons of vegetables.

From Both Sides Now - Winter Carni 1969

Chambers Brothers

Friday Night

BY RAY TAYLOR

Friday night's concert began with what is becoming a UMass tradition - a delay. This time, the reasons for the wait were supposedly more valid than usual, nevertheless, few sympathized. To further complement the tedium, the first group to appear, the ARS NOVA, (was it 10:45 or 11:00?) did little to break the monotony of the late hour. Offering a program of titleless songs, their canned music fell on inattentive ears. Finally, the announcement of their last number was made which brought the loudest applause of their act.

Hats off should probably go to the 24 carat clown who provided the only novel event of the whole set. Actually, I was surprised to see anyone was still awake. Intermission.

Came the Chamber Brothers and with them the audience. Their records do not do them justice; they are entertainers from the word go. All equally talented, they each took turns sharing the spotlight. High-points of their performance included the pop single "I Can't Turn You Loose", "People Get Ready", and of course "Time Has Come Today".

1:10 happened and the overhead lights in the Cage grew in intensity. The mass moved in a sleepy stupor. Another Cage Concert had ended.

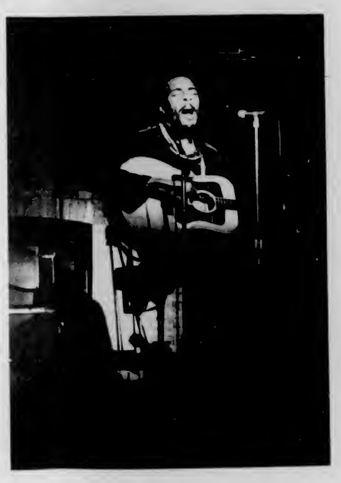
Sergio Mendes

Lani Hall

Sunday

BY RAY TAYLOR

The final concert of the 1969 Winter Carni Weekend, Sergio Mendes and Brasil '66 saw tradition continued as the audience stood and sat alternately in expectation. This time, however, in contrast to Friday evening, the wait was made worth while.



Bossa Rio, the first act to entertain, came on strong in spite of having to do battle with a defiant malfunctioning speaker. Difficult it was to imagine that they had just come from Brazil. More American and in tune with the times than many U.S. groups, they flew through their repertoire performing such favorites as "Up, Up and Away" and "Do You Know the Way to San Jose?". According to Sergio Mendes, Bossa Rio is an up and coming group. We agree.

Next on the bill was comedian Don Sherman. His performance greatly enhanced the afternoon which grew more entertaining with each act. Sherman's material claimed many sources . . . there was something for everyone with each joke immediate and relevant. From "Amherst, the Gateway to Hadley," to "George, the kneeling photographer," the audience was in stitches. His topics included everything one should not discuss at a cocktail party, namely religion and politics. No one was left untouched at the end of his monologue, Jews, Catholics, Mexicans, Southerners, Baptists, and even the "oatmeal-eating Quakers" came under fire from his quick spontaneous wit, but fell captive to the "didn't I meet you on a street corner in Brooklyn" attitude which rendered him immediately acceptable to the audience.

The afternoon finally was climaxed by Sergio Mendes and Brazil '66. It took little time to realize why they have become one of the top recording groups in the country as they bathed each selection in their own distinctive style combining smooth voices, Latin rhythms, and jazz structurings. Mendes' music was enjoyable to listen to, easy to relate to, and never tedious. Various numbers included, 'Girl From Ipanema", "Scarborough Fair", "Fool On The Hill", and "Day Tripper". The audience was captivated by the Latin charm of the performers and their music, and as might be expected brought them back with a standing ovation for three encores.

Richie Havens

Gravy

Saturday Night

BY SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

Appearing Saturday night at the Winter Carnival coffee house "Snowed Inn" featuring Richie Havens, was Jaime Brockett, well known in the Boston coffee house circuit. After a brief hassle with the sound system, Brockett displayed his fine comical showmanship, versatile singing and instrumental ability for over an hour. Included with his guitar playing, both six and twelve string, he adeptly played a five-string banjo and later a Scottish ballad on a dulcimer.

Brockett's concluding number was a ballad about the "U.S.S. Titanic." After an enthusiastic round of applause, he was ushered back for an encore. His choice was a powerful guitar "facsimile" of an Indian death saga, "Death Rides on a Black Wind", traditionally played on the sitar.

Between his songs, Brockett related little bits about some "wigged out cat" from California he knew who wrote a new comic book called FEDS AND HEADS, and old "adages" concerning the similarities between bathrooms and poolhalls. He continued to reveal the accoustical wonders of the bath for playing the guitar with the shower for applause and the toilet's flush for a standing ovation. A lingering thought was, if we liked his singing, "steal the album, we don't need any bread."

Performing second was "Gravy" a six-man jug band from U.M. Their four songs were fairly well received but it was felt that perhaps they should have appeared first because the y simply could not match Brockett's fine performance.

Richie Havens, one of the newest members of the folk-singing elite, was the feature entertainer for the evening. He performed with guitar and drum accompanists and the total experience was a comfortable but driving expansion of sound. To even attempt to describe the essense of his sound is futile. He is all at once easy, relaxed, flowing, casually precise, and absorbs you as he lets you come for a brief moment into and through his genius. He's unique in the class of folk where so much is banal.

Asking in a disconnected manner "What am I?", he explored and later took the audience with him into the weighty implications and depths of words such as conscience, responsibility and the essense of color. He said he likes to know what words mean before he uses them, a phrase like the repelling "go away" and "come' a word that ends inside of you. On life: "breath and death . . . they don't go any further."

Havens then closed with a five-string song, "Wear Your Love Like Heaven." He captured the audience, and they brought him back to involve them again with his moving interpretation of "Strawberry Fields" for an encore. So totally immersed in his playing and the audience absorbed into it, Havens was unbelievably fantastic. In short, you could simply say "Wow!" and have said it all.

UMass Astronomy Club Discusses Plans for Meeting and Events

Last week the Astronomy Club held its first meeting of the term. It has grown tremendously since this time last year,when it had a grand total of three members.

The Astronomy Club is the most eclectic group on campus, outside of Pierpont-Moore. It includes forty-one amateur stargazers in such diverse fields as Phys. Ed., Landscape Architecture, Philosophy, Urban Planning and American Studies. How a student is able to major in American Studies at UMass is one mystery of the universe which neither the Club nor Dean Hunsberger can explain. Possibly the Astronomy Club is an Underground Four College venture.

The main topic of the meeting was a membership drive. This is to be an intensive operation that will extend into the very depths of the Quad. Coming up in the next few weeks are several lectures and some films. Most attractive are a sober talk on flying saucers, and a star party in front of the Student Union on some Thursday movie night. 'Star party' is the technical term, at least. Their enthusiasm is welcome on a campus that is getting cluttered with useful organizations . . .

The grants, made to the departments of chemical engineering, chemistry, and polymer science and engineering, include graduate fellowships, assistance for gifted undergraduates, purchase of equipment, summer grants to promising young faculty members and general aid to departmental activities.

The UMass departments of chemical engineering and polymer science and engineering each received $2500 and the chemistry department received $5000 from DuPont.

SWAP to Change Concept For Next Academic Year

Nomination papers for the 1969-70 SWAP Committee are now available in the RSO Office and will be due on Wednesday, February 26.

The Student Workshop on Activities Problems (SWAP) Committee, in anticipation of the 1969-70 academic year is in the process of modifying considerably the current goals and future objectives of SWAP. A totally different concept will underline a new form to conferences, discussions, and committee work on and off campus, and will make SWAP a much more meaningful and effective campus-wide organization. New people with creative minds are needed to make these innovations and to help prove SWAP successful.

The members of the 1969-70 SWAP Committee must be willing to work diligently to construct and run this new SWAP. SWAP, being the only campus organization where the student body, faculty, and administration together can discuss and act on our needs and problems, needs people that are interested in helping to foster a progressive social and academic environment at this university.

District Director Clarifies Exemptions and Deductions

A $600 exemption may be taken for a baby born anytime during the year as long as certain tests are met, William E. Williams, District Director of Internal Revenue for Massachusetts, said today.

One of the basic requirements for claiming a child as a dependent is that the taxpayer provide more than half the child's support for the entire year.

Another test for dependency is that the child must either be related to the taxpayer or be a member of the taxpayer's household. The child must also be a citizen or resident of the United States to be claimed as a dependent.

Mr. Williams said the requirement that a person cannot have income of $600 or more a year and be claimed as a dependent by another taxpayer does not apply to a child who is either under 19 at the end of the year or a full-time student for some part of five months of the year. His exemption could be claimed on different tax returns. The child would claim his own exemption on the return he was required to file and his parents would still be entitled to claim his exemption on their return.

Publication 501, "Your Exemptions and Exemptions for Dependents," which furnishes more detailed information on this subject, may be obtained by dropping a post card to the District Director, Internal Revenue Service, J.F.K. Federal Building, Boston, Massachusetts 02203.

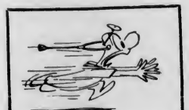
New Program Aids Low Income Groups

The Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service at the University of Massachusetts has received $144,000 from the U. S. Department of Agriculture to expand its family nutrition educational program into low income areas of the state, Dr. Arless Spielman, Director of Extension and Dean of the College of Agriculture at UMass, announced.



The first phase of the program was completed recently in a three and one-half day training session at UMass-Amherst for county extension home economists. Heading the program are J. Richard Beattie, associate director of extension, and Miss Winifred Eastwood, head of the extension division of home economics at UMass.

The new funds allotted by the Department of Agriculture will be used to hire and train local people who will teach homemakers in low income communities how to buy and use surplus foods more effectively.

The work will be carried on in Pittsfield, Fall River, Lawrence, Holyoke, Cambridge, Quincy, Brockton, Worcester, Boston's South End, and in the Franklin County towns of Bernardston, Gill, Leyden and Warwick and North field.

All CARE donors are notified how their money is used.

Prof. To Speak On Conservation

Conservationist John W. Brainerd of Springfield College will speak on "Education for a Quality Environment" tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Thompson Hall 104.

His lecture, open to the public without charge, is the first in the Distinguished Ecologists Program of the Western Massachusetts Unit of the Atlantic Chapter of the Sierra Club.

A professor of biology and conservation at Springfield College, he teaches courses in botany, conservation, horticulture, and environmental design and management. His interest in relating cities to their natural resource base has led him to accept the chairmanship of the Recreational and Cultural Task Force in the Springfield Model Cities Program.

He has recently furnished leadership and ecological guidance in the Springfield effort to save the endangered white cedar bog.

He is currently active nationally in implementing a program for the protection of natural areas on school grounds and is chairman of a project to design a conservation teachers handbook. He is a member of the Board of the American Nature Study Society and is serving in his seventh year on the Massachusetts Advisory Committee for Conservation Education. Dr. Brainerd has recently been appointed chairman of the Sierra Club's Committee on Environmental Quality for the Western Massachusetts Unit.

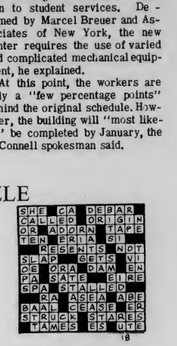
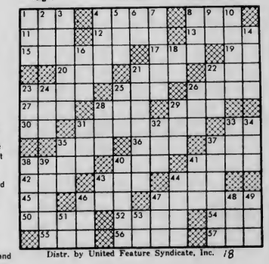
Delay Announced for Center's Completion



The Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center will not be available for use in September as planned. Summer strikes, adverse ground and working conditions and the complexity of the building structure have forced an extension of the completion date to January, according to a spokesman of Daniel O'Connell's Son, Inc.

He cited the effect of last summer's construction workers' strike is the main cause for the prolongment. The men must now do the work in cold weather that should have been done in the fall. Even though the supplies are coming in on time, "winter weather continues to be the major factor."

Other reasons for the delay, he said, are the "structure" of the building and the size of the project itself. The new campus center will have conference rooms and overnight facilities in addition to student services. Designed by Marcel Breuer and Associates of New York, the new center requires the use of varied and complicated mechanical equipment, he explained.



At this point, the workers are only a "few percentage points" behind the original schedule. However, the building will "most likely" be completed by January, the O'Connell spokesman said.

Chem Research Lab Offers Services To Neighboring Five College Community

A central service facility for chemical analysis is saving time and money for researchers at the University of Massachusetts.

To support a rapidly-growing research force working in many departments, the Centralized Microanalytical Services Labora - tory is now operated by the UMass Graduate School's Office of Research Services.

Analysis is a standard chore that goes along with most laboratory research, particularly in chemistry, food technology and the biological sciences. It was formerly done by individual labs at UMass or sent to outside laboratories that specialized in such work.

Last March UMass set up its central lab and hired as full-time director Charles Meade, formerly a microanalyst in industry. Since its inception, the lab has performed approximately 5000 analyses at less than one-half the cost of analysis by outside laboratories.

The facilty also saves time and increases research productivity. Samples were formerly sent to specialized laboratories in this country or as far away as Germany or Japan, with waits of weeks or months common. The central lab at UMass now offers same-day analysis in most instances.

The lab plays an educational role by offering faculty and students an opportunity to learn analytical instrumentations. The facility has another important role in determining the purity of chemicals used in laboratory work.

Centralization of facilities has made it possible to buy sophisticated analytical devices beyond the means of the average small lab. The University's amino acid analyzer, for example, costs in the neighborhood of $20,000 and is one of the few in New England. The lab also has such machines as a gas chromatograph, a carbon-hydrogen analyzer and a six place micro-balance.

The lab pays for itself by charging researchers for its services. Many of these are supported by research grants; those without such support can apply to the University Research Council for a grant-in-aid to cover costs. Income is used to maintain, develop and expand the laboratory.

Besides serving Umass Amherst and Boston, lab services are also available for researchers who request it at Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges. Special samples are analyzed for other institutions on request.

Dr. Dubos Speaks At Smith College On Social Forces

A pioneer in the development of antibiotics, Dr. Rene Jules Dubos, will speak at Smith College March 11.

The microbiologist and experimental pathologist first demonstrated the feasibility of obtaining germ - fighting drugs from microbes over 20 years ago. He will speak at 8 p.m. in Sage Hall on "Biological Freedom and Social Servitude."

A professor at The Rockefeller University in New York City, Dr. Dubos has recently been concerned in a general way, with the effects that environmental forces - both physio-chemical and biological - exert on human life. This has led him to an involvement in the socio-medical problems of underprivileged communities, as well as those created by economic affluence in industrializing countries.

The event will be one of the Elizabeth Cutter Morrow Foundation lectures held here in recent years. The series has brought to the campus as lecturers Sir Herbert Read (1964), and Pulitzer Prize winning novelist William Styron in 1968.

Literature Journal Begins Under UMass English Prof.

The University of Massachusetts has become the new home for the official journal of the Early American Literature Group of the Modern Language Association, according to its new editor, UMass professor of English Dr. Everett Emerson.

Entitled "Early American Literature," the journal is the only one of its kind devoted exclusively to American Literature of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Working with Dr. Emerson as business manager will be Dr. Mason I. Lowance Jr., assistant professor of English.

With the assistance of a grant from the University Graduate School, the journal will publish three times a year. Articles of literary scholarship and criticism, book reviews, special bibliographies and news of the professional activities of the MLA group will be featured.

According to Dr. Emerson, the University has become a headquarters of interest in Early American literature. He is chairman of the UMass Early American Literature Group whose members include Dr. A. W. Plumstead, editor of a recent collection of Massachusetts election sermons; Dr. Donald Junkins, an authority on the poetry of Edward Taylor; and Dr. John Teunissen, a specialist in Anglo-American Puritanism. All are members of the UMass English department.

Since cave drawings of the Ice Age man, people have struggled to communicate. With stories, maps, legends, paper, spoken words of love and fear. This business of communications . . . meaningful dialogue . . . is still chief among today's preoccupations. And it's one we at Western Electric, indeed the entire Bell System have worked at since 1882.

Cable, microwaves and satellites have brought nations face-to-face across continents and oceans. Closed-circuit TV helps educators penetrate barriers of slum and tar-paper shacks. In fact, our whole way of life in America is being enriched simply by advances in phoning.

Whether basic or brilliant, each advance must arrive when it's needed. And each must be economically producible whenever it's needed. At Western Electric we specialize in production and logistics. It's our job in the Bell System ...to help men overcome communication barriers with dependable service at low cost. To this end we need an ever increasing number of new fresh ideas. Your ideas. Ellerbrook Honored on ECAC Weekly All Star Team

UMass Guard First Redman Selected This Season

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

UMass star guard Ray Ellerbrook was honored yesterday by being selected to the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Association (ECAC) weekly all star team for Division one. He is the first Redman performer to be so honored this season.

Ellerbrook, a 6'1 junior, from Hawthorne, N.J., leads team scoring with an 18.4 per game average. He was chosen for the strength of performances against Holy Cross, Iona, and Connecticut in which he scored 21, 16 and 26 points respectively.

The high-scoring lefty, who has hit double figures in all but two games this season, is in some pretty fair company on this week's team.

Leading the remainder of the 12 member list is Niagra scoring machine Calvin Murphy. He and Ellerbrook are joined in the backcourt selections by Jim Hayes of Boston University, and Jeff Petrie of Princeton.

Ellerbrook's selection ends a season-long drought of recognition of UMass performers by the ECAC selectors. The Redmen, who are in the midst of their finest season in years, have received performances from such players as Peter Gayeska, Joe DiSarcina and Ellerbrook which seemed to warrant selection.

REDMAN RANTINGS - The status of DiSarcina for Thursday's game with Navy is still uncertain, but it would appear that the UMass school assist record holder will still be sidelined.....He had not, as of last night returned to practice... That Thursday night battle with Navy should be an unique experience for the Redmen....Playing on the home floor of a service academy is not the most pleasant experience for visitors...Referees seem to overlook an awful lot of hitting when faced by the aroused Midshipmen....Earlier this season Harvard coach Bob Harrison was quoted as saying he would never take his team to Annapolis again after the handling he said his team received.....Maine upset Rhode Island over the weekend, enabling UMass to clinch at least a tie for the Yankee Conference title... And although recognition was slow in coming for the Redmen, it came this weekend.....In a bylined Associated Press story, UMass was mentioned as a possible NCAA tourney bid recipient....The DAILY COLLEGIAN, vainly tried to locate the writer of the article to learn if that writer was working on the premise that the Yankee Conference titlelst gains an automatic bid, a rule that was done away with a year ago....Or maybe the writer knows something a lot of other people don't know....In the same article, mentioned as possible N.I.T. schools were, Fordham, whom UMass beat by 13 and St. Peter's, whom was defeated by Vermont.....Of course also mentioned were Holy Cross and Boston College, schools which UMass has been acquainted with this season.

Gymnasts Bomb Syracuse

The University of Massachusetts Gymnastics Team overwhelmed a former Eastern League power Friday night. A crowd of over 300 watched the gymnasts, in their finest league showing this year, defeat Syracuse U. 152.71 to 92.45.

The Redman took first place in all events except the pommeled horse. They swept the first three positions in floor exercise, parallel bars, and horizontal bar. After the first event, the floor exercise, there was no doubit that UMass was the superior team.

Syracuse however was not without a few bright moments. Ernie Santangelo placed second in long horse vaulting, posting an 8.50 average. George Stalter placed second in the rings with an 8.9 and Tony DeStefano, showing great difficulty, took the pommeled horse event, registering an 8.75.

The depth of the Masssachusetts team proved to be the winning thing. In the floor exercise Redman Joe Reed, Bill McCavley and Dick DelGallo scored 8.55, 8.6, and 8.85 respectively. The floor team has shown this depth all year.

Norm Vexler, with only a few weak spots, posted an 8.5 on the pommeled horse. The third event saw Reed and George Seibert tie at 8.3, and DelGallo show superb control to receive a 9.2, the highest score of the evening.

In the second half UMass poured it on the already tired Orangemen, Steve Cary acelong horse vaulter, posted an 8.92 average for his two vaults. The Redmen swept the parrallel bars as Cary posted a 7.9, Reed a 8.7, and Vexler a 8.85.

The final event of the evening, horizontal bar, has been the gymnasts weakest event all season. Friday night it would have been difficult to convince the Orangemen of this though. It was another UMass sweep. Scott Stover scored 8.45, Reed posted an 8.6, and Seibert came through with a big 8.65, Geoge's best score of the year.

But Frosh Shine on Trip

Grapplers Bow To Strong Penn. Foes

This week-end the UMass wrestling team travelled deep down into the heart of wrestling country to do battle with two of Pennsylvania's finest; East Stroudsburg State College and Wilkes College.

These same two teams will oppose each other this coming Wednesday for prominence and possibly the top spot in Pa. on the mats. Needless to say, it was no Winter Carnival for the wrestlers this week-end.

The entire story is not as disastrous as the overall picture might tend to make it look. E. Stroudsburg dropped the Redmen on Friday night, 30-5 and Wilkes finished up on Saturday night 34-2. However, there were a few close individual battles along the way.

The hero Friday night was Howie Kaplin in the 130 pound class who came through with the Redmen's only victory of the week-end, stopping Dave Ruch, 5-2. Trailing 1-0 going into the third period, Kaplin escaped, picked up a stalling point, worked a takedown and gained a point riding time for the margin of victory.

Tom Young (160) escaped in the third period of his match for a come-from-behind tie, 1-1. Phil Davis and Mike Brauner lost by identical 6-2 scores and Tom Andrewes dropped a 4-1 decision on a takedown late in the match.

Brian Urquhart (145), Bill Keith (167) and George Zguris (191) lost decisions. Nick DiDomenico (123) started the match and Glenn Cummins (HWT) ended it identically, each in the second period of their bouts. DiDomenico enjoyed a 3-2 lead over Ted Pease before being caught on his back at 2:54. Cummins, wrestling Rich Schumacher, fifth in the nation among the heavies last year, fought bravely until being pancaked at 4:40.

Saturday night saw the Redmen run into a Wilkes team that was looking for revenge after having been upset earlier that week by Lycoming College, 16-15. Tom Andrewes was the savior on for Coach Barr's forces by escaping twice and gaining a tie with Ron Fritts. Fritts had compiled an 8-1 record as a heavyweight so far this year.

DiDomenico again initiated the UMass attack with a quick takedown and an enjoyable 2-0 lead. However, he dropped the next 13 points to undefeated Andy Matviak (10-0) before being trapped at 5:52. Wilkes took the next two bouts by shutting out Kaplin, 11-0 and Davis 5-0.

Brian Urquhart (145) took a 1-0 lead on Dennis Verzera and won the second period 3-2, but got tied up in a cross-body ride and dropped an 11-4 decision. Brauner (152) continued to display the Massachusetts aggressiveness by scoring a quick takedown and 2-0 lead before being reversed and cradled by once-beaten Gary Willets at 1:13.

Captain Tom Young ran into Wilkes captain and small college National Champion Joe Wiendl. After the first period, Young surprised the Wilkes crowd with a 4-3 lead; he held on to a 5-5 tie through two periods but ran into trouble in the third, dropping the match, 14-6. Bill Keith lost by default in 39 seconds. Andrewes (177) then got the Redmen on the scoreboard and Glenn Cummins was flattened by Tom Grant, a transfer from Navy at 3:42 to finish out the week-end.

Coach Tonner Brosky's freshman wrestling squad continued to show overwhelming power, even while battling such strong wrestling schools as Wilkes and E. Stroudsburg who were using JV teams.

The leader on the tour was 137 pounder, Clay Jester. Jester disposed of John Armato at 5:47. Until that point Clay held only a 6-4 lead. At Wilkes he took a decision from John Podolsky, 13-2. Shelley Goldberg (123) won his only match at Wilkes, 11-0 over Bill Lukridge. Rod Loiselle (177), Carl Dambman (HWT) and Bob Parent (123) were the only other frosh grapplers who were undefeated.

Loiselle tied at E. Stroudsburg 9-9 and defeated Rick Phillips of Wilkes, 6-2. Dambman won by default over Cliff Bennet of E. Stroudsburg in 1:20, and tied Wilkes's Leo Roan 3-3. Roan had previously defeated Derwood James (191) in a three minute match, 3-2. Parent tied his only match, 3-3 at East Stroudsburg.

Other winners on the trip besides James, who scored a pin at E. Stroudsburg in 4:08, were Dave Reynolds (130), Larry Piccioli (160) Kent Mignochi (167), and Jimmy Godkin (152). Godkin had the only other fall for the frosh, winning in just 1:43.

The team score was 30-10 at East Stroudsburg and 17-12 at Wilkes not including the three minute matches wrestled by Dambman and James. Individually the freshmen were 10-8-3 with three falls, one default and not having one Redman pinned.

Trackmen Edged by N.U.

By DAVE EVANS
Staff Reporter

The UMass Redman threw a real scare into the Northeastern Track team Saturday at Cabot Cage in Boston, while losing 59-45. The underdog Redman, expected by many to be an easy victime of the Huskies, hung tough throughout the meet and refused to quit.

UMass forced the outcome of the meet down to the last two events of the afternoon, the 1000 yd. run and the mile relay. Northeastern needed two places in the 1000 and a victory in the relay to take the meet. The Huskies' depth however in these final two events was too great for UMass to overcome.

Key points responsible for keeping the Redman tied with Northeastern were collected by Ed Arcaro in the weight events, Mark Kefever and Gerry Spellman in the hurdles, Walt Mayo and Dave Marble in the dash, and Ron Wayne in the distance races.

Arcaro established a personal best in the 35 lb. weight throw with a heave of 53 ft. 1/4 in., missing first place by 1/2 in. Mayo was strongly challenged by Marble in winning the 50 for the second meet in a row.

As in the 50, it was 1-2 UMass in the hurdles as Soph Spellman showed improved form in taking second behind the school record holder Lefever in another close decision.

Wayne turned in the strongman performance of the day in placing second in a fast mile and then coming back to take the 2 mile in the very quick time of 9:23.3 on a slow track. Running s trong second was Paul Hoss, whose injured knee seems to be fully healed.

The Redmen are now looking forward to their next meet of the indoor season against traditional rival UConn on Tuesday night at Storrs. Both teams have similar strengths and many head to head battles are expected, especially in the middle and long distance races. Coach O'Brien is expecting seniors Bob Hasselbaum, Diego Gonzalez, Charlie Lang and Hoss to lead the team in these events.

In the Freshman meet on Saturday, the Little Redmen were defeated by the Northeastern frosh, by the score of 67-32. The UMass frosh also travel to Storrs on Tuesday as both the varsity and frosh look for their first win of the season.

Arab Commandos Attack Israeli Jet In Switzerland
Jordan Based Guerrilla Group Takes Responsibility

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) - Arab commandos, striking from behind a runway snowbank, riddled an Israeli El Al jetliner with submachine gun fire as it was taxing for a takeoff Tuesday night. Six persons on the plane were wounded and an Arab raider was shot dead in a counterblow.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, an Arab guerrilla group based in Jordan, claimed "full responsibility" for the attack which was carried out by three men and a woman.

This is the same guerrilla organization that took credit for the shooting attack on an El Al Airliner at Athens airport last December and the hijacking of an El Al plane over the Mediterranean last summer.

Swiss police said one of the raiders was killed by an Israeli security officer who slipped off the stricken Boeing 720 and caught the commandos by surprise. Three other attackers, including a girl, were arrested by airport guards in a swift counterattack.

Among the 17 passengers and 10 crewmen aboard the Israeli plane bound for Tel Aviv was Gideon Rafael, director general of the Israeli Foreign Office. He was unhurt.

Six persons aboard the aircraft were sounded, however, two seriously. One was a trainee pilot shot through the chest.

In Amman, the Front for the Liberation of Palestine, issued a communique contending that the attack was a reprisal for "brutality and torture" committed by Israeli authorities against Arab civilians in occupied territory.

The communique, apparently prepared before the attack was carried out, said the plane had been "destroyed." It identified members of the raiding party, including the girl, a 25-year-old teacher from Gaza.

The raiders sprung their ambush as the jetliner taxied to the main runway. When it was about 60 yards away, they opened up with submachinegun fire, aiming chiefly at the cockpit. The plane came to a halt. About 50 bullets pierced the airliner.

Hand grenades and at least one bomb also were hurled at the plane but failed to go off.

A man, later identified as an Israeli security officer, slipped off the plane during the attack and ran for the attackers. He shot one of the guerrillas in the head.

Airport guards, alerted by radio from the stricken airplane's cockpit, closed in on the guerrillas and took the other three into custody.

In New York, U. N. Secretary-Genreal U Thant condemed the attack and expressed hope that no Israeli reprisal would follow, such as occurred after the Arab commando attack on El Al plane in Athens. In that attack, an Israeli businessman was killed. Two Arabs arrested for the Athens shooting await trial on charges of premediated murder and interfering with international communications.

The Israelis responded with an attack on Beirut's International airport in late December. They had accused Lebanon of providing shelter for the Arab guerrillas.

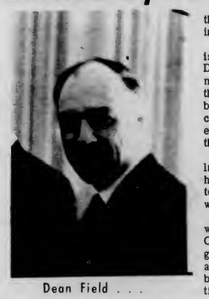
Dean Field Discusses Demonstration
No Action Planned by General Court

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Dean of Students William F. Field was the guest at the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council Coffee Hour yesterday in the Student Union. Most of the discussion centered around the recent Dow Demonstration and was attended by several people who participated in the sit-in.

Gil Salk, executive secretary of the sponsoring group of the coffee hour, started the questions by saying that he felt the major issue of the demonstration was an end to military industrial recruitment on campus.



Dean Field said, "There has not been much in the way of substantive discussions," and the problem of the administration in dealing with the demonstrators focused on having to "respond to the demand of a small group" on which the rest of the community " has strong feelings."

In referring to the demand specifically, he said, "It is an issue which descended on the campus, and not many members of the faculty had had time to think about it."

In answering a question about the University's role in placement, Dean Field said that it did not make any difference whether the placement office was in town or not because the University would still be required to forward a student's credentials. "The issue is: do the majority of students want the Service?" he said.

Dean Field went on to say that he is still in favor of having someone from Dow come to this campus to debate, and he would agree to having a representative from Olin-Matheson debate, who will be recruiting soon, "but I would not make it a condition to their coming to campus to recruit," he said. He also suggested that the Ad Hoc Committee should have gone before the Student Senate and debated the issue there.

When asked if any attempt had been made to discuss the issues with the demonstrators prior to calling the police, he said, " They (the demonstrators) were not discussing. Members of the group tried to, but others shut them up."

Dean Field . . .

At a meeting yesterday morning of the academic deans and student personnel people, Dean Field said other alternatives rather than the state police were being discussed in the event of another demonstration.

When asked if the demonstrators were really disrupting things in the Administration Building, Dean Field replied that they were. "Some of the clerks were scared, and they were worried about the students' records if there should be some violence," he said. "We couldn't have let them stay in there all night because only six campus police officers would have been available."

In explaining the position of the demonstrators, Sidney Finehirch said they are trying to make the University into an educational place and "if this comes about, napalm and that stuff will be out."

By stating that they would stay until arrested, Finehirsh said the demonstrators were showing that they were willing to give something up.

Salk and Finehirsh also said that some attempt should be made to divorce members from the monolithic structure of "the administration" in order that the students can see them as individuals.

In the future, when a group is considering a demonstration Dean Field said they should make some attempt to bring the administration or a member of the faculty into their discussions, and if nothing is gained, "dismiss them and do all the secret planning you want."

In not attending an SDS meeting prior to the demonstration, he said, "Maybe I miscalculated the privacy that this group wanted."

By having an open forum which was what the Ad Hoc Committee had originally sought, Dean Field said, "Originally this would have exposed both sides" (the administration's and the committee's).

Black Folk Comedy Uses Caricatures To Satirize South

By JEAN McANDREWS
Staff Reporter

A black folk comedy, a type of play new to the UMass campus, will be presented Friday and Saturday nights, February 21 and 22, at 8:30 in Bartlett Auditorium. The play, "Purlie Victorius," was written by a black author and features black actors in some of the leading roles.

The playwright, Ossie Davis, uses exaggerated, stereotypic characters to satirize the old Southern way of life. The action takes place on a rural cotton plantation, and some of the "caricatures" include the owner of the plantation, his son, and a Negro preacher.

The cast is integrated, and will include University of Massachusetts students, students from other schools, and several others, including Nat King Cole's daughter.

The play, originally presented on Broadway in 1961, is a master's thesis production, and there is no admission charge. Seating is limited however, and tickets can be picked up at the ticket office.

Restless Campuses

Guard Leaves UWisconsin; Penn State Lists Demands

By COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Dissident sutdents at the University of Wisconsin returned to classes Wednesday, waiting to see what the faculty will do about their demands.

The National Guard, mobilized last week during the threat of campus disruptions, began pulling out Tuesday evening after the student leaders called off their strike.

Sympathetic students were asked to discuss the issues in their classes and to seek support for a possible continuation of the strike At least one professor refused a student permission to speak. The student refused to leave, and he was reportedly arrested.

The University administration says it plans to take action against students arrested during the strike, but has not been specific. Suspension is a likely punishment.

At the faculty meeting Wednesday, a committee on race relations is scheduled to present a report on a proposal to establish a black studies department, one of the students' main demands.

Predictions of dwindling support for the strike were borne out Tuesday night when less that 400 students showed up for a rally. Tactics, though, escalated Tuesday, as students took their protest from the streets to the classrooms. Fire alarms were pulled, classes disrupted.

Law students at Howard University in Washington, D.C. occupied the school's main building Tuesday, demanding equal participation with the faculty in decisions affecting the curriculum and personnel of the school. Student s had boycotted classes since late last week.

A spokesman for the steering committee for the occupying students said they would begin talks with the law school faculty as soon as the teachers are ready.

New Law Dean Mrs. Patricia Harris convened a meeting of the law faculty as of Tuesday afternoon. Results of the meeting evidently did not meet with student approval.

Only law students and "concerned alumni" will be admitted to the building, according to the students.

The president of the undergraduate liberal arts student government threatened Tuesday afternoon that neither D. C. police nor National Guardsmen would be tolerated on the Howard Campus.

Freshmen medical students at Howard continued their demands for reform within that school, citing archaic methods of instruction and equipment as main issues.

At North Carolina A & T University in Greensboro, an assistant professor described as incompetent in literature distributed at a recent protest filed a $520,000 criminal libel suit against two student government officers.

Students at Pennsylvania State University have submitted a list of seven "non - negotiable" demands to the administration, promising further action if nothing is done by Monday. Meanwhile, four students await a preliminary hearing on charges of "selling and distributing obscene material" in the boroughs (town) of statecollege.

The student demands, issued by the 15-member steering committee to reform the university, include: an end to academically accredited ROTC, a ban on military recruiting on campus, elimination of women's curfew and required living in dorms, and immediate implementation of the Penn State black students' demands for, among others, admission of more blacks.

Obscenity peddling charge is a result of distribution of a new underground paper, "Watertunnel." Initially banned by the administration, " Watertunnel" was sold in downtown state college by three of its editors, the head of the Penn State students for a democratic society and two others.

California Will Sue Oil Companies And Gov't For $1.3 Billion Damages

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The California attorney general's office said Tuesday it will sue Union Oil Co. and the federal government for $1.3 billion in property damage caused by oil leaks in the Santa Barbara Channel.

A $500 million claim will be filed with the Department of Interior in Los Angeles and an $800 million damage suit will be filed in Santa Barbara Superior Court against Union Oil Co. and other firms, a spokesman said at a news conference.

He said the other defendants would be Texaco, Inc., Mobil Oil Corp. and Gulf Oil Co., partners in a lease of federal land in the channel.

Charles A. O'Brien, chief deputy, said the actions will charge negligence by the Interior Department and the oil firms.

He said the city and county of Santa Barbara and the city of Carpinteria are joining in the actions, undertaken on behalf of all public agencies affected by the leak.

Meanwhile, Union Oil started work to begin production from a leaking underground oil pool to relieve pressures that have spewed a new slick into the polluted channel.

A spolesman for Union Oil Co. said a previously plugged well would be perforated by explosives at the level of a deposit of oil about 250 feet below the ocean floor.

He said the action was authorized by the Department of the Interior, which earlier suspended drilling and production from federal leases in the channel after a 20-by-40-mile slick formed in mid-January.

That 250,000-gallon slick came through a crack in the earth from a well some six miles off shore.

The leak from that well was partially plugged with drilling mud and cement.

It is one of these four which will be perforated by explosives, the spokesman said, to provide a controllable vent for oil and gas pressures in the underground pool.

Seepage from fissures has reached an estimated 2,000 gallons a day.

Much of the original slick, which blackened beaches along 30 miles of coastline north and south of Santa Barbara, has disappeared - dispersed by chemicals, sucked up by pump boats and absorbed by straw which has been raked up and hauled to dumps.

Conservationist Speaks

Artificial Environment Costs Loss in Variety

BY SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

"It seems as though we are trying to make everything alike, that we are carrying simplicity too far. Our national purpose appears to be a monoculture."

This was the opinion of conservationist Dr. John W. Brainerd on the increasing growth of an artificial, technological environment at the expense of the natural one.

He spoke last night on "Education for a Quality Environment," as the first lecturer in a series sponsored by the Distinguished Ecologists Program for the Western Massachusetts Unit of the Atlantic Chapter of the Sierra Club.

"We've got to do something about our pattern of land use and construction," he said, because people go ahead and do things to our environment without thinking of the needs and wishes of others, or of the outcome of their actions.

He illustrated the need of conservation by showing variety of slides contrasting the natural and man-made environments.

Dr. Brainerd stated that he feels we need more variety in our lives --a variety that isn't only artificially created because "extensive monoculture is biologically unsound."

"A lot of people say our children have too much variety in their environment," he said, but none of this variety is "real". As a result, children try to substitute for this deficiency. Often what they substitute are destructive acts.

"Education must foster the desire for a variety of environments," he explained. "We need variety for a high quality environment." He discussed the roles of colleges and universities, as well as secondary schools, in achieving this goal of conservation.

He concluded his lecture by pointing to the importance of the Sierra Club in keeping people aware of the increasing need of conservation of natural resources.

S. Vietnamese Feel Nixon Meeting Useful

PARIS (AP) - Ambassador Dang Lam of South Vietnam said Tuesday night he feels it would be "useful" if he could meet President Nixon on matters concerning the peace talks when the President visits Paris the end of this month.

The impression here, however, is that such a meeting was not in the cards. Lam said, in fact, he was not sure Nixon would have the time for such a meeting.

A meeting between Nixon and the SouthVietnamese is not entirely ruled out, although some sources said it might entail some difficulties with France, the host country for the Vietnam peace talks. There seems little question but that the South Vietnamese delegation is anxious for an exchange of views with the President and was actively working to bring it about.

Lam's comment came after an hour-long meeting with U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and Ambassador Cyrus R Vance, the retiring deputy chief of the delegation who is leaving Wednesday.

Evidently military questions figured in their meeting, since one of those who was present was Gen. Vinh Loc, who has just arrived to be chief military adviser to the Saigon delegation.

Lam and the Americans, however, described the meeting as "routine," a working session in preparation for Thursday's regular four-way session at the International Conference Center.

Lam said one of the purposes of Tuesday's meeting was to introduce Loc to Lodge. Loc has been chief of military contingency planning under President Nguyen Van Thieu in Saigon. He would, should matters progress far enough in Paris, be responsible for preparing the way for cease-fire arrangements.

There was little prospect, however, of movement in the talks for a long time. Lam was asked if he contem, lated bringing up anything in the way of new proposals Thursday. He discounted the possibility.

It pays to advertise in the Daily Collegian.

Mass. Legislature Votes For Sargent's Salary Bill

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Legislature Tuesday decided not to bring Gov. Francis W. Sargent's veto of its $12,500 salary bill to a vote, and voted instead for the $11,400 level Sargent said he would approve.

The House voted 133-90 to approve a bill setting salaries $1,400 above last year's $10,000. Expenses would go from the $900 of last year to $1,200.

The move was regarded as a political victory for the new Republican governor, who last week vetoed the $12,500 salary on the grounds that "our state is in a financial crisis.'

Caucuses by both Democrats and Republicans preceded the House vote. A hurriedly drafted bill admitted under suspension of rules, carried the names of both Republican and Democratic leaders.

The new bill would give lawmakers a total of $12,600 in salaries and expenses of $1,700 more than they received last year.

Sargent told the Legislature in his veto message he would approve a 14 per cent increase instead of the 25 per cent raise, adding he also would approve the new expense figure.

Rep. Harrison Chadwick, R-Winchester, criticized the compromise, reminding members that large majorities in both branche supported the $12,500 level.

White the members voted, a total of about 700 state employees were in the building, marching en masse to visit legislators and the governor to back up their demands for a 20 per cent pay increase.

Sargent had told the legislators he could not approve a 25 per cent increase for them while limiting the 50,000 state employees to the 9 to 14 per cent raise which he had set aside in his record $1.55 billion budget.

Dartmouth to Examine Possibility of Co-Eds

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) - The Executive Committee of the Dartmouth College Board of Trustees has accepted a recommendation that it make a detailed examination of the possibility of accepting women undergraduates at the all-male Ivy League school.

The recommendation was advanced several weeks ago at a Dartmouth conference attended by representatives of the administration, trustees, student body and faculty.

The committee said the study would have to take into account such things as feasibility, present and projected educational facilities and programs, housing and boarding, financial resources and what was termed "those important intangibles of heritage and place that must be taken into account in planning any institution's future."

NYU, Columbia Law Schools Sponsor Minority Group Pre-Law Institute

A pre-law Institute for minority group students will be held this summer, June 16 through July 25, at New York University School of law. The program will be sponsored by the Council of Legal Education Opportunity, Columbia Law School and NYU School of Law.

The purpose of the Institute will be to prepare sixty minority group students for admission to law schools in September, 1969. Applicants should either be graduating from college in the spring of 1969 or should already be college graduates. A program of courses will be offered by members of the faculties of Columbia Law School and New York University School of Law. The courses will include ASPECTS OF LEGAL PROCESS, LEGAL REASONING, LAW AND POVERTY, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL WRITING. Every effort will be made to assist students who complete the Institute program to gain admission to law schools though no guaranty can be offered. Accommodation will be provided at Hayden Hall, New York University School of Law's residence hall on Washington Square. Most of the classes will be held at New York University School of Law, though one day a week will be spent at Columbia Law School. Students' living expenses will be paid during the Institute and a small stipend will be paid partly to compensate for loss of summer earnings. It is expected that students who complete the Institute and are admitted to law school will where necessary receive financial assistance while at law school, though the award of financial aid for students accepted at law school will not depend upon admission to the Institute.

The final date for receipt of applications for admission to the Institute is March 24. Requests for application forms should be sent to: Professor Graham Hughes, Director, Legal Education Opportunity Institute, New York University School of Law, Room 413, Washington Square South, New York, N.Y. 10003.

Did you like beer the first time you tasted it?

A lot of people say no. They say beer is one of those good things you cultivate a taste for . . . like olives, or scotch, or kumquats.

Maybe. But we think it makes a difference which brand of beer we're talking about.

We think Budweiser is an exception to this "you've gotta get used to it" rule. It's so smooth. (You see, no other beer is Beechwood Aged; it's a costly way to brew beer, and it takes more time. But it works.)

So whether you're one of the few who has never tried beer, or a beer drinker who suddenly feels the urge to find out why so many people enjoy Budweiser, we think you'll like it.

From the very first taste.

Budweiser. is the King of Beers.
(But you know that.)

The Unity of Necessity

In this age of turmoil, confrontation, and disunity it is a rather odd phenomenon to find a group of persons unified and together, striving for similar goals and ends through common, unified effort. Though rare such groups do exist and function within the framework of present day institutions and are of particular importance in maintaining at least a minimum degree of cohesiveness and unity among people.

Probably the best example of such a group can be found right here on our own campus in the Afro-American organization. These student run, college based black student organizations can be found at almost every major college and university in the country and presently number into the hundreds with new clubs being formed everyday at schools formerly without them. These groups are composed of, by, and for black students and are usually recognized as student extra curricular organizations. Their purpose is first of all unity. It is of utmost importance that black students be organized and unified as to standing and purpose, for without unification the laying of groundwork is next to impossible. So, unity is the key purpose, and most of these organizations make an effort to contact and draw into themself all of the black students attending the particular school to which they are connected.

After unity comes self-education. It is important that black students know their position and standing in regards to the university, society in general, and to the black community. This is done through discussions, self-awareness sessions, and through reading black literature. The Afro-American organizations do an important and an essential job here in literally completing the education of the black student in preparing him for life as it is outside the university. This is something that maybe white students should consider doing for themselves since our schools appear in many instances to be lacking in practical educational curriculum designed to bring students out of the test tube and into the reality of practicality. Maybe we will eventually see the rise of Anglo-American organizations though such might be cumbersome owing to the extremely large size of its membership.

A third purpose of these organizations is that of change and progress both on the university level and on a broader societal level. What immediately comes to mind here are curriculum changes and additions, changes in university recruitment and admissions, scholarship and financial aid funds, and certain other changes and advances involving the university and society. And there we have it! The first two points being referred to the group itself, and the last being referred outside the group. It seems only logical that the organization should first of all be together itself before it sets about to do something outside itself. Maybe other organizations can take an example from the Afro-American societies and set about getting themselves together before attempting to put something else together. Two attempts at self-development and one successful attempt elsewhere would seem to me to be a better method than three stabs in the air.

Campus Comment

No Answers

To the editor:

After listening and watching, I have no answers to the sit-in and other demonstrations conducted on this campus; but only questions arise.

Are there really open lines of communication if the Deans, Dow, and the students must go through such convulsions to obtain a forum?

Should a demand for personnel from other parts of the country be tempered to meet time and weather limitations?

Is trust shown by having the entire security force and locked building doors confront the demonstrations?

Would the sororities receive open arms in the Student Union if they sang, instead of sisterhood, the themes of liberty, equality, and peace?

Will people only reinforce their beliefs after the arrests?

Plagerism

To the editor:

Plagerism, O plagerism, why are thou?
Thou art a mote in the mind's eye!

This seems to be the feeling of a great many teachers and more specifically, English teachers.

They say plagerism is a problem that has to be solved either by promise not to do it again or fear of expulsion if it continues. This does not seem to be an adequate solution and is typical of the communication gap or what I would call the understanding gap. In this way the true problem can only be suppressed and what good is this if it will only occur again and again. Why can't the teachers read between the lines as they so often tell us to do? Is plagerism the problem? No, I do not think so. It is only another reaction to the problem that is confronting society and threatening the future existence of the university as a functional body. People must be aware that so many of these outbreaks are results of the destructive pressures of society especially upon the youth of today.

We want to live our lives, not some prescribed pattern laid down by others as the best way to get along in society. Who gives a damn about society?

We are people, individual people, capable of reason and endowed with a great deal of curiosity about life. There could be a happy world if these abilities were allowed to flourish. However, they have been drowned with prerequisites for subjects, majors, jobs, and life in general. Aren't we capable of living in peace with each other? Certainly many or most adults do not think so with all of their forced guidance and under all this pressure, youth seems to be validating their opinion of our inadequacy, at least in the adults' point of view. However, we are only proving that we are living, individual people with a desire to live life as each individual thinks it should be led. We are still living and haven't yet succumbed to the pressure of society to become an interchangeable part, discarded as it becomes old and used. No, we are objecting to a living death and whatever manifestation this objection takes, should not be looked upon as a problem but as a reaction to a deeper and more destructive problem; the suppression of the individual mind.

Open Forum

To the editor:

Dow Chemical's refusal to participate in an open forum on military industrial recruiting, and the use of Napalm in Viet Nam, a forum sponsored by the "Ad Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow", and sanctioned by the administration, should not come as a great surprise. For Dow to have participated in such a debate would have burdened it with the awesome task of proving that murder is justifiable. A possible argument that Dow might have used in the forum is that murder is justifiable in time of war. However, the counter-argument runs that the war in Viet Nam is not justifiable, an argument which has been given so much support that it has driven our last President out of office. Therefore, if the war in Viet Nam is not justifiable, then the murdering of men, women, and children by the effective use of Dow's Napalm in this war is not justifiable.

And so I ask, should a murderer be allowed to recruit on the campus of the University of Massachusetts? And before any student actually considers applying for a position with Dow Chemical, he should ask himself if he would like to be an accomplice to a (mass) murder.

Dissension

To the editor:

Thursday night, while many snow-sculpturing students were justifying their inebriation in the name of school spirit, a small number of "dissident radicals" were evicted from one of their tax-supported buildings by helmeted state troopers - an action done in the name of justice.

A necessary act of force to protect a University building . . .?

Protection from what? From concerned students, students interested and courageous enough to question standard University policy when that policy conflicts with their moral code? Protection from students who, in the neo-Christian era would merit the name of martyr? Protection from students who, regardless of the questionable irrationality of their demands were stalwart enough to face the consequences of making these demands?

Some crimes are acceptable. It appears that courageous dissension is one that is not.

All-day Retreat on Saturday to be Held By "Valentine's Day Defense Committee"

In an attempt to focus the energies aroused by the arrest of 33 people on the eve of Valentine's Day, an all-day retreat will be held this Saturday. This conference - sponsored by the Valentine's Day Defense Committee - has, according to spokesman Rick Feldman, two purposes.

"First, we want to deal with the role of the "radical" within the university environment. That is, how can one be a sensitive, creative, and independent individual and, at the same time, remain politically and morally relevant at this University?

"And second, we want to bring together students and faculty who feel this dilemma to talk with each other and begin to deal with the problem."

Using an informal and open format, this conference will have panel discussions and workshops ranging from "the Responsibility of the Intellectual" to "Drugs and Education." It will involve as resource persons faculty and students committed to changing the nature of the University and the society in which it functions.

Beginning at 10 a.m. and running all day, the conference will end with a party to raise money for the V.D. Defense Fund. Trying to break down the artificial barriers between faculty and students, Saturday's activities will, according to Feldman, "lay the foundations for the development of a real academic community, as well as for meaningful social change."

LOOK Details Disputes Over Campus Journalism

On college campuses across the nation controversies are erupting over the type of journalism being practiced by the editors of student newspapers.

An article in the new issue of LOOK Magazine details the disputes, usually between the editors and college administrations, over the proper role of the newspapers and the type of article being printed.

At Purdue University in Indiana, the editor of the student newspaper was summarily fired after several articles were published which contained words considered "dirty," and two attacks on the university president.

The editor's dismissal split the college community into opposing factions with the threat of a boycott of classes by both students and faculty members, the LOOK article reported.

At Grand Valley State College in Michigan, the student editor was arrested on an obscenity charge and held over night in jail until his $5,000 bail could be raised, with college officials temporarily suspending publication of the newspaper.

"Dirty words" are not the only issue which have brought the student publications into conflict with college and public authorities, the magazine said.

At Wayne State University in Detroit, a militant group of black radicals, who call themselves "revolutionaries," according to LOOK, took over control of the student newspaper and turned it into what its former adviser described as "not a newspaper, but paranoid, racist pamphleteering."

Squaw Talk

Our Girl with Glamour

BY MARGIE SHORT

A petite soft-spoken brunette coed is now a candidate for GLAMOUS MAGAZINE'S Top Ten College Girl Contest. She is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, a Reveler, the advertising assistant for MADEMOISELLE MAGAZINE on campus and an exchange student to New Mexico last semester. Oh, yes, she was also Homecoming Queen for 1966. Her name is Robin Sanders and she is an English major hailing from Leominster, Mass.

Robin made some comments recently about her interests in fashion, about the contest, and about her future plans. An avid seamstress, Robin designed and constructed each of her three winning outfits for the contest.

She selected a teal blue and beige suede hip-hugger skirt, a beige crepe blouse and paisely scarf ensemble for the casual campus wear category. Robin said she had seen "so much of the same wool and suede this fall that she wanted to get something different." She happened to notice a remnant piece of suede in a Chinatown fabric outlet from which she designed the skirt.

Robin also bought the "shocking pink" chinchilla cloth in the same outlet. It had been just a "ruined remnant" but Robin had it cleaned and made her date-time coat-dress from it. Robin combined the "shocking pink" chinchilla cloth coatdress and matching floppy brim hat with over-the-knee black patent boots, and matching bag for a real "shocking" look of tailored chic.

The most outstanding of Robin's choices was the elegant formal wear ensemble. It was flowing floor-length moss green velvet culottes with jeweled brocade cummerbund, a matching velvet bolero jacket, and a mint green satin longsleeved blouse. This classic ensemble is guaranteed to turn heads and evoke admiring glances at any concert or formal occasion.

Previously known as the Best Dressed College Girl Contest, the title was changed to Top Ten College Girl Contest this year. The change in title reflects a shift in emphasis this year to campus or community leadership qualities as well as on the usual poise and individuality in clothing tastes.

Robin Sanders models formal wear ensemble.

When asked why she thought that GLAMOUR had made this change in title and air, Robin replied that "It doesn't sound so superficial. Anybody can have nice clothes. But this way it's more all around, including other campus activities. Besides, it sounds better."

Robin would like to utilize her background in English at UMass to write advertising in either retailing or merchandising. Robin has been taking as many writing and journalism courses as possible while she is at UMass to help her with her career choice.

The next step for Robin is to submit a five hundred word essay to GLAMOUR MAGAZINE describing her interests. More importantly to the GLAMOUR MAGAZINE judges however, are Robin's reasons for her committments to these interests as typified by GLAMOUR'S new "Modern renaissance woman" concept.

Are You Attired of it All?

This past weekend plush Curry Hicks Cage was the scene of gala concerts attended by hundreds of fashionably attired young people. Judging from the hordes of fashion plates which appeared, sitting, row on row like great bands of Christians on their way to the lions, it would seem that the key word in dress today is "droop."

A marvelous new step in reaching the ideal of informality, droop seems to have made a great stride forward - it has now come beyond the scrimmage football field, beyond the early morning class level, yes, even beyond the happy haggard housewife image.

Droop has manifested itself at one of the greatest social events of the year, and in such unique and devastating forms that these modish young people may well credit themselves with having given the already popular trend a daring and darling twist.

In marvelous array there appeared the droop felt hat, the droop army jacket, the droop sweatshirt and the droop dungaree bells, not to mention the droop earring, droop poison ring and droop eyelash.

As an extra unexpected attraction there was the "draped droop," which featured the tank dress (with the tank in it of course), the Nehru, the Pharoah, and the Guru, something akin to the Voodoo, which consisted of a hooded cape which trailed becomingly over the wire rims and alternately between the shins and kneecaps of its wearer. It was set off perfectly by a hounds tooth, extended on an Indian beaded noose wound several times around the neck and waist and bouncing somewhere around mid-thigh.

Had there been prizes for accord in the dress of individual couples it would have been impossible to choose the winners. In the running would have been one lovely boy with a striped tie, tattarsal jacket and impeccably glowing wing-tips, and his date, dressed conservatively but well, in her sleeveless burlap and fishnet tank dress, pink Maribeau feather boa, Puerto-Rican fence climbers (very attractive and practical too, considering the terrain around here) and an avocado reptile skin cigarette holder, a minimum of twenty-four inches long, left over from something like the Grapes of Wrath Party in Swiss Colony, California during the seige of the mafia in nineteen thirty-five.

Also in the running would be the delicate young lady who appeared in baby shoes, spit curls and sleeveless purple A-line dress, which blended becomingly into the hue of her skin, and indeed lent an air of unity to the whole audience, cast radiantly in various shades of bland lavendar, and her date, a chubby counterpart of the Cisco Kid, complete with black sombrero and pom-poms and white gathered peasant blouse with green and orange embroidery on its puffed sleeves.

Last but not least as the cliche goes, there was the luscious young man in tapered bells and white satin shirt with French cuffs and a subtle ascot, who arrived with the young lady in pigtails, work shirt and white crepe slacks tucked into boots featured in Gunga Din forty-five years ago.

The new dress can be commended for its practicality, informality and comfortability. Man seems to have acquired, over the years, the ability to adapt to anything, even it seems, to the minus nine degree temperature of the cage and to its luxurious seating accomodations. We would also agree, that a person's clothing reflects his character, and we may well be proud that the qualities of imagination and originality, whether reflected in the droop, the drape or the drip, are so obviously rampant in our society today.

Fort Lauderdale City Manager Warns and Welcomes Visitors

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome you to our City and sincerely hope that your stay will be a pleasant and memorable experience.

In order that neither you, nor the City incur any unpleasantness, the following suggestions and policies have been instituted and will be adhered to unequivocally.

1. Do not come to Fort Lauderdale unless you definitely have a confirmed housing reservation. Our policies and ordinances prohibit sleeping in automobiles and/or sleeping in the open. Campers or trailers are not permitted to park on the beach. If this type vehicle is to be used as living quarters it must be parked in a trailer park specifically licensed for this purpose.

2. All the laws that govern the conduct of the individual will be enforced. A person must be 21 years of age in order to purchase or consume alcohol. Persons guilty of intoxication, (it should be noted that drinking in the open is not permitted) narcotics, use of false identification, creating unnecessary noise, or any other form of disorderly conduct and any other unlawful act, will be arrested and prosecuted. Violations of the traffic code will result in apprehension and prosecution of the offender.

3. Parents and school officials of any and all students arrested during this period will be officially notified.

Students should be aware of the fact that persons who are arrested and convicted on any charge will have established a permanent and sometimes criminal record against themselves which could have a detrimental influence later in life.

It is the feeling of the City Commission, this office and all of the City Departments involved that if your conduct while in Fort Lauderdale is governed by the aforementioned guidelines, then your vacation will indeed be a pleasant one.

Arcon Seeks New Members

Arcon, the University Guide Service, now in its 4th year, will choose twenty-two new guides for the Academic year 1969 - 1970, during the month of March.

Arcon, sponsored by the Intra-fraternity Council, provides guided tours of campus to perspective students and dignitaries, conducts high school guest days, and serves as guest speakers in high schools in the state.

The new guides will be selected from members of the fraternity system who are in the class of 1971. Applications can be obtained from present arcons and fraternity presidents. These should be submitted by Feb. 24 to Norm Allard in Phi Mu Delta fraternity.

Interviews will be held March 8 and 9 conducted by members of the administration and the present guides.

Students Satisfied With Courses at UMass

Students are satisfied with instructors and courses at UMass according to Dennis M. Mullen a junior who made the study as an English project.

The survey was taken to determine whether or not group size affects student satisfaction. The results showed that students in smaller classes tend to be more satisfied with courses than students in the larger classes. Second, and more importantly, it showed that students in both large and small classes are satisfied with the courses they have taken here.

These findings were expected but proof of the satisfaction is reassuring to the philosophy of the large schools, where each student is a number.

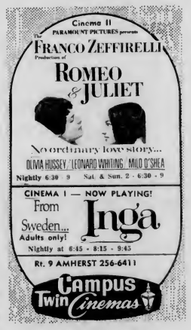
A random sample of 50 students was selected and 100 per cent of these answered the questions in relation to the large classes but only 28 per cent responded to those of the small class. In answering each question students were asked to check the appropriate response of a 10 item scale which ranged from "Extremely Dissatisfied" to "Extremely Satisfied". For each question an average score was obtained to represent the degree of satisfaction for the group as a whole.

The average grade for each question was 5 or above, and this result was the basis for the statement of the general student satisfaction.

The questions related to general satisfaction, expression in class, adequate coverage of material and time devoted to answering questions.

Summer Program Prepares Teachers For Teaching Course in Technology

UMass will sponsor a second institute for high school mathematics and science teachers this summer on "Man Made World," the Engineering Concepts Curriculum Project (ECCP).



The institute will begin June 30 under the direction of Dr. Conrad A. Wogrin, director of the University Research Computing Center, and Charles W. Camp, teacher of chemistry and physics at Amherst Regional High School.

The major objective is to prepare high school teachers to teach the course "Man Made World," which introduces the concepts of technology as a prime force in shaping our society, and is aimed at non-science majors. The Institute is also willing to assist those high schools interested in instituting the course into their curricula.

Three general topics will be covered in the course: elements of formal logic applied to electric circuitry and elements of computer programming in BASIC and FORTRAN; construction of formal models of systems and use of analog computers for studying models; and fundamentals of amplification and feedback and their use in the control of energy and processes. These topics will be dealt with in morning lectures and seminars.

Afternoon laboratory sessions will include work at the UMass Research Computing Center, recently expanded with the addition of a second CDC 3600 computer. Participants will use the University's remote access time-sharing system, which allows on-line computer use from teletypes.

Information on enrollment, eligibility and available stipends may be obtained from Associate Dean J. S. Marcus, School of Engineering, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002. Application deadline is March 1.

Weekend Action. UMass Skiers Place 2nd To Amherst

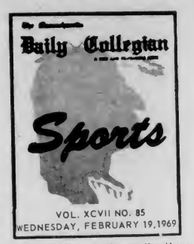
UMass ski coach William MacConnel's boys ran well planned races Saturday and Sunday but found themselves behind sky high Amherst College both days. At Lyme, N.H., UMass placed all their skiers in the top twenty in the giant slalom and had everyone finish in the top fifteen on Sunday.

The Redmen finally put together two days of consistent skiing, but were just not as sharp as cross town rival, Amherst College, Peter Flaccus won his fourth individual title and paced the Lord Jeffs to a secure lead in the N.E. I.S.C. standings. Don Marsh of Tufts took second in the G.S. followed by UMass skier Dave Kamila.

MacCONNELL

Jim Garstang placed seventh with a solid performance and was backed up by two sophomores, Jerry Curran and Chuck Walker. This is the second week end in a row that Walker, who starts last for the team, finished in the money.

Downhill practice began in earnest immediately following the giant slalom. Because of the high speeds in this event non-stop practice runs are compulsory. During the non-stops, confidence was high for a Redman victory.



The UMass team has spent many hours practicing high speed non-stops at Killington over Christmas and Intersession and it looked as though the practice was going to pay off. The Redmen looked extremely stable at high speeds near the lower section of the course. The whole team was carrying speed in the vicinity of 50 m.p.h. as they dropped off the lower "water fall" and headed across the rolling terrain for the finish. Only Don Marsh of Tufts appeared to be carrying this kind of speed in practice.

The next morning, Marsh streaked across the course in 126.3 to steal the winning honors from Dave Kamila by 2.6 seconds UMass was definitely fast in the event. Jim Garstang flashed in less than a second behind Kamila to place fourth and Dick McHugh finished tenth. Ted Martin, a sophomore, was ahead of McHugh at the mid-point, but slowed on the last leg and placed eleventh. This was Martin's best performance since he skied over a cliff at Middlebury.

Amherst College placed skiers third, fifth, sixth, and ninth in this event to take top honors. In the final analysis, the Lord Jeffs were faster on the top of the course where the many control gates made the race similar to a G.S. UMass which used longer skis hit higher speeds on the lower sections, but was unable to make up the time lost on top. The Redmen spent Monday at Thunder Mountain trying to shape up for a win in the coming races.

C's Top Suns, 116-110

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Celtics rode the hot shooting of John Havlicek and Sam Jones to a commanding first-half lead and raced to a 116-110 National Basketball Association victory over the Phoenix Suns yesterday in a matinee game for vacationing school children.

The Celtics, who had lost two straight, and 11 of 17 previous starts, broke out of an 8-8 tie in the opening minutes and then pulled away for their fourth consecutive triumph over the expansion Suns.

Havlicek and Jones each scored 15 points as Boston charged to a 47-29 lead before settling for a 57-46 halftime advantage.

The Suns cashed in heavily at the free throw line after the intermission and closed to within four points, 69-65, midway through the third period. However, Bailey Howell hit on two quick field goals to pull the Celtics out of danger.

Havlicek topped Boston's balanced scoring attack with 20 points, Jones had 19, Tom Sanders 17, Emmette Bryant 14 and Howell and Larry Siegfried 13 each.

The Suns' Gail Goodrich took individual honors with 29 points, including 15 free throws. Dick Van Arsdale hit for 22 points and Ben Warlick 17.

Holovak Finds Job

BOSTON (AP) - Mike Holovak, a one-time clerk who was fired last month as coach and general manager of the Boston Patriots in the American Football League, was named yesterday to the Massachusetts Racing Commission.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent called Holovak "an old friend" in introducing him to the press. Holovak said his wife sold a race horse she owned last week to avoid any appearance of conflict of interest in his new post.

He told newsmen his contract with the Patriots has three years to run but added that the only chore he will perform for the AFL team is some scouting.

Holovak's new job pays $6,750 a year for a three-year term.

Sanborn Chases Point Mark

Win Record in Sight

With three games remaining the UMass hockey team is just one victory from tying a 38 year old record for wins (9) in a single season.

The record was set by the 1930-31 Redmen team which was 9-9. So far this season UMass is 8-11 with Norwich, Holy Cross, and UNH still to be played.

Of these games, a win against Holy Cross seems likely considering the fact that the Crusaders were demolished here at Orr Rink last Saturday, 13-2. Their next clash will come at Worcester Tuesday.

If the Redmen are to break the long standing record their chore will be more formidable, the key game coming Saturday at Orr Rink against Norwich. By all indications the game should be a pick.

Former coach Steve Kosokowski feels that this year's team is the most well balanced group that he has seen since he has been here (1945).

Along with the team record it will be interesting to see if Senior Co-Captain Jeff Sanborn can break the all time scoring record of 80 points held by Russ Kidd '56. Sanborn now has a career total of 37 goals, 37 assists for 74 points.

Sanborn came here from Sangus High School where he was a three sport star in football, hockey, and track. Kosokowski, who has known Sanborn since he has been at UMass, couldn't say enough about him, and he felt, just as anyone who has seen him play, that he could play hockey at any school.

Sanborn is also tied for fourth in career goals and is third in assists (37) with an excellent chance of breaking the recordheld by Bill Skowyra, '67.

Two other seniors are high on the UMass scoring lists. Co-captain Jim O'Brian, who is a linemate of Sanborn's, has 26 goals, 11 assists, and 37 career points and is 12th on the all time list.

O'Brian, from Holyoke, has been a pleasant surprise for UMass hockey.

Speedy right wing senior Charlie Hanifan from Malden, has 23 goals and 23 assists for 46 points and is ninth in total points. He needs only two more to move up another notch.

The final home game for the Redmen will be played Saturday night against Norwich at Orr. It will be interesting to see how Sanborn does.

W. Va. Licenses Barb Jo

CHARLESTOWN, W. Va. (AP) - Barbara Jo Rubin became yesterday the first woman to be licensed as a jockey in West Virginia in the 35 years racing has flourished here.

Miss Rubin was issued a temporary license by stewards at the Charles Town Race Trace in a process that took about 20 minutes.

The 19-year-old native of Miami, Fla., will ride two races with the temporary license and then be recognized as a full-fledged apprentice.

Miss Rubin caused a stir in Florida racing in January when she was named to a mount at Tropical Park causing a boycott by jockeys. The boycotting riders were fined $100 each by the Florida Racing Commission, a move that ended resistance of the male jockeys.

The petite brunette was greeted here by Ward Sigler, Charles Town representative of the National Jockeys Guild. Sigler assured her there would be no strike when she appeared.

Trainer Bryan Webb, who holds Miss Rubin's contract, said he will name Miss Rubin to ride one of his horses Saturday night.

Student Senate Modifies Picketing Code of 1967

By RICHARD W. STORY
Ad-Hoc Editor

The Student Senate, in a long special business consideration, last night re-debated and modified its picketing code of December 1967.

Senator Larry Marcus

Considering six amendments in turn - some from the Student Matters Committee and some from the floor - the Senate extended somewhat the number and variety of spaces delineated in the code's list of acceptable areas for demonstrations. Amendment one added reception areas for demonstration areas and principal corridors to the list which had formerly included only main lobbies. A proposal from Sen. Larry Marcus to add classrooms was defeated after vigorous debate.

Two further amendments clarified a matter of terminology, adding graduate students acting in a teaching capacity to faculty members in having control over individual classrooms. Faculty members (and, therefore, teaching graduate students) were expressly denied authority to request assistance directly of any police department.

The principal substantive thrust of amendments to the code involved the questions of police - how were they to be called, when, and by whom. The code as originally passed had been reasonably clear on this matter; but the events of last Thursday demonstrated that the matter of the actual usage of police force was unsatisfactroy in some regards.

Amendment four - from the Committee and Sen. Hartwell - provides that, "If the University Police are unable to cope successfully with the infractions, then the duly constituted authorities may request assistance from outside authorities, provided that appropriate representatives of the student body and faculty have been consulted. Police or other outside assistance may forcefully interact with demonstrators only in cases of actual violence, or when the demonstrators make it virtually impossible to secure a given area. The use of such outside assistance shall always be considered the last possible alternative."

This preceding, from the Committee, and as amended by Sen. Hartwell, was also the subject of extended debate. Recalling that there were four students in the President's office at the time the decision was made to call in the state police, there was some strong feeling that provisions should be made to utilise (at least) the Senate Executive Committee in a decision-making capacity in any time of crisis.

Opponents of this provision argued that it would have the effect of pitting "student against student" when the tough decisions had to be made.

Vice - president Hartwell said that, were the Executive Committee to be put in such a situation, he would refuse to vote on the matter. The final decision must be President Lederle's - he alone is charged with final responsibility for the campus, and he alone must be responsible for the gravest dicisions made in its regard. The amended code, then, emerges providing for student consultation, but not requiring a student vote on the use of police.

A final amendment provides that ID numbers will be suitable identification, rather than names, from those students who so choose to identify them selves.

The picketing code was the principal item of business for the Senate last evening. The reconsideration of the code raises (or perpeptuates) the issue that was debated in the President's office last Thursday - just what is the status of this (or any other) picketing code? The President made it clear that he felt that the code actually employed was a student-approved code. Silverman and Hartwell disputed him on this point. The student-approved code was that code debated last evening; but the code employed last week was, essentially, a faculty code. The code debated last evening, and now as amended, should be re-submitted to the administration for acceptance. This will probably involve referral to the Faculty Senate; and the merry-go-round hassle of a year ago will be underway again.

Senate V.P. Rick Hartwell

In other business, the Senate voted unanimouly to recommend to the Student Union Governing Board that the top two floors of the Union be kept open 24 hours per day, with meal service at all times.

UMass Professors, Foreign Students Debate Africa and Asia

Great Decisions 1969 met in Noah Webster House last night to discuss "Africa, Asia and the Development Decade: Must the Poverty Gap Widen?" Participating in the debate were Professors Edward Feit and Bruce Morris of UMass,and two graduate students from Cameroon and Somalia, Collins Ngwa and James Rabileh.

Luther Allen, of the UMass government department served as narrator, and opened the parley by describing the topic as "enormous, both in geography and scope".

According to Rabileh, many newly independent nations were never prepared to be independent, and there is now a lack of trained people to run the nation.

Ngwa also said that many unprepared for and/or unanticipated problems come with independence. He voiced the protest that the world expects Africa to miraculously become a powerful nation overnight, while Europe took centuries to emerge as such.

Prof. Feit, a native of the Union of South Africa, claims the principle problem is dishonest government. Ngwa agreed, calling the corruption " a stumbling block". However, Prof. Feit said the case is not hopeless, and perhaps the African nations may benefit from European experience.

Debating foreign aid, both grad students felt that the contribution of bi-lateral aid has not made any signigicant contributions to Africa, and, if the aid should be

UMass Supports Salary Hikes For State Employees on Campus

A hearing before the Public Service Committee in Boston on Tuesday resulted in (support for) salary increases for state employees by the University of Massachusetts.

UMass provided its support for the salary increase because of such factors as the rise in the cost of living since November, 1966, salaries paid to other institutions and private business; and the special personnel requirements of a rapidly growing university system with teaching, research and service responsibilities to the citizens of the Commonwealth.

The University's position was explained by Louis R. Morrell, the school's budget director who told committee members: "The University joins with the board of higher education and other public colleges in supporting, as a minimum requirement, the governor's bill which includes a new salary schedule and increases for selected positions." Morrell urged the committee, however, to support additional raises for certain employees who are essential to the university program and who are difficult to recruit and hire at the proposed salary rates.

Many of the positions for which additional increases were requested by the budget director were of non-professional grade. He pointed out that 45 per cent of non-professional employees on Amherst campus presently earn less than $100 a week and 65 per cent earn less than $112 per week. According to Morrell janitors, watchmen, stationary engineers, offset machine operators, truck drivers, telephone operators, farm hands and agricultural technicians and research assistants all should receive higher raises.

Two bus loads of UMass janitors, maintainance workers, and food service employees, all members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal workers, AFL-CIO journeyed to Boston Tuesday in support of higher wages.

When called by the DAILY COLLEGIAN for further comments and explanation about the proposed pay hike, Morrell said it was a "matter of sitting up tight right now and waiting. Until there is additional information from the hearings there really isn't more to say!

Dean Redfern Discusses Programs To Be Put To State Legislature

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

"This session may be more difficult than previous ones because there are more fiscal demands being made on the state than ever before."

These words were spoken by Dean of Administration Leo Redfern concerning the upcoming programs to be put forward to the state legislature by the University this year.

In an interview with the DAILY COLLEGIAN over a week ago Dean Redfern stated that basically the University was interested in four major areas to be brought to the State House.

These projects would be: (1) authorization of funds to begin building a permanent campus for UMass-Boston at the Columbia Point site, (2) a medical school salary relief bill, (3) a bill authorizing establishment of a law school on the Amherst campus, (4) and another bill authorizing establishment of a dental school to perhaps go with the medical school.

Redfern said that "Hopefully, they (the legislature) will take a long-term view on these issues," but that unfortunately the general outlook is conservative."

The University administrator continued that while many legislators and tax payers may come up with the traditional reply of "can't afford it now," in regard to educational programs, the question is really "Can they afford NOT to meet certain ones?" Redfern said that there is very little evidence that these educational programs cannot be afforded if one takes the long-range investment point of view.

Regarding the first area of a permanent UMass-Boston site, Dean Redfern told the DAILY COLLEGIAN that the Board of Trustees are seeking to explore the development of Columbia Point campus and also transportation, road access, parking facilities, etc. connected with it.

In order to prevent loss of any time (first classes are scheduled to begin in 1972) Redfern stated that the Administration would ask the legislature for appropriate authorization to allow the University to proceed vigorously in building the Boston campus.

The medical school salary relief bill (S 496) proposed by Sen. John J. Conte of Worcester would allow the medical school faculty and staff to receive a higher salary than the state now allows state school teachers. The Dean stated that the reason for this is that "all studies show it is impossible to recruit qualified full-time faculty for a medical school within the present salary ceiling.

Full time clinical and staff personnel would be needed in addition said Redfern, and this bill "allows the medical school to recruit a full time staff. It is an important bill because if the first classes are to begin in 1970 then the faculty and staff must be recruited soon."

Additional problems have come up with the medical school said Redfern, because of rising inflationary costs. Originally estimated to cost $84 million current inflation costs now indicate the project may require $126 million to complete. Of this amount, the University has already had approved by federal agencies over $35 million in matching grants toward the total cost. In addition, more federal funds will be sought to help meet the higher costs due to monetary inflation. Using a special bond issue the University has been directed to utilize funds it has to develop plans for a medical science building, teaching hospital, power plant and parking facilities.

As for the law school bill, Redfern stated that studies have shown "legally trained people are needed." And in communications with the deans of other law schools, such as Boston College and Harvard, there were no objections to having such a school at UMass - Amherst. The law school bill passed the House last session but the Senate referred the matter to study.

As for the dental school, the Dean said that the Board of Higher Education has conducted a study which shows an "increasing need for dental training opportunities in the state," and in fact showed a declining dental service rate also. A dental school for UMass might allow for the sharing of facilities with the Medical School.

In addition to these major areas of concentration Redfern emphasized that there were "other valid needs" that would be brought before the legislature. A mong these are an educational television center for the University and a request of funds (approximately $258,000) for staff and other expenses of running a continuous education program of night sessions and other activities for adults and other non-regularly enrolled students.

Regarding the idea of de-centralizing the administration and Board of Trustees of state schools Redfern said "Really, this proposal would lead to turning the clock backward. It would be jungle warfare to splinter and segment us," he continued. "Public education is becoming a major job of the state. A maximum in service and coordination must be achieved."

As for Harrington's statements that the Trustees have neglected UMass-Boston, Dean Redfern declared "The Senator is in error. The Board recently has devoted more time to UMass-Boston matters than to the Amherst campus. And furthermore the Board has a record of meeting frequently on matters of developing the Boston campus including a number of meetings with faculty and student representatives of UM-B."

Africa and Asia . . .

withdrawn, no affect would be felt. Rabileh said, "I do not advise any bi-lateral aid of any sort". He suggested that instead of sending aid, countries ought to import manufactured goods, helping industry. "I realize the problem cannot be solved soon", he said. "Africa has yet to reap the fruits of her potentialities".

Prof. Morris, of the economics department, disagreed with the students on the subject of bi-lateral aid. In answer to the question Do developing countries need aid?, he contended that the major amount must come from the countries themselves, but also pointed out that without SOME starting aid, many nations would never break the bottlenecks.

Scabbard and Blade Military Fraternity Initiates Pledges at UMass

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

February is traditionally fraternity and soroity rush month at UMass. The Army ROTC department has its own version of the "Greeks" on this campus - Scabbard and Blade. Scabbard and Blade is a national military fraternal organization for advanced ROTC students.

Last week the fraternity held its pledge period. Open to all junior officers in the Army Military Science department on campus, it currently has 14 juniors pledging. Cadet Phil Rosen is the pledge president.

Running the pledge week are 11 senior officers and brothers in the fraternity. Cadet Lt. Col. Richard Donoghue is the pledge master.

During pledge week the juniors meet nightly at Dickinson Hall at 7:30 for one hour Sunday, through Wednesday. At these times the pledges wear Class A uniforms and stand inspection. They are inspected for appearance as well as knowledge of ROTC, the Army, and Scabbard and Blade itself. There is also a certain degree of verbal harassment.

Tuesday through Thursday mornings at 6:00 a.m. the pledges reported to Dickinson for an hour of physical training known as the Army "daily dozen" exercises.

Thursday evening from 6:00 - 12:00 p.m. a combat maneuver was run between the junior pledges and the senior brother officers on Mt. Toby.

Membership in Scabbard and Blade is by election only and is held shortly after pledge week. Upon initiation, each new brother wears the shoulder braid (fouragee) and ribbon which was formerly worn by his big brother, thus a real and symbolic continuation is achieved.

Scabbard and Blade was originally founded at the University of Wisconsin in 1904 by five army field officers. It is organized into companies and regiments, the UMass chapter being L company, 15th Regiment.

This campus chapter is in the First District along with the other five New England states with ROTC and Scabbard and Blade at their universities. Cadet Major John Desmond is the commander of the company on this campus.

The purposes of Scabbard and Blade are to improve the educational level of military science courses on college campuses, bring a greater feeling of friendship among advanced ROTC students, and foster the qualities of good officers.

Scabbard and Blade also participates in such extracurricular activities as military ball, banquets and other social functions. Its members also are responsible for the firing of the cannon at University home football games.

Administration Rebuttal

To the editor:

The last few issues of the COLLEGIAN have carried several stories, editorials, and letters-to-the-editor commenting on the events of last Thursday, which culminated in the summoning of the State Police and the arrest of some 34 demonstrators. In airing these issues, the COLLEGIAN performs an essential service; reasoned discussion of controversial matters is part of the essence of the University. However, there appear to be some misconceptions abroad, and I therefore offer the following account of what happened as I saw it.

As a member of the Administration, I was present all day Thursday in Whitmore, and I participated in the discussions that were held. I was present when the decision was made to call the State Police; I stayed around until after midnight and watched the police in action. That is the background of the following observations.

1. DOW'S "REFUSAL TO DEBATE"

The first event was on Monday, February 10, 1:30 p.m., when a special group called the "Ad Hoc Committee For An Open Forum with Dow" met with President Lederle and others. This group demanded that a Dow official take part in a debate before being allowed to recruit on campus. (The Dow recruiter was scheduled to meet with students for recruiting purposes on Wednesday and Thursday, February 12 and 13.)

The University Administration agreed to request Dow to provide a person to meet with this group and debate. Dow was called and agreed to send its representative (not the recruiter, who declined to engage in debate on the grounds that he was an engineer relieved of his duties for a few days a year to recruit, and not qualified to debate issues such as these.) However, the Dow representative could not be reached in time for the debate to take place Tuesday night, the date on which the Ad Hoc Committee insisted. The Administration proposed a later date; and Ad Hoc Committee refused at this point to sponsor such a debate unless it could be held on the date originally proposed. Time passed, and a subgroup of the original committee decided that it would sponsor the debate if it could be held Wednesday, February 12. At this group's request late Tuesday afternoon a call was placed to Dow requesting a representative for a Wednesday debate. The Dow people in view of continuing storm disruption of their staff reported that they could not respond by the next day. They reaffirmed their willingness to set a mutually satisfactory date with some lead time for arrangements to be made.

So far as the Administration is aware, Dow never "refused" to debate and still stands ready to engage in such a debate. At the present writing (February 19) no group has come forward and volunteered to sponsor such a debate at a time when the Dow representative can be present. If such a group does come forward, the Administration will make every effort to arrange the debate, and all indications are that Dow will cooperate.

2. COMMUNICATION WITH PROTESTORS BEFORE POLICE WERE CALLED

A commentary in Tuesday's COLLEGIAN states, "The Administration called in the State Police before making any attempt at communication with the demonstrators." The Administration, in the person of Dean Field spoke with the demonstrators on at least four separate occasions throughout the day. A number of other administrators and faculty members visited the placement office and the recruiting area and engaged in conversations with the demonstrators. At one point, Dean Field proposed that the demonstrators submit to a "token arrest", in which one administrator and one member of the campus police force would formally arrest the students and take their names; the students would then be free to leave the building. This offer was refused by the demonstrators.

3. "NON-NEGOTIABLE DEMANDS"

There seems to be some confusion over the phrase "non-negotiable demands." An analysis in Tuesday's COLLEGIAN implied that it was the University Administration that refused to negotiate: "The University's position that the call for an end to on-campus recruiting is not negotiable . . ." The demonstrators, in their oral statements and the mimeographed material which was being circulated, stated that their demand was non-negotiable: this is apparent from the following document which was circulated by the protesting group and was received in the Dean of Students' Office at 12:25 p.m. on Thursday: "The committee to end military industrial recruitment, a faction of the Ad Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow, is sitting-in at the placement office in Whitmore Hall. The following demand has been made: We demand an end to the University's complicity in the immoral and politically disastrous activities of the government of the United States of America. We believe these acts arise from the decisive role the corporations play in the formation of the idealogy and policies of that government. We therefore demand an end to all military and industrial recruitment. This is not a building seizure, but a sit-in at the placement office. These students will not leave until their demand is met, or they are arrested."

It was the position represented in the above document that was interpreted as being "non-negotiable."

4. THE DECISION TO CALL THE STATE POLICE

Perhaps the most confused issue in this whole unhappy business is the matter of calling in the State Police. It has been alleged that the Administration itself violated the picketing code, in particular Sections 4D and 4E, which read as follows:

D. If persuasion and warning fail, the University police may be employed to put an end to the violations.

E. If the University police are unable to cope successfully with the infractions, then the appropriate authorities may request outside assistance.

It is true that the University police were not employed to put an end to the violations. At the time (about 6:00 p.m.) when the decision was made to call in the police, there were about 50 demonstrators sitting in the placement office, and outside the building there were approximately 100 students whose sympathies and temper were difficult to assess. Because of security requirements at a basketball game that happened to be going on, and other imperative requirements, it was impossible to muster a force of more than 5 to 8 campus policemen. It was felt by members of the Administration (and the campus police themselves) that such a force was insufficient to remove the demonstrators (who at that time were insisting that they be physically removed), and at the same time control the incidental crowds, and deal with an outbreak of violence should one occur. In the opinion of the Administration it would have been hazardous to have attempted this operation with an insufficient number of police, particularly in view of the demonstrators' prior rejection of the offer of token arrest; it was therefore decided that outside assistance should be requested. The decision to clear the building and call the State Police was made in consultation with administrators, representative faculty members, and with students. Various courses of action were proposed and discussed. Dissenting views were heard. In my judgment the prime considerations underlying the decision were: (a) the importance of carrying on the normal functioning of the University under procedures and policies which had been reached by an orderly, democratic process; (b) the safety of students, both protestors and others; (c) the security of University property; and, (d) the fact that the majority of the students, as evidenced by an overwhelming vote in their Senate the night before, favored open recruiting.

It may also be worth noting that the Administration exercised restraint beyond that required by the picketing code. Specifically, the code states that demonstrators should "confine their activities to the outside of all University buildings" (Section I). This article was not invoked; the demonstrators were permitted to carry on their activities within the building until the normal time for closing. The same section also states that demonstrators should not interfere with the free movement of any person on University grounds, nor interfere with the normal conduct of University affairs." The demonstrators did not physically impede movement or forcibly prevent the carrying on of University business, but their continued, non-altogether-silent presence constituted a considerable degree of interference with the work of the placement office. Nevertheless, this article was not invoked. Finally, even those who had been in violation of the code all afternoon were given the continued option of leaving and thus avoiding arrest right up until the arrival of the State Police.

One may disagree with the decision that was reached. It is a disservice to the University community to impugn the motives or good faith of those who made it.

Think Sober

To the editor:

The Dow Chemical demonstration and the calling in of state police point to the need for sober thinking on the part of the University community as to how one can prevent a similar call in the future. The most obvious but also the most difficult path is to try to solve some of the problems of greatest concern to the students. High on the list of problems is the continuing Vietnam War, the stalemate at Paris, the draft, and a reordering of national priorities.

One of the most effective ways to put pressure on the Nixon Administration during this crucial negotiation period when policies are now being formulated and when the liberal hawks are waging an all out effort behind the scenes is to write to the policy-makers. Concerned students and faculty should write individual letters to the President, Secretaries of State and Defense, Mr. Henry Kissinger, and others, to express their views. We can ask the policy-makers to call for an immediate military deescalation by the United States in Vietnam, and for the earliest possible ceasefire. We can ask them for large, successive reductions in military spending and the massive transfer of resources to civilian programs at home and abroad.

But such political pressures, vital as they are at this moment of policy-review in Washington, are only one means of trying to effectuate a change of national policies. Others at the University level, which will not result in further state police involvement, ought to be undertaken as well. What form they will take ought to be the subject of discussion at coming campus forums and by concerned campus groups.

Reaction

To the editor:

There has been too much asinine support of last week's demonstration lately, and I think it's time someone correctly stated the facts; at least as I see them First, and foremost, despite any irrational moral justifications, these students were WRONG. They violated laws by which our society abides. It makes no difference why one breaks a law. These students had a gripe. Fine. Why didn't they take it through the proper channels like ninety-nine per cent of UMass students do? Their opinions are obviously not that of the majority. So, since they could not gain their ends through legal channels, they chose to impose their will on a passive majority. I trust this lot and their ridiculous statements will not succeed, as their efforts are an insult to the intelligence of the average student.

These people violated your right to make a choice about where and how you will work after graduation. They would have, if they succeeded, imposed their will upon you. Do you want your freedom of choice abrogated by these people?

Secondly, I have heard enough criticism of the administration. They did all within their power to get these demonstrators to leave. In my opinion, if anything, the administration should have acted sooner.

Thirdly, criticism of the state police is out of order. They came equipped for any eventuality rather than being unprepared. One asks why 88 state policemen were needed. Perhaps the mere prescence of so many forestalled violence. One strong point in their favor is that they used only necessary force and no more. One little word from a radical leader and the demonstration could have erupted. The police were prepared. Can we criticize them for being prepared? One must remember that these are men too and not the fools the "intelligent" radicals take them to be.

Lastly, I commend the administration for its handling of this situation and I feel that I speak for a passive majority in saying so.

Lynden Johnson Discusses His Failure With American Youth in "True" Interview

Former President Lyndon Johnson said he believes, "without question, the bloodshed and terror in the streets of Chicago was a tragic, horrible thing' for which both city officials and youthful protesters were at fault. He also said, "The alienation of youth seriously hurt Hubert Humphrey's candidacy."

Breaking his silence on the violent events which rocked last summer's Democratic Convention in Chicago, Mr. Johnson said:

"The violent confrontation that occurred is a sad lesson in what happens when decent people on both sides abandon restraint and understanding and confront one another with raw emotions rather than reason."

The former President suggested Mayor Richard Daley's police employed heavy-handed tactics in denying dissidents the right to assemble and protest peaceably.

"At the outset, I sympathized with the objectives of both sides in the confrontation. Keeping internal peace and order is the duty of any mayor. Yet expressing deeply felt feelings and thoughts in a peaceful manner is the right of any citizen," Mr. Johnson said.

In an exclusive interview to appear in the March edition of TRUE magazine, reporter Peter Lisagor was told by the former President that he felt significant good came out of the Chicago parley. "What we saw inside the convention itself - the tension between McCarthy's youthful supporters and the older convention delegates - may represent the beginning of a fundamental reform in both the convention system and the electoral collage system. If a political system cannot renew itself, it will die. What we saw in 1968 is the beginning of that renewal."

In a wide-ranging interview, titled "Lyndon Johnson Discusses His Failure With American Youth," Mr. Johnson responded in writing to questions put to him by TRUE author Lisagor in which he revealed his future plans and commented freely on today's young people.

The former President, who said he believes today's "kids are better than they were when I was a kid . . . better behaved and better trained . . . smarter . . . and wiser," conceded his Administration was entitled to only "a poor grade on our effectiveness" in communicating with them, despite a major effort.

To improve communications, Mr. Johnson said, "An Office for Youth Participation could be set up in the Executive Office' and a special assistant for youth named. He called for "hearings (to) be held on campuses and in cities," for more young people named to advisory commissions, more TV-radio debates between government officials and youth, and a Constitutional amendment to lower the voting age to 18.

Mr. Johnson ticked off a list of Federal grant, loan and work-study programs now "helping 1-1/4 million young Americans through college," and assisting 1.2 million Neighborhood Youth Corps and 100,000 Job Corps enrollees or graduates. But he added, "The statistics are meaningless unless young people feel a basic trust and understanding of the process of their government. Sadly, in these past few years we've been unable to build that trust."

He asserted, "The difficulty has not stemmed from the young people's disagreement with our policies in Viet Nam. Their beliefs and opinions on the war are entitled to as much respect as anyone's. The difficulty has stemmed from the feelings that democratic channels were not adequate for the expression of this disagreement."

"Perhaps we could have avoided those feelings," he went on, "if we had opened up the process of decision-making on the war more fully to the public. Perhaps we spent so much time in trying to bring about the peace we so deeply desired that we didn't spend enough time making sure the public understand the reasons for our decisions. Perhaps we reacted defensively - and humanly - to the bitter criticisms that came our way."

However, Mr. Johnson said, "The question I would like to put to young people is this: how successful do they believe they have been these past few years in accomplishing their real aims?" He added:

"Yes, it is true that each unruly demonstration made it more and more difficulty for members of the Administration to even attempt to communicate with the campuses. Yes, it is true that threats of violence and outbreak frequently confined the President's travels. Yes, it is true that draft-card burnings made page one in all the papers while attempts to explain policies were pushed in the background.

Yes, it is true that the alienation of youth seriously hurt Hubert Humphrey's candidacy. Yes, it is true that a new President was elected amidst a public demand 'law and order.' But is this what the young people hoped to accomplish?"

Pueblo Officer Breaks Down While Relating His Experiences

BY RICHARD E. MEYER
Associated Press Writer

(AP) - The USS Pueblo's youngest officer burst into sobs Wednesday as he told a court of inquiry he wanted to commit suicide while a captive of the North Koreans - but killed instead a potted plant they gave him.

Freckle-faced Lt. j.g. Timothy Harris, 23, cried and gasped and buried his head in his hands and finally halted his testimony and stepped outside into the rain to compose himself so he could continue.

Harris was asked: "Was there a plant in the room."

"I killed it," Harris replied. "I urinated on it. I had an extreme hatred for everything there and when they game me this damn plant it took me four months but I finally killed.'

Timothy Harris broke down when Rear Adm. Alan Bergner, a member of the court, asked: "After the initial phase of the captivity, what was your mental attitude."

"Extreme hatred for the Koreans," Harris replied, his voice beginning to shake.

"After the initial phase did you get stronger in your resistance?"

"Yes sir . . ." Harris said, breaking into sobs, gasping, and burying his face in his hands again.

"I withdraw the question," Bergner said.

"Let's wait a moment here," said Vice Adm. Harold G. Bowden Jr., president of the court.

Attorney E. Miles Harvey, representing Bucher, put a hand on Harris' shoulder and they walked outside together.

After they returned, Harris told about wanting to commit suicide and then added, "I just want to apologize to the court for breaking down, that's all."

"No apology is required," said Bowen.

we mean it

when we say there's a real opportunity for you here

Before you decide what you are going to do with the new life your degree can open up for you, think about all the possible opportunities.

Don't just answer the usual questions about big company versus small company, service company versus product company, industry versus academe, or public versus private business.

Think about where you can do most of what you like best, where you can make the most meaningful change.

We think you can do it here if what you are interested in is making specific, measurable improvements in the world. We build electronic systems to communicate, gather and process data, defend the country, and study inner and outer space.

We expect that our systems approach will also help us solve some of the big problems in our day-to-day concerns like medicine, education, and city planning.

We need men and women with degrees in business administration, engineering, and liberal arts to help us realize the full potential of these systems.

We need individuals who know that formal education can never stop for system builders, who will take advantage of our many education opportunities, including prepaid tuition, in-plant graduate degree programs, and fellowships. Achievements in this atmosphere can be extremely satisfying, academically as well as personally and professionally.

Indecent Exposure Charged To Five Grinnell Students

(AP) Charges of indecent exposure were filed today against five Grinnell College students accused of staging a "nude-in" on campus.

Six women and four men threw off their clothing during a campus speech Feb. 5 by a representative of Playboy magazine to protest what they called the magazine's "sensationalism of sex."

Mr. Enich said five of the students involved in the incident had not yet been identified.

Hello Friend Entertains For Winter Carni

Last Sunday evening Hampden Dining Commons was the scene of another performance of the Hello Friend Folk Society which left standing room only. A line-up of eighteen performers entertained for more than five hours to one of the largest crowds ever to attend a folk festival on campus.

Cider ran out early in the evening, but enthusiasm did not. Poetry and music by members lasted until one-thirty, when the remainder of the audience reluctantly extinguished their candles and departed.

Summer Studies Offered in France

The Department of Romance Languages is sponsoring French studies at both the undergraduate and graduate levels for six weeks (July 13 - August 24) at Pau, in France. Students will be placed in courses according to their level of ability; the program offers courses in language, stylistics, literature, and civilization. The professorial staff is from the French university system, particularly from the Universities of Bordeaux and Toulouse. Up to six University of Massachusetts credits may be earned in the French Studies at Pau Program; and successful participants will receive a "certificat d'assiduite" from the Centre d'Etudes Universitaires de Pau.

Pau is situated in the Basses-Pyrenees, with a magnificant view of the Pyrenees Mountains. Bernadotte, eventually king of Sweden, was born there; it was the seat of Henry of Navarre, who was to become Henry IV of France. His castle is one of Pau's tourist attractions. The region is noted for Basque wool-weaving and the production of Jurangon wine. A health resort since Roman times, there are numerous scenic routes.

The French Studies at Pau group will leave by air from Boston on July 3 and return August 28. En route they will stop in London, Paris, Bordeaux, Madrid, and Lisbon. Tours have been arranged in these cities. Enrollment in the program, which costs $870, includes tuition, travel and specified tours, hotels, room and board at Pau.

The deadline for application and a deposit of $150 is March 1. Further particulars and application forms are available from the Department of Romance Languages, 252 Bartlett (545-2827).

Redmen on the Warpath

BASKETBALL - Annapolis, away (Navy Field House), tonight 8 pm. (UMUA, 91.1 FM)

BY MIKE CURRAN
Senior Reporter

Coach Jack Leaman's 13-6 Redmen put their tourney hopes on the firing line tonight when they challenge the Midshipmen at the Navy Field House at Annapolis at 8 p.m. . The defensive minded Seamen have compiled a 7-11 mark so far this season, but hold a 6-3 edge over rivals at home.

Navy, a small, scrappy team, has played outstanding ball this season despite its modest record. Coach Dave Smalley's men have suffered three overtime losses in addition to two one point defeats in regulation. The Midshipmen can be giant-killers as they showed earlier in the season when they toppled Pennsylvania, a team that holds victories over Villanova and Columbia.

John Tolmie, a 6'3 senior from Rockland, does the bulk of the offensive work for the Midshipmen. A Bullis Prep grad, Tolmie playing out of the forward position, is considered by many the finest basketball player in the history of the Academy.

Presently the Bay State native is hitting at a 21.8 clip. More impressive than just the output is Tolmie's fine shooting percentages from both the floor and the line. The Navy captain is shooting 47 per cent and 85 per cent respectively.

The supporting cast features sophomore guard Jack Conrad, a 6' Allentown, Pa., native who is averaging 11.7, and forward Scott Semko, a 6'1 Whippany, N.J., lad who is also in double figures at 10.2 per contest.

Butch Provini, a senior from Jersey, and Bill Parks, a 6'5 junior who hails from Georgia, will be the other starters tonight. Parks, the center, concentrates his efforts on the boards and like the others is a n outstanding defensive performer.

UMass, just getting use to the absence of floor general Joey DiSarcina, will counter with a much taller five. Pete Gayeska, averaging 14.7 points and 10.9 rebounds per game, will be the toughest obstacle in the Middies path.

Forwards Dennis Chapman and Ken Mathias with 12.1 and 10.2 scoring norms, respectively, will join the 6'10 center in the forecourt. Mathais and Chapman are also hauling down 17 rebounds between them per contest.

Ray Ellerbrook, who was named to the weekly ECAC All Star team for his efforts the past week, will start at one guard position. The 6'1 junior leads the Redmen with an 18.4 average.

Ellerbrook's partner in the backcourt could be either sophomore Bob Dempsey, who moved UMass well against UConn, or Dick Starsiak, who scored 11 points Saturday night in 17 minutes of action.

The game will be carried on WMUA and is definitely a must contest if the Redmen wish to continue dreams of some post season action. An 18-6 record would give them a decent shot at either the NCAA or NIT tournaments, but Leaman's five can't afford another loss; that much is sure.

UConn Downs Trackmen, 53-51

BY DAVE EVANS
Staff Reporter

Dropping a heartbreaking meet to a very tough University of Connecticut team at Storrs Tuesday night, the Redman track team lost by a frustrating 53-51 score.

The effect on the team, however, is just the opposite of what would be expected at this point. They have just become more determined and are convinced that things will start to even off, hopefully by Yankee Conference time. UConn, as a result of their win over the Redmen, will probably be installed as favorites at the Conference Championships.

Coach Ken O'Brien said that the meet had gone pretty much according to plan, especially in the running events. The coach had expected some fast times, but had not anticipated the wholesale demolition of school, meet, and fieldhouse records that occurred. However, bad luck, or whatever you wish to call it, haunted the Redmen in the field events.

The 35 pound weight throw, contested outside, saw the Redmen swept by UConn, a major upset. In the long jump, UConn's Pete Miller was given second place on a jump in which he fouled by a clear two inches. The pole vault was a UConn sweep as UMass' only vaulter, Buzz Hiller, is still nursing a broken bone in his foot.

On the brighter side of the picture, there were several excellent UMass performances in the meet. Four school records were tied or broken, and innumerably personal records were achieved.

The Redmen runners answered UConn's challenge well, outpointing the Huskies, 31-28, in the running events. Diego Gonzalez, placing second in the 1000 yard run established a new school record in that event, turning in the time of 2:13.3. The winner of the event, UConn's Steve Flanagan also established a new meet, school and fieldhouse record.

In the 60 yard high hurdles, Gerry Spellman tied the existing UMass record of 7.7 seconds, as he posted his first win this year. Ron Wayne had the dubious distinction of setting a new school record in the mile run and placing fourth in that event, in what has to be one of the fastest set of times recorded for a dual meet in this part of the country. Wayne ran 4:13, which took two seconds off the old record held by Terry Carpenter, UMass '67. The winning time was a swift 4:09.6 by Craig McColl of UConn. This was also his best time ever by more than four seconds.

In the weight events, what was otherwise a dreary night, was made a little more bearable by the fact that Ed Arcaro clipped the old shot put record in establishing a new standard of 52'6.5. Arcaro is the Redman hope in the weight department in the upcoming Yankee Conference Championships. The team is pointing toward that meet, and it is expected that it will be contested primarily between UConn and UMass.

The Little Redmen also went under at the hands of the Husky pups, dropping their third in a row, 65-32. This freshman team, lacking the depth of teams of the last two years, could only manage two firsts against UConn. Accounting for those were high jumper Ed Shaubnessey, who has not been defeated yet this year, and sprinter Dave Annis, in the 50 yard dash.

With only the 400 free style medley left, and behind 49-48, the UMass swim team gave a record breaking performance enabling them to beat the Coast Guard Academy, 55-49. It was the Redman's third consecutive win, bringing their season record to 4-4.

The meet started off poorly as Coast Guard won the 400 individual medley with a time of 4:03.3. The win gave the Midshipmen a quick 7-0 lead, but the Redmen didn't quit. Co-captain Flip Morton led the comeback by winning the 200-yard freestyle. Mark Miller won the 50-yard freestyle walking away, as did Co-captain Bob Asquith in the 200-individual medley.

Depth proved to be the Redman's biggest adversary as they lost both second and third in these three events, and Coast Guard led at this point 19-15. But Dave Larson's brilliant performance on the one meter board lifted the Redman spirits as he completely outclassed his opposition, scoring 225.2 points while his nearest opponent had only 112 points.

Dick Donahue continued the winning streak as he won the 200-yard butterfly in 2.18:7.

Miller swam the first 100 and held a slight lead, with Geoff Senior stretching the lead during the second leg. Morton swam the third l[illegible] and it was apparent that UM[illegible] had taken the event and the meet. The question was whether Asquith could swim a fast enough 100 to set a record. He turned in a 51.7, and the relay team had broken the old record of 3.28.9 with a 3.28.2.

Yesterday's meet was the last home event of the Redmen for the year. They have two more away meets against Connecticut, Feb. 22, and M.I.T. Mar. 1.

SWIMMERS CORNER: There was a fairly good crowd on hand, but the loudest cheerer was manager Mary Lou Dawson. The win, causing Rodgers to crack a wide smile, gave notice the Redmen will be tough in the New Englands.

Frosh Sextet Romps Over Amherst, 7-0

BY STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Led by the three goal performance of the up and coming scooter line of Bruce Winter, Glen Hale and Charlie Donovan, the UMass frosh sextet trounced Amherst College yesterday, 7-0, in a game played at Orr Rink.

This, the Little Redman's eighth consecutive win, brings their record to an impressive 10-2.

From the outset, this game was a complete rout with UMass outplaying the hapless Lord Jeffs in every phase of the game. Amherst was out shot, 69-17.

The Little Redmen scored four first period goals, three within a space of 38 seconds, to put the game quickly on ice.

Al Nickerson, developing into a high scoring defenseman, cashed in on his fifth goal at 8:18 on a 15 foot screen shot. Bob Whelden and Dan Reidy got the assists.

Thirty seconds later the scooter line went to work. At 8:48, Donovan tipped in Billy Brown's slap shot for his fifth goal of the season, and third in as many games. Assists went to Brown and Hale. Mike Waldron chipped in a 8:56 with his goal from a left side scramble. Winter got the assist.

With 32 seconds left, Reidy flipped a pass on the fly to high scoring Jack Edwards who promptly slammed it into the nets.

Newcomer Dan O'Connell made it 5-0 at 7:09 of the second period, shooting from right in front of the crease. Assists went to Jim Brewster and John Morganto. With 1:04 left, the third member of the scooter line got into the act as center Winter tipped in Nickerson's long screen shot. Donovan and Nickerson got the assists. It was Winter's seventh goal.

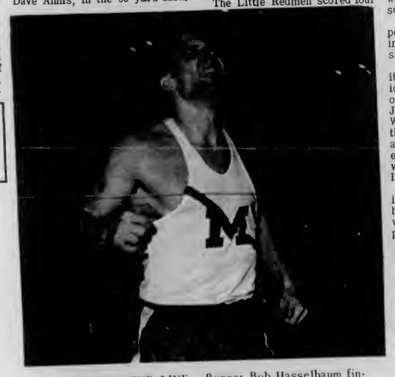
BLUELINE BANTER - The scooter line gives Coach Ben Smith another powerful line to go along with the Edwards-Reidy-Whelden combo. Whereas the latter relies to a great extent on muscle, the former emphasizes speed and finesse . . . Defenseman Bob Bartholomew played a strong game as did goalie Bruce Crawford who notched his first shutout . . . Waldron, who was unable to be there was replaced by Glen Hale . . . Waldron has been doing a fine job lately . . .



The next and last game will be Feb. 27 at Salem State in what should be a real grudge match . . . In December, State topped UMass on Dave Murphy's overtime goal . . . Needless to say, the Little Redmen have been looking forward to this one for a long time . . .

Coach Homer Barr's varsity wrestling team scored a 43-3 win over a Dartmouth team which could only muster four wrestlers last night. The UMass freshmen won out over the Dartmouth frosh, 30-13.

Nick DiDomenico and Mike Brauner both pinned their opponents. Brain Urquhart won by decision, and Phil Davis, wrestling in four weight classes this year, lost his last bout by a decision.

All of the rest of UMass' points were won by forfeit. For the Redmen, this was only the second time they have defeated the Indians.

The highlight of the frosh contest was Carl Damhan's 10-4 win over Dave Pritchard in the unlimited class. For Pritchard, this was his first loss in three years.

BREAKING THE LINE - Runner Bob Hasselbaum finished first in the 600-yard run against UConn, but the Redmen lost by a narrow margin, 53-51. (MDC photo by Dave Evans).

Harvard Keeps R.O.T.C.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Reserve Officer Training programs will continue at Harvard University if satisfactory arrangements can be worked out with the military, Nathan R. Pusey, university president, said Thursday.

Pusey said the Harvard Corporation concurs with the faculty's desire, expressed by a vote Feb. 4, for academic control over course offerings and teaching appointments.

Pusey said " we will endeavor as quickly as we can to negotiate with the various military services....to have changes effected to meet the faculty's desires."

IT WAS A WEEK AGO YESTERDAY that 50 state police broke up 33 UMass students' Whitmore sit-in and triggered a blast of campus and state commentary, pro and con, on the decision to call the police, on the sit-in itself, and on administrators and students involved in the incident. Quad Students Meet Faculty, Administrators

Can we change the University without burning it down? The Committee for a University Forum a group of North Quad Students, has arranged a meeting Tuesday night, February 25, at 8:00 p.m. in Worcester (North) Commons between administrators, faculty, and the student body to discuss change in the University.

This meeting will be an open forum on such matters as the military / industrial complex, meaningful curriculum changes, course and teacher evaluation.

The Committee hopes that this will be the first of many such meetings and that some sort of meaningful reforms will follow.

Panels Workshops Featured In Mahar Conference Saturday

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

The structure and nature of the University and questions raised by the arrest of 33 sit-in demonstrators a week ago, will be central theme of a conference Saturday of Students and faculty, in Mahar auditorium, beginning at 10:00 a.m.

After a series of short introductory remarks, the conference will begin with an initial panel discussion on "Educational and political committment", with John Childs, associate Dean of Admissions, Milton Mayer and John Nelson, English Department, Michael Quinlan and Dan Weir, students, and moderator Rick Fieldman.

There will then be a series of workshops dealing with questions of major concern to the relevence of University life, ranging from "The responsibility of the intellectual" to "Anarchy".

After a lunch break, a second panel will discuss University "Life Styles", with Jules Chaintzky, English Department, David Purdy, Campus Minister, Bill Wilkinson, graduate student, Terry Gillespie, student, and moderator Steve Kinsky.

The day - long program will conclude with another work - shop and the drafting of plans for constructive future action.

The conference is sponsored by the Valentine's Day Defense Committee, and is organized, according to Steve Krinsky, "to raise money to pay the fines of the students arrested in last week's Dow protest," and to chart plans to improve the University and its role in society.

Dow Alternatives Discussed In Faculty Senate Meeting

By JOAN WORSNOP
Staff Reporter
and
RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

An unusually well-attended 137th meeting of the Faculty Senate was held yesterday afternoon in Memorial Hall. In a scene reminiscent of the two sessions following the black demands of last November, a large and mixed audience of Senators and visitors was anxious to hear such remarks as the President and Provost would make concerning the events of last Thursday regarding the Whitmore sit-in. President Lederle opened the meeting, turning the floor over to Dean Field, who briefly recounted the events of the week which led to the sit-in Thursday afternoon.

Dean Field's recapitulation was essentially equivalent to what we already knew of the events; he cited Associate Provost Allen's letter in Thursday's DAILY COLLEGIAN as being an essentially accurate history of events as he (Field) saw them.

In later questioning, the President and Dean Field added somewhat to our understanding of the events, particularly as they related to outside influences acting upon the President. Provost Tippo discussed the group which was gathered in the President's office for the 5 p.m. meeting; and the President reported that he had had a call from one of the Governor's assistants, but that there had been absolutely no pressure from Boston as to what course of action to take. The President did say, however, that he suspected that, had he not acted, there might later have been pressure to call in police.

Further questions from the floor concerned the black students' demonstration of last Fall. One Senator asked why the black demonstrators were invited into talk over their demands and these students last week were not. Field replied that the black students had indicated a greater willingness to negotiate than did the recruiting demonstrators. The President said that he maintained an open door policy - some students did come to see him on Monday, but that later in the week they were less willing to hold discussions.

Prof. Isidore Silver pressed a particularly insistent line of questioning concerning the legal aspects of the arrest and the charges brought against the students. He was concerned to ask whether or not the administration had specified the charges to be brought, or whether they were aware of the magnitude and consequences of any that might be pressed. President Lederle replied that neither he nor any of the administration had specified any charges, that the matter was wholly in the hands of the police. Prof. Silver replied that they might not have been the best ones to trust with this vital matter.

Prof. Silver cited the demonstration at the University of Chicago which lasted 16 days but did not require police action. The president there was prepared, he reported, to lose any building rather than call police. Lederle replied that, "This university does not belong to the students; it does not belong to the faculty; it does not belong to the Trustees - it belongs to the people of the commonwealth." He said he wouldn't want to be the president of a university that tolerated students sitting in for a long period of time.

Prof. Silver was concerned that the students arrested were going to have police records. He thought that the president should have talked to the demonstrators, "exhausting every reasonalbe alternative" before calling in the police. The President reiterated his view that discussions were not possible since the students insisted that they were not open for negotia-

UM-UNH Exchange Seen Successful

By NOREEN DOLAN
Squaw Talk Writer

(Editor's note - The writer is a University of Mexico student participating in the exchange program.)

UMass and New Mexico established an exchange program for the students in order to give them an opportunity for a broad undergraduate experience.

Each of the universities, through the departments of Education, accept approximately ten students from the other university on a "special student" status; that is, ten students per semester. The exchange lasts for one semester and the student participant is given an instate status for that semester in regard to fees and tuition.

The universities are very similar in respect to student population and faculty and campus, however UMass is slightly larger.

The University of New Mexico is entirely different in atmosphere. The university is situated in a valley, not far from the Sandia Mountains on the western horizon and the high plateau region on the East. Mexican and Spanish culture influence the style of architecture, not only of the university but of the entire city of Albuquerque. The campus buildings and town homes are made of cement with an adobe-like finish.

Albuquerque is a city of 350,000 people. It is one of the largest cities in New Mexico and thus has quite a few opportunities for an exchange student. In September Albuquerque hosts the annual State Fair. The exhibitions are samples of the produce of the state, Indian villages, and the farms. New Mexico is a major supplier of cotton, pecans, and chile.

One of the most striking things about New Mexico is the openness and bigness of the state that isn't at all present in Massachusetts. The nearest town to Albuquerque is thirty miles and the nearest city of any size is Santa Fe, which is sixty miles away.

The academic side of UNM is basically the same as that of UMass. As Frosh, students are enrolled automatically into the University College. After completing 26 hours and fulfilling the requirements of their particular college, (the College of Arts and Sciences, for example), the student is admitted to that college and continues in the degree seeking status. The University of New Mexico also has, among its colleges, the College of Pharmacy, the College of Dental Hygiene, and the School of Law.

A. P. Campus Roundup

Two hundred chanting demonstrators protested the return of military recruiters to Ohio's Oberlin College Thursday and college officials finally asked the three Marine Corps representatives to leave.

It was the first time armed forces recruiters had tried to conduct interviews on the campus since students protested their appearance in October 1967.

The three Marines managed to get past some demonstrators into work of professors living in outlying areas could be put into action to report on conditions in the hinterlands.

Unfinished business was next in the proceedings. The final report of the Ad-hoc Committee on Calendar Policy was brought up; and the Senate heard their proposal for a rearrangement of the Fall semester calendar to permit completing final exams before Christmas. In order to manage this, they proposed a scheme of a 4-course Fall semester of 11 weeks in length, followed by a 3-week special session in January, with a normal 5-course semester in the Spring.

Following the better than one hour of exchange on the subject, the Senate moved on to its regular agenda. In addition to some routine and mechanical matters, the Provost discussed the procedures followed in cancelling classes on stormy days. He agreed that there had been confusion last week, and thought that some procedures could be developed for making earlier and better decisions on cancelling classes. He suggested that a net-Oberlin's St. Peter Hall, but when the entrance to the student placement center was blocked they went instead to the dean of students' office. Later, Oberlin officials asked them to leave the campus.

On other campuses around the country Thursday there were these developments:

Chicago - More than 100 Negro students and a few whites stormed into the office of Roosevelt University's president and shouted demands for a black studies program and for amnesty for five expelled students. Denied an immediate decision, the students retreated from the room, jerked out telephone lines, tore down fire hoses and sprayed water down stairwells.

Ypsilanti, Mich. - Sheriff's deputies surprised a group of youths attempting to take over the administration building at Eastern Michigan University. Eleven were arrested.

Arabs Set for Response To Aircraft Sabotage

MIDEAST (AP) - Arab nations, braced for an expected counterblow from Israel, have been warned by Defense Minister Moshe Dayan that they will be hit "in the place that will hurt them most" in reprisal for guerrilla attacks.

A Defense Ministry spokesman insisted that Dayan was not referring directly to the latest Arab attack on an Israeli airliner, but he issued the warning the day after the El Al plane was hit by guerrillas in Zurich.

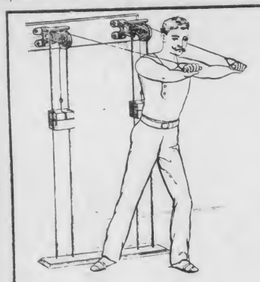
Reliable informants said Dayan declared in a statement Wednesday before the Weizmann Institute of Science: "We regard our neighboring states as responsible for all terrorist activities. When we will make reprisals, we will hit them in the place that will hurt them most and will be the most convenient for us.

"We'll let the Arabs stew for a while," said a leading Israeli commentator. "All their governments are certain of a big Israeli reprisal and are scurrying around frantically to accuse each other of complicity and thus escape the consequences themselves.

Israel's militant elements have held off in demands for retaliation, as they awaited the outcome of calls from their government and the United States for international action to protect civil aviation.

In a message, Israeli foreign Minister Abba Eban asked U.N. Secretary-General U Thant Thursday to spell out his recent call for "constructive international action" to prevent repetitions of the Zurich attack.

Eban said that as recently as Feb. 1, a conference of Arab saboteurs was held in Cairo and received official blessings from Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser.



"The central truth which the international community must face is that responsibility does not fall exclusively on the individuals who carried out the assault," he added. "They are members of known organizations which operate on and from the soil of U.N. member states with the approval, encouragement and practical support of their governments."

Garrison Rests Case

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Dist. Atty. Jim Garrison and his fourman prosecution team abruptly rested their case Thursday in the month-old Clay Shaw conspiracy trial.

Defense attorney F. Irvin Dymond immediately called for a court-directed verdict of innocent to the charge that Shaw conspired to assassinate President John F. Kennedy.

Gorman House Has Phantom

By ANNE HILLERMAN
Staff Reporter

After this week's issue of "The Central Voice," people all over campus are wondering who is the phantom of first floor Gorman.

"I find anonymous articles in my mail box," said "Voice" editor Pam Pepper, "or poems like that one signed 'Phantom of First Floor Gorman'. If they're good we print them."

The purpose of "The Central Voice", which Pam Pepper and a staff of ten put out each week, is two-fold.

"The paper tries to make the Central area residents more aware of what is happening on campus and to build a feeling of community among them," Miss Pepper said. This semester the perky freshman from Van Meter has published three issues of "The Central Voice." For the future the area paper hopes to begin a sports column, have more human interest stories about students living in the central section and continue its concern with campus problems.

"Reaction to "The Central Voice" has been good. People are reading it and I'm getting lots of comments."

Defense Secretary Laird Favors Anti-Missile System

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Thursday "I lean toward going forward" with an antimissile system and rejected Senate pleas to delay its deployment pending arms control talsk with Russia.

Laird made it clear his overriding concern is with Russia pushing a strategic weapons buildup "at a very high rate" and with Red China's missile threat in the mid-1970's.

The new defense secretary told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that:

- The Russians have escalated the arms race, including test of a "sophisticated new ABM antiballistic missile system."

- Communist China is expected to have 20 to 30 intercontinental missile launchers in place by 1975. This figure is about a dozen missiles bigger than the 18-to-20 figure Laird used at a news conference last week.

- The Soviet Union has in being or under construction more than the 1,054 U.S. ICBM's and is embarked on a "crash program" to catch up with the United States in missile-launching submarines. The Soviets won't close the missile submarine gap until 1973 or 1974, he said.

In relays, committee members - none of whom spoke up for the ABM - unsuccessfully pressed Laird for a commitment to delay deployment of the Sentinal ABM.

About the most the senators got out of Laird was his statement that he shares the hope of Secretary of State William P. Rogers that nuclear weapons negotiations can start before any U.S. antimissile system is deployed.

But, in repeated exchanges with Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., the defense secretary indicated he did not want to hold up on any antimissile system until the effective date of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty. He said it might take 12 or 24 months to win ratification from the necessary 40 to so countries.

This Sunday the Student Senate will discuss an appropriation for the paper. If the money is approved, people of the central area can look forward to more weeks of "The Central Voice" and maybe even another appearance by 'The Phantom of First Floor Gorman'.

Butterfield
Commuters (4)
Coolidge Middle Field (1)
Fraternities (1)
Hills North
Van Meter North
Washington Upper

Nominations papers are available now in the R.S.O. office. Papers must be returned by 5:30 p.m. on Friday, February 28. Elections will be held Thursday, March 5, 1969. Dorm elections 6:00 to 9:00 p.m. Commuter and fraternity elections 9:00 to 5:30 in the Student Union.

Of Bills and Sense

The Massachusetts House of Representative's Committee on Education will hold an open hearing Wednesday on a bill to raise the tuition at all colleges (including UMass) to $500 a year. This would mean a $300 a year raise for all UMass students beginning next September. The bill, filed by Representative Charles W. Long of Westwood, would also set a minimum room and board rate at $420 a year. This, however, would not affect UMass students who pay a higher rate for room and board anyway.

Most House leaders, when contacted by the DAILY COLLEGIAN, predicted failure for the bill. Representative George Rogers, chairman of the Committee on Education has said that "I will do my best to see that the bill is defeated." He added, 'such legislation is not in the best interests of my constituents and of education in general."

David Bartley, newly elected speaker of the House and UMass graduate said, "I am 100% opposed to the bill." He added, "It will not add substantially to the State revenue and would place a great burden on lower and middle class families who cannot afford the increase." He concluded, "It would place another roadblock on our most important resource, the youth of Massachusetts."

So the opposition is set. They will argue that the bill will not bring a substantial amount of money into the State and would only serve to hurt the interests of higher education in the Commonwealth. This argument must, however, be spread to a majority of the members of the Massachusetts House who might, at this time, feel a bit edgy about turning down a plan to fatten the State treasury, especially after they hit the taxpayers for a pay hike this week.

But this is not the way to soothe the State's financial headaches. Education is too vital a need to be compromised in the annual hassle over money. Write your representative. Go to Boston Wednesday and attend the hearing. Make known your position on the bill. Unless, of course, you want to pay $300 a year more for your education.

There's a Hitch on This Door

And as he slammed the door sharply he hustled to the corner to thumb his next ride. The expediency of hitch-hiking on a rural campus of this size is uncontested. The rules of the game, however, are somewhat ill-defined or at least misunderstood. It seems unnecessary for the driver to endure so many doors slammed as the hitch-hiker hurriedly exits.

Perhaps it's just the rider's proud way of maintaining his dignity even though he must "beg" a ride. Or it may be his awareness of the driver's momentary delay if the door is not securely shut.

Despite the reason it is a rude, ungracious part of the system which a little consideration would remedy.

Parking

To the editor:

I am a commuter who has the misfortune of being allowed to park in "N" lot. I say "misfortune" only because there are so few parking spaces available. I pity the poor commuter whose earliest class is at 10:10, because he either has to get up to "N" lot by 8:30 or stand a chance of not finding a place to park. It isn't bad enough that we commuters have to share "N" lot with Dan O'Connell's construction workers, but we also have to share it with all of the people who park their illegally. I wouldn't be surprised if half of the cars that park in "N" lot daily don't belong there. I sympathize with those commuters who have been condemned to "F" lot or worse (if that's possible), but it is impossible to fit all of the cars from "F" and "N" lots plus a few cars from lots 5 and 6 into "N" lot. It burns me up to see cars in "N" lot which have been assigned to lot 5 or 6.

There happen to be guard posts at the entrances to all of the numbered parking lots on campus. Their function is to prevent unauthorized cars from parking where they shouldn't. Why doesn't "N" lot have one of these guard posts? Why isn't "N" lot patrolled by our campus police like it should be? I think that that is the main problem. No one bothers to check "N" lot for parking violators. Something must be done to alleviate the parking problem in "N" lot.

The "Code"

To the editor:

I am writing to clarify two points concerning my participation in last Thursday's sit-in at the University of Massachusetts, and my subsequent arrest.

First, I would like to make clear to all that I was acting solely as an individual on the basis of my own conscience. I was not participating as the Executive Secretary of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, nor was I a member of the Ad Hoc Committee which planned the demonstration. No member of the King Council participates in Council-sponsored events with which his conscience does not agree; by the same token, each member of the Council is free to act on his own conscience in activities beyond those of the Council. This, in part, explains why the membership of the King Council includes some Greeks, some independents, some members of SDS, some members of Afro-Am, and some faculty and administrators. Each is free to be an individual first, and it was on this basis that I acted.

Second, I did not join the demonstration to protest either Dow or the complicity of the University in an economic group often called the military-industrial complex. Although I am in general agreement with those who sat in, I have chosen other methods to express my feelings.

I decided to join the sit-in at 4 p.m., when I learned from a sympathetic administrator that the decision to call the State Police had already been made. My decision was made on the following bases:

1. The Administration was acting in violation of the letter and the intent of the Picketing Code. The next-to-last paragraph of the Code says they MAY call in the University Police if the demonstrators fail to disperse. The option - the only option - is to not involve the police at all.
2. The Administration has no means of exercising control over the actions of the State Police - they have no way to prevent them from using excessive force.
3. The Administrative disregard of the wishes of the Student and Faculty Senates as stated in the Picketing Code, and for the personal safety of the demonstrators, served to point up an attitude which I have long resented: that the Administrators of the University have the right to make basically independent decisions which directly effect the lives of other human beings, without making any attempt to communicate on a meaningful level with the people involved.

Although I was present for different reasons, I am as guilty as any of the other people arrested Thursday night. I have slept well these last few nights because of my moral stand. I wonder if the men in Whitmore responsible for our arrest that night can say the same.

Gilbert J. Salk

Some vs. Many

To the editor:

Let us state at the outset that we do not approve of Dow Chemical's exploitation of the war in Viet Nam (although it is unlikely that Dow's non-involvement would prevent the Government from securing napalm), nor are we happy that the University of Massachusetts supports, through a general policy, recruitment on campus by Dow, other industries involved in the war, and the military (although in a democracy it is important that no voices be suppressed, regardless of their ugliness). Neither are we comfortable about the fact that the administration has invoked State Police over which it has no control.

But we could not join last Thursday's sit-in, because, as has been the case in the past with other demonstrations, it was not clear what the real purposes of the demonstration were.

Was a purpose of this demonstration to express a minority opinion?

Was a purpose to represent through action by a minority a majority's desire for change?

Was a purpose to make the student body, the community, and/or Dow Chemical more aware of the moral issues?

Or was the purpose pure sensationalism?

A conflict of motives became apparent as the focus changed during the course of the demonstration. At first the action was directed toward a forum with Dow and a protest of their policy. Then it shifted to banning all industrial and military recruitment. Finally, the attention was on Police Brutality. There was a great deal of idealism, anger, frustration, compassion, and energy present, which could have been very effective had there been some sense of direction and a structure to work within. If these demonstrators were merely "doing their own thing" and reaffirming their own convictions, then we must express disappointment in their lack of commitment to social change.

We feel that serious attempts to produce change should first involve the use of already established channels of communication. If these fail (and this University does NOT have a history of TOTAL failure of legitimate communication), the failure, if publicized, would increase support for the protest. If in this case such attempts were made, they should have been publicized, especially in view of the fact that the change, or at least the principle, involved here affects a majority. Informing the public on the issues and activity revolving around the issues is extremely important in effecting real change in attitudes. (The back of the sheet distributed in Whitmore Thursday was an example of an attempt to inform - relevant statements with references cited.) Serious attempts at social change (change in attitudes and values) involve a great deal of effort and tolerance on the part of reformers.

Degree and method of commitment to a cause is certainly a personal decision. But whatever the degree or method, the energies of the few who have the courage and conviction to put feelings into action should be channeled effectively. Let us act, but let us act effectively. Time and energy are too precious to waste.

Wrestlers Host Dual Meet

Tomorrow, UMass will host Amherst, Tufts, and New Hampshire in a quadrangular wrestling meet.

Starting at 1 p.m., UMass will wrestle UNH as a dual meet, and Amherst will wrestle Tufts as a dual meet, and scores will be recorded as such. Freshmen will wrestle in the wrestling practice room and varsity will wrestle in the auxiliary gym on two mats.

After the dual meets are completed, the winners of the UM-UNH meet will wrestle the winners of the Amherst-Tufts meet; and the losers will wrestle losers as though in tournament fashion.

Dual meet scored and tournament scores will be recorded. Scoring for the tournament shall be determined by the four head coaches before action begins.

Weigh in can be anytime after 7:30 a.m. tomorrow. Net weights will be used.

Girls Gym Team Travels To Southern Connecticut

After several easy meets, the UMass girls gymnastics team is in for some real battles to keep their winning record in tact. Tomorrow the girls will travel to Southern Connecticut for a triway meet. Girls from East Stroudsburg State College will also be competing.

Next Thursday, the team travels to Penn State and from there to the Eastern Regional Championships at which they will be strong contenders.

Earlier this week the UMass woman's gymnastics team defeated a strong Canadian girls team, composed of 13 and 14 year olds by a narrow margin of 87.00 - 85.55.

The Vandreuil Silhouettes from Montreal, Canada, jumped into a two point lead after the floor exercise event. In the second event, Margie Sims and Sue Clancy each scored a 9.2 in side horse vaulting and the score was tied.

In the balance beam, which developed into a real contest combined with stop watch difficulties forced the girls to give repeat performances. Margie Sims scored a 8.2 despite a fall. Ruth Morse turned in a 7.5, the highest score she has earned in her career. At the end of this event, UMass jumped into a two point lead.

The uneven parallel bars proved to be the weak point of the night for the UMass girls and the Canadiens swept the event.

Gymnasts Take On Navy's Midshipmen

Coming off a weekend win over powerful Syracuse, the Redman gymnastics team travels down to the Naval Academy for a 1:30 p.m. meet tomorrow.

UMass, which fields a strong floor exercise team, will go with their regulars, Co-captain Mike Kasavana and Dick DelGallo supported by Bill MacAuley, Norm Vexler and Joe Reed. DelGallo has been having a fantastic season and has been a consistent high performer in the floor exercises as well as the rings.

Ed Jones, Frank Dean, Rick Reilly and Vexler will be competing in the vaulting event. Vexler, who was hampered by a shoulder injury earlier in the season, had another strong showing against Syracuse.

DelGallo, Reed and George Seibert will be competing in the rings. DelGallo, who has been scoring above 9.0 in the rings all season, posted a 9.2 last weekend.

In the long horse event, Jones, Bob Henry, Vexler, Reed and Steve Cary will be competing. Cary has been another consistent performer this year for the Redmen.

Hoop Team Sinks Navy, 61-57, in Overtime

Cagers Host Hot Maine, Frosh to Play Dartmouth, Brace for Rockwood Acad.

BY PETER F. PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

There should be more bombing at Curry Hicks Cage tomorrow night than at a Student Senate meeting. Consider the facts that UMass opponent, Maine is the tenth ranked team scoring leader. Consider also that frosh opponent Rockwood Academy is rolling along, averaging (get this, 105!!) points per game.

Combine all this with the knowledge that the Redmen can win their first Yankee Conference basketball title outright, since 1962 and an exciting and entertaining night at the Cage is in store. Gametime for the frosh 5:30 and the varsity 7:30. The frosh also play tonight at Dartmouth.

Maine is presently in the midst of its finest hoop season in years. They have won seven in a row going into tomorrow's game and are shooting for their first winning season since 1965. The Black Bears are presently 10-10 and are 5-4 in the Conference. Those five Conference victories are the most for the Pine Tree staters since the 1960-61 season.

The big story about this Maine team is their scoring exploits. The Bears are presently averaging 85 points per game, tenth in the country. They are also averaging 56.6 rebounds a game, good enough to be fifth in the country in that category. The Bears probably lead the country in shot attempts.

The Maine offense is simple, get the ball and shoot. Don't worry about where you are. Just shoot the ball and hope it goes in. When some guys are launching them up from 30 feet or more, defense is a problem.

Jim Stephenson is the big Maine boy to stop. The 6'3 senior is averaging 23.1 points a game and is the highest scorer in Maine history. The Bangor (Me.) native is also one of the three or four all time career Conference scorers.

Starting with Stephenson at guard is 6' junior Marshall Todd, a transfer from Colby. Todd, a Rumford, Me native and who, like all Maine players is capable of shooting well from downtown, is averaging 14.3 points per game.

At center is 6'4 High Campbell. Though his height doesn't seem to strike fear in the hearts of Conference opposition, this Farmington Falls, Me., senior is the leading rebounder, averaging 13 caroms a game. Campbell in addition, is averaging 14.3 points a game.

At the forward positions are two sophomores, Dennis Stanley from Mexico, Me., and Bob Chandler from Marshfield. The 6'6 Stanley was leading Main frosh scorer last season and this year is averaging 11.8 points a game. Chandler is averaging 9.3 points this season.

Probably seeing some substitute action for the Bears will be junior Russ Vickery, a 6'3 junior.

The first time these two teams met Dec. 18, UMass came from behind in the second half to rout the Bears, 106-81. In that game, UMass' Ray Ellerbrook scored 31, which is the best scoring performance by a Redman this season.

UMass, after going into the lead, blasted the Bears away with a fast break led by Joe DiSarcina, who set a school record by passing for 15 assists. DiSarcina won't be around Saturday, and the Redmen will have to go elsewhere to find a general for their offense, something that will have to be in high gear to match guns with the high-scoring Bears.

The freshmen will have to have a well-oiled offense when they go into their game tomorrow. Last year, Rockwood came into the Cage, unannounced and unknown and proceeded to take the Little Redmen into overtime before bowing 105-96. In that game, Rockwood's Henry Searight, now at Manhattan College, set a possible Cage record with 52 points.

Rockwood, 8-0 thus far, may have someone who will challenge Searight's record. He is 6'4 Henry Wilmore from New York City. Wilmore is scoring 45 points a game, although he was held to 38 in one game. He has a little support in the rest of the lineup.

At center, is 6'4 Ron Rutledge also from New York. Rutledge is averaging 28 points a game. Then at the other forward spot is Paul Boggia from Leonia, N. J. Boggia who is 6'1 is averaging 30 points. That makes a 103 average point putout from the front-court.

Then there is the backcourt. The playmaker has a familiar name. He is Curtis Rowe (not a UCLA transfer), 6'0 from Peekskill, N.Y. At the other guard is Tony Simonelli 6'3 from St. Joseph's, of Pittsfield, averaging 13 points a game. Seeing a lot of backcourt action is 5'9 Jay White from New York City, averaging 14 points.

Rockwood's lowest output all season has been 87 points. Wilmont does not play in all games but just in ones that Rockwood considers tough. He is expected to play tomorrow. It should be an interesting test for the undefeated Little Redmen who seem to be bored sometimes because they have won so easy.

UMass can't look past their frosh game tonight with Dartmouth, who led for much of the first meeting between the two teams before UMass came on late to take a 61-57 win. Dartmouth is an inconsistent team that [illegible] one past game defeated Yale, scoring a school record 121 [illegible] and then coming back to lose to a mediocre Chamberlayne Junior College team.

But the [illegible]ns gave UMass more trouble than any other opponent, and [illegible] be tough on their home court.

REDMAN RAVINGS - Julius Erving will have some fans from home when the Little Redmen meet Rockwood Saturday . . . Don Ryan, who coached Erving at a youth center team in Hempstead, N.Y., is bringing his current boys team up from New York to see Erving . . .

ANNAPOLIS - Clutch free throw shooting by Pete Gayeska, Ray Ellerbrook and Jack Gallagher gave UMass a hard earned 61-57 victory in overtime against the Naval Academy before 1500 Midshipmen in the sweltering Navy Field House.

Tied 48 - 48 at the end of regulation, the Redmen handled some great board work by Ken Mathias and Gayeska in the smart 3-1 zone trap defense to push themselves into a 56 - 50 advantage. From then on, UMass relied on some good team work from the charity stripe to sew this important win up.

The first half was a study in deliberate offense. Both clubs held the ball for only good open shots.

Navy broke out in front early on the shooting of John Tolmie and Jack Conrad. Outside shots by Dennis Chapman, Ellerbrook and Bob Dempsey, however, kept the visitors even with their hosts for the first eight minutes of the action.

Free throws from Ellerbrook and Chapman put UMass up 10-8 at the 9:18 mark, but they could never open any kind of a substantial lead against the tenacious Middies.

A three point drive by Tolmie gave the Middies a 15-14 edge but the rebounding of Mathias and Gayeska enabled the Redmen to stay close for the remainder of the period. Mathias' foul shot with a minute to go knotted the half time score at 19 all.

UMass outrebounded their opponent 20-9 in the first half and should have been ahead at intermission by all odds, but the Middies were aided though by five offensive fouls called on the visitors by some rather unique refereeing.

Baskets by Ellerbrook and Gayeska got the Redman offense going in the opening minutes of the second half. Scott Semko and Tolmie countered for Navy seconds later and tied the score at 23 apiece.

UMass then moved into a six point lead as Gayeska and Mathias crashed the offensive boards for follow ups. The visitors held off Navy for awhile on free throws, but the scrappy Middies were back to within two points with eight minutes to go.

Tolmie's scoring finally overcame the Redman lead and in the waning seconds of regulation time, it looked bad for UMass' tournament hopes.

Pressure shots by Dick Samuelson, Chapman and Mathias tied the score each time Navy managed a two point play. In the last desperate ticks of the clock, Ellerbrook missed from the corner setting up a tense but successful five minute overtime period.

Bob Dempsey did a fine job replacing field general Joey DiSarcina last night.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Gayeska led all players with 16 points.... Also in double figures for the Redmen were Chapman and Ellerbrook at 12 and Mathias at 13....Mathias led all rebounders with 16....Dempsey had six assists....UMass outrebounded Navy, 47-24...If UMass can win the rest of their games, they have a good chance at a NCAA bid for post-season play....Redmen are now 14-6, (7-0 in the Yankee Conference)....Navy is 7-12.

Slick Skating Puckmen Set for Norwich

BY WALT STACHURA
Senior Reporter

Seeking to tie a UMass record for wins in a season and to stretch their winning streak to four, the UMass hockey team will face off against the Norwich cadets at Orr Rink tomorrow night at 7 p.m. in the final home appearance for the Redman skaters.

UMass has thumped Holy Cross, UConn and Amherst in their last three appearances to raise their record to 8-10. The record for most wins by a UMass team is 9, set by the 1930-31 team.

Another important aspect for tomorrow's game will be Jeff Sanborn's chase to overtake Russ Kidd as leading lifetime scorer for UMass. Jeff has 74 points and needs six to tie Kidd.

Norwich will not make the task of the Redmen an easy one. The Cadets have played consistent hockey all season and are ranked above the Redmen in Division I of the Eastern College Athletic Conference standings.

Greg Stone Doug Powling
Key Defensemen

UMass hockey coach Jack Cannaff calls the Cadets a real solid and well balanced hockey team that is not hurt when they have to play their second and third lines.

One of the leading performers for Norwich is Tom Smelster, a Norwood native, who is the second leading goaltender in Division II with a 3.86 average.

Trackmen Meet Conference Rivals UNH

Coming off a tough 53-51 defeat to UConn, the UMass trackmen run up against another strong conference rival, the Wildcats of New Hampshire, tomorrow in Durham.

The Coach Ken O'Brien expects some close individual battles that will probably determine the outcome of the meet. Hurdler Jerry Spellman, who just tied the school's hurdling mark, will oppose the Wildcat's Ed Jackson. Redman junior hurdler Marc Lefever may miss the meet because of a muscle pull. Sprinters Walter Mayo, Ed Heywood, and Dave Marble, who swept the dash against UConn, will try to do the same against UNH with soph Jeff Smith supplying the opposition.

The field events team will also have tough competition. UMass shot put record holder, Ed Arcaro, will have his hands full when he takes on Bill Phillips who Coach O'Brien terms "the best weight thrower in the conference as of now." Phillips, besides throwing the weight and shot, will join teammate Gary King in the broad jump against Redmen Dick Dyer, Clarence Gaynor, and Dave Canterbury.

King will double for the Wildcats when he high jumps against Cal Carpenter, Payl Nyman, and John Ariensen, a strong UMass trio.

The Redmen are counting on good depth in the middle and long distance running events to pile up points against UNH. In the 600, senior Bob Hasselbaum will renew his old rivalry with Bob Wear on the fast New Hampshire track. Ron Wayne and Diego Gonzalez, who set the school's mile and 1000 yard records, respectively, will compete in both these events against Bob Vanier. The Wildcats' Joe Bell and Tim Martin will try to stop UMass' strong two mile continent of Paul Hoss, Leo Duart, and Charlie Lang.

Bob Hasselbaum, Steve Chase, Bill Donaldson and Spellman will make up the Redman one mile relay, the event that could decid the close meet.

JDF

MERMAN IN ACTION - Co-captain Bob Asquith won the 200-yard individual medley in action against The Coast Guard Academy Wednesday. The Redmen will travel to Storrs, Conn., tomorrow to meet the Huskies. The Redmen have a 4-4 record and will be seeking to push it above the .500 mark. (MDC photo by Ara Dedakian.)

RETIRING BOARD OF TRUSTEES CHAIRMAN - Frank L. Boyden receives a plaque from Student Senate President Paul Silverman at a Board meeting held Friday.

Boyden Named Honorary Board Chairman; Succeeded by Healy

By RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Frank L. Boyden of Deerfield was named Honorary Chairman of the Board of Trustees Friday shortly before he handed the gavel to newly elected Chairman Joseph P. Healy of Arlington.

The venerable educator was lauded by his colleagues on the Board upon his retirement after serving as Chairman for 10 years.

In accepting the gavel from Boyden, Healy told the Board, "through the broad scope of the history of American education at all levels, no one can equal Dr. Boyden's contributions."

Boyden often confesses he doesn't like to make speeches and Friday told the Board he had no words to express his feelings. He told them that when he was a boy Tennyson was popular and "required reading". He said that a speech of Ullysses in the works of Tennyson suited his needs for the day. However, true to the teaching profession and coupled with the wit that is singularly his, he said "but you all have fine libraries in your home towns and I want you all to go back and read that speech and think of me."

Boyden then read " I am become a name, for always roaming with a hungry heart much have I seen and known, cities of men and manners, climates, councils, governments, myself not least, but honoured of them all, and drunk delight of battle with my peers far on the ringing plains of windy Troy. I am a part of all that I have met."

He again later quoted Tennyson, "How dull it is to pause, to make an end, to rust unburnished, not to shine in use. As though to breathe were life. Life piled on life were all too little and of one to me little remains, but every hour is saved from that eternal silence, something more, a bringer of new things."

The retired Headmaster of Deerfield Academy who will be 90 in September, noticeably moved with sentiment told the Board "in permitting me to serve for so many years you have tended me an honor which I shall never forget. It has been the experience of my life to have served with men who have been so dedicated to education and the University."

Student Senate President Paul Silverman presented a plaque to Boyden on behalf of the student body which commended him "for many years of devoted service to the University and the Commonwealth."

Interviewed in his Deerfield home several weeks ago, following the announcement he would retire as Chairman, Boyden told the MDC that he plans to remain an active member of the Board of Trustees.

His appointment as honorary Chairman of the Board Friday, on a lifetime basis, will allow him to take part in all executive committee proceedings. He was also named to several committees.

In that Deerfield interview Boyden said he was "very keen about the future of the University". He praised the devotion of the other trustees and the "generous support of the Legislature".

He looked back with pride on the growth of the University since he became a member of the Board. "I've had 25 years on the board and I hope to continue to be very active" he said.

Conference Discusses University Life, Seeks Contributions for Demonstrators

The Valentine's Day Defense Committee held morning and afternoon panel discussions and workshop sessions Saturday for the dual purpose of raising money for the fines of the 33 students arrested in the Dow sit-in and of giving students and faculty members an opportunity to discuss questions of life styles, community committment and responsibility within the University.

The program began in Mahar Auditorium at 10 a.m. with opening remarks by Ron Hardy. Following this, a panel of six John Childs, Milton Mayer, Dan Weir, John Nelson, Mike Quinlan, and Rick Feldman as moderator, took up the problem of "Educational and Political Committment".

Several workshops were set up in SBA in which students and faculty had the opportunity to discuss such topics as: "Responsibility of an Intellectual", "Media - Uses and Effects" and "Conscientious Objection to Contributing to Military Production".

Following a short lunch break, the group met in Mahar again with another panel which discusses the topic of "Life Styles". The members of the panel were Jules Chametsky of the English Department, David Purdy, a campus minister, Bill Wilkinson, a graduate student, and Jerry Gillespie, one of the students arrested in the Eve of Valentine's Day demonstration. The moderator of this panel was Steve Krinsky.

After the discussion the group took part in a new series of workshops. A video-tape of the recent demonstration was shown in one of the workshops. And, in the course of the day, contributions were requested for the payment of fines for the students arrested in the demonstration.

The purpose of the program, in the words of Steve Krinsky, was to get "people who were in agreement, together, to give them a chance to express their agreement and to get a feel of what is going on."

He also said when the faculty was called upon for financial aid, they responded by saying that they did not want to be only a means of financial assistance but wanted to discuss the problems with the students themselves. A number of faculty members were present at the panel discussions and the workshops.

Following the afternoon workshop series, the group met briefly to suggest plans for future action. Among the suggestions made was the plan for a "newspaper" that would express the opinions of the group.

Daily Collegian Announces Referendum On Open Campus Recruitment Policy

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

The DAILY COLLEGIAN will sponsor a student referendum on campus recruiting next week, it was decided last night at the paper's editorial board meeting.

Editor-in-chief Donald A. Epstein announced that a three man committee, chaired by Managing Editor Joel Fox, and including Education Editor Richard W. Story and Executive Editor Keith M. Bromery, will make up the referendum questions, and will organize an "editorial forum" in the paper in the days preceding the referendum.

"We consider the Dow confrontation and the whole question of campus recruiting", Epstein explained, "to be one of the most important issues to face this campus in several years We also feel that in order to accurately judge campus sentiment, something which must be done before future policies are decided upon, a campus wide referendum is a necessity."

The referendum, the Editor explained, would center on the "moral questions" involved in open campus recruiting and the related problems which came to the surface in the recent Dow protest. "Calling in the state police," he said, "was one of the most controversial decisions the Administration has ever undertaken, and it is important that student sentiment on this question is uncovered."

The Committee in charge of conducting the referendum will also run an editorial page forum in the days before the poll to bring students in contact with varying arguments on the Dow confrontation and recruiting in general. "This," Chairman Joel Fox said, "is necessary if the students are to make informed judgments in the referendum."

It was also announced at the meeting last night that Ken Emery had been appointed by the editorial board to the position of photo editor, effective immediately.

Other business discussed at the meeting included the formation of a new editorial policy.

Epstein explained that the DAILY COLLEGIAN will print a policy editorial each day, signed "the editors". He said that in this way the opinion of the MDC editors would be able to, in one way, fill the "existing leadership void on campus."

Med School Costs Rise; Group To See Governor

By RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Trustees learned Friday from Dean of the UMass medical school, Dr. Lamar Soutter, that delays in the construction of the school are costing about $1 million a month, some $33,000 daily.

The Board voted to set up a committee to get the project underway again and to meet with Gov. Francis Sargent. "Governor Sargent has said he wants to take a hard look at the medical school and we'd like to have him do so" President John W. Lederle said.

A statement by the board read "opening of the school in 1970 and moving into our permanent buildings in 1972 are also in serious jeopardy because of the delay. Action to get this project moving again is needed and needed now. The University is ready and willing to proceed at the earliest possible moment."

Trustees said " we were promised a month ago that a hard look would be taken at the school, but no hard look has been taken." They added "we stand to lose $13,800,000 of federal participation in the first phase of the project if construction has not started by September."

Soutter told the Board that reports by the American Medical Association and the Association of American Medical Colleges have concluded that, even if all existing schools expand, the demand for more doctors cannot be met unless many new schools are created.

The medical school Dean countered a report by a Boston newspaper which recently stated that the deans of five New England Medical schools were against the construction of the UMass school. Soutter said that through his own contact with the deans quoted, they agreed that a need existed for the UMass school.

Soutter told the board that costs of the UMass school are not excessive in comparison to others. "The taxpayers of Vermont pay $2.50 per year per capita for their school. If we were appropriated $2.50 per person here we would have had the money we need long ago" he said.

"The taxpayers of Massachusetts are now paying three cents per capita towards the medical education of Massachusetts residents out of state. However, out-of-state opportunities are closing to Massachusetts citizens as steady pressure mounts to accommodate an increasing number of native citizens" the trustees stated.

Trustees stated that the demand by state residents for places in medical schools is increasing with many qualified applicants being turned down every year due to lack of space.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

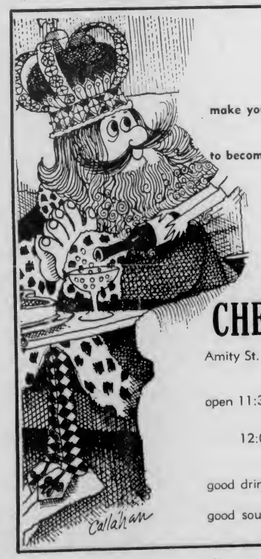
VENICE (AP) - The movie critic for Italy's Communist party organ l'Unita has just finished a film with the title, "Do You Know What Stalin Used to do to Women?" Maruizie Liverani, who spent five weeks making the film, says it doesn't answer the question. The film concerns two Italian intellectuals and their emotional involvement with the late Soviet dictator.

BRIGHTON, England (AP) - British and Danish scientists here say the answer to coastal erosion is plastic seaweed. After observing that natural seaweed reduces erosion of beaches, the scientists developed polypropylene tufts that float upright when anchored at one end. They already have proved successful in tests off the English coast, the scientists said.

MOSCOW (AP) - Soviet film makers are preparing to do a movie on the life of the late cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin, the first man in space, the news agency Tass announced. The film will be called "Where the Legend Starts." Gagarin rode the first manned spaceship April 12, 1961. He died last March 27 at the age of 34 in a jet plane crash outside Moscow.

WIESBADEN, Germany (AP) - West Germans drank 29,5 million gallons of beer in 1968, the Federal Statistics Office reported. That was a 2,2 per cent increase over the amount consumed in 1967 and averaged out to 178-1/2 quarts of the national beverage for everyone over the age of 15.

JERUSALEM (AP) - Rabbi Yitzhak Nissim, leader of Israel's Sephardic community, has called off his trip to Moscow for the 75th birthday celebrations of his Sovie t counterpart, Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levin.



Nissim's office said Sunday visas for the rabbi and his entourage had not arrived. Jerusalem has no diplomatic relations with Moscow, and Nissim had applied for visas through the Finnish Embassy.

Prof Named Associate Dean

UMass has named Dr. Samuel Seely associate dean and coordinator of research for the Graduate School.

Dr. Seely first joined the UMass staff in September of 1968 as a visiting professor of electrical engineering. A graduate of Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, he holds an M.S. degree from Stevens Institute of Technology and a Ph. D. from Columbia University.

He served on the faculties of the City College of New York, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Radiation Laboratory and the U.S. Naval Postgraduate School before becoming head of the electrical engineering department at Syracuse University in 1947.

He left Syracuse in 1956 to become head of the electrical engineering department at Case Institute of Technology, where he served until 1964. Dr. Seely was a visiting professor at Johns Hopkins University in 1965, at the City University of New York in 1966, at Oklahoma State University in 1967 and at Chalmers University of Technology in Gothenburg, Sweden, in 1967-68.

He was head of the Engineering Section of the National Science Foundation from 1961 to 1963 and was a Fulbright Lecturer at the National Technical University in Greece in 1959-60. He was awarded the Silver Cross of the Royal Order of Phoenix by the Greek government for his service there.

He is the author or co-author of 12 textbooks and has written approximately 15 technical papers.

President Lederle spoke to the board on what he termed a "very serious matter in connection with the budget." He said that unless action is taken against a recommended $460,000 cut in the program under which 125 disadvantaged black students are now studying at the University, expansion of the program will be jeopardized.

"We need $300,000 just to carry out the program at its present level, but we had hoped to expand it, and requested $760,000 from the state Legislature, but we are not getting the financial backing necessary to carry out the planned expansion" Lederle told the Board.

In the Fall of 1968 the University waived normal entrance requirements for the 125 high school graduates who normallly would not be eligible for acceptence to college. Picked for the potential, they were given added tutoring along with their normal course load.

"Ninety per cent of the students will be back in September. They are doing creditable work" Lederle said. Most of these will probably be graduates of the University and it has been a privilege to have them here. All of us have had a vital educational experience because of the program."

The program has been financed by a $150,000 state appropriation, a $92,000 grant from the Ford Foundation, and a $30,000 contribution by the Student Senate. Lederle remarked that the Student Senate contribution was to his knowledge a first in the country for such action to be taken by a student governing body.

Lederle said that University administrators will meet with legislators and the Governor to ask for $400,000 state money to continue the program.

Lederle said that he had "reason to believe that the Ford Foundation would continue with large grants towards the program in the State Legislature continued with increased support.

The President criticised efforts to cut the program's funds. "There has been a lot of talk throughout the state in recent months about welfare, but I believe that educational opportunities provide the best method of reducing the welfare load. If we educate a youth, we eliminate him from the welfare rolls when he becomes a man. Education is one of the best investments we can make," he said.

Lederle said he had hoped to increase the program to 185 students and that the University needs a minimum of $600,000 to carry on the program.

Forum To Discuss Use Of Police at Sit-in

Tonight at 8 p.m. in Mahar auditorium the King Council will stage an open forum dealing with the use of state police in the recent sit-in in Whitmore. According to spokesman Bob Davidson, "the program will not attempt to explore the exhaustive issue of the morality of the military-industrial complex, but will focus on a single point, the reasons for, and validity of, the administrative decision to utilize outside force.

A small tripartite panel will lead the discussion. The three basic campus factions will be represented: students by Gil Salk, executive secretary of the King Council; administration by Mark Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students; faculty by Isidore Silver, professor of business administration, faculty senate ombudsman, and American Civil Liberties Union lawyer.

Foremost of the problems to be tackled are establishing alternatives for the administration in dealing with similar future confrontations, and opening lines of communication for students to better facilitate interaction.

Draft Counselling Continues With Valley Peace Center

This discussion part of the "Peace and Freedom" program is supplementary to the continuing draft counseling program being offered on campus by the VPC. Each Monday evening in both Baker Lounge and in Coolidge Lobby from 6:30 - 8 individual draft counselling is available with trained draft counsellors from the Peace Center on hand.

Ex-King Saud Dies Of Heart Attack

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - Ex-King Saud of Saudi Arabia died of a heart attack yesterday at his hotel residence 11 miles from Athens. He was 67.

Saud, who was surrounded by about 75 of his 150-member royal entourage at the Cavouri Hotel, returned to Greece after a year's stay in Cairo last December. Another 75 members of his family live in Beirut and Cairo.

He was deposed as monarch of the oil-rich kingdom in 1964 by his brother Faisal and sent into exile along with members of his family.

West Germany Prepared To Call Off Election Plans

BONN, Germany (AP) - West Germany told the Soviet Union yesterday it is prepared to call off plans to elect its next president in West Berlin, provided Communist East Germany comes through with some real concessions.

A government spokesman said Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger put the proposition squarely to Soviet Ambassador Semyon Tsarapkin at their second meeting in 24 hours.

Kiesinger told Tsarapkin Bonn would yield on the election issue only if it was assured of a "lasting settlement, improving relations between the people of East and West Berlin," the spokesman said.

The two met at Stuttgart on an East German offer to negotiate a new agreement, permitting West Berliners to pass through the Berlin Wall to visit relatives in the Communist zone.

SWAP Proposes Plan for Freer Study at UMass

The SWAP subcommittee has submitted a proposal which states in part: A need exists at the University for a pilot program in which a student will be allowed greater freedom to exercise initiative and responsibilty in the learning process.

The program is designed for a student who wishes to pursue personal learning goals and simultaneously foster his intellectual independence, imagination and desire for knowledge. Its aim, as stated in the proposal is; The proposed plan will help the student to develop more fully through a thoroughgoing personalization and humanization of the educational process.

The first year of the program will be limited to 50 freshmen and 50 sophomores selected at random on the basis of their applications. An advisory system will be established to help these students.

In response to a strong student interest in academic freedom for undergraduates, a Sub-Committee of the 1968-69 SWAP Conference has developed the preceding proposal. We are interested in finding the consensus of the student body concerning the proposal.

To Rule or To Cure

Listed in a little section of the University handbook are the rules and regulations governing "picketing and other forms of demonstrations." Article one of this law states, "Demonstrators must confine their activities to the outside of all University buildings and by such activities not block free entry or exit from such buildings, nor interfer with the free movement of any person on University grounds, nor interfer with the normal conduct of University affairs."

Though we concur with the latter part of this article, we disagree with the first part of the code which as stated limits or rather confines the demonstrators' activities to the outside of all University buildings. We feel that this very limiting, all-encompassing phrase restricts peaceful demonstrators to a greater degree than is absolutely necessary. As long as the demonstrators do not restrict free traffic flow nor disrupt normal University functions, and confine their demonstration to a part of the building away from main corridors and outside of private offices, we feel that such a situation warrents no infraction of University rules or subsequent charges and punishments. It seems to us that the University should take an example from Chicago and Clark University and concern itself more directly at trying to get at the cause of demonstrations rather than trying to "rule" them out of existance.

Napalm is gelled gasoline. When a napalm bomb explodes, the napalm spews in all directions like a molten geyser. It sticks to whatever it hits - metal, wood, cloth, flesh - and burns at about 2000 degrees centigrade. White phospherous is the ignition agent in napalm bombs; it burns on contact with oxygen. Napalm fires cannot be controlled by ordinary means because the phosphorous will reignite when the covering fire control substance disperses.

A 1000 lb. napalm bomb explodes into a fire more than 200 ft. wide. Within, people are more or less melted; some on the fringe suffocate as well. Many survivors of the initial blast die within a day or two: napalm wounds tend to be fatal. The mortality rate is probably highest among small children. (Stickney, Collias. Medical Problems of South Vietnam.)

Dow Chemical continues to manufacture napalm despite student harassment. "...this organized campaign will not deter us from supporting our young men who are in Viet Nam. We will continue proudly to supply our young men's needs including napalm to the best of our ability." (C.A. Gerstacker, Chairman of the Board at Dow.)

"When napalm fell into a person's hair; he was doomed. There was no chance to cut off the hair. Those near the river flung themselves headlong into the water. The moment they came up the phosphorous received its oxygen and again burst into flames. So began the terror of choosing death by drowning or by burning."

Doan Ihan, an 8-year-old Vietnamese boy burned by napalm in August, 1966 was taken to England for treatment. He came off the plane with a muslin bag over his head. His parents had been burned alive. His chin was melted into his throat so that he could not close his mouth.

Campus Comment

Grateful

To the editor:

I would like to take this time to publicly thank President Lederle, Provost Tippo, and Dean Field for their co-operation and participation in our series of open coffee hours. Each has taken time out from busy schedules to make an attempt to begin to open new lines of communication with the student body.

Some important ideas have been discussed in new light, to the enlightenment of both students and administration. Among other issues raised were the relationship of foreign students to the campus, how to improve poor instructors, means of protecting radical or innovative new professors, requirements, second semester freshman curfew, the Dow demonstration, and many others.

I hope that future meetings will be attended by more students, and that some faculty members will also join us and ask questions. It is, perhaps, also important that students urge their student senators to attend, as many relevant problems are raised.

These meetings will continue every Tuesday afternoon throughout the semester in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union from 12 to 2 p.m. President Lederle will be the next guest, and all are urged to attend.

Gilbert J. Salk

Disgruntled

To the editor:

Congratulations to the COLLEGIAN and especially to Day Editor Nancy Bourgoin! Her name has just been submitted for the William L. Putnam Award for editorial nimble wittedness. It is rare that we see such insight into the problems of the day.

Her attack is launched at the wrong aspect of the problem of hitchhiker discourtesy. The driver selects his rider and takes a chance. Consider all of the other hitchhikers along North Pleasant St. What a choice! The big slam is not car doors but spot-jumping and alluring young ladies stealing rides away from guys that have been standing in the road getting splashed for a half hour by inconsiderate drivers. I've thumbed coast to coast twice and used to commute every week end from North Carolina and back. There is a certain unwritten code among hitchers elsewhere that isn't apparent at UMass. A good spot is respected and waited for . . . not jumped as the practice is here.

As for begging Miss Bourgoin . . . have you ever HAD to thump? When was the last time your engine blew and you had to remove yourself from that pompous throne of steering wheel and ignition key? As hitchhikers maybe we haven't been blessed with affluence as you have. Maybe we have enough trouble just meeting our semester bill. Every hitchhiker is grateful that someone thought enough to stop and offer a lift but we also resent your attitude that if we didn't accept a ride by you we wouldn't get one. We'd rather walk!!

Rebuttal

To the editor:

Having provided by anonymous critic with sufficient time to apologize publicly for his stupid, inane commentary in an "article" entitled "WMUA Airs Grievances of English Majors" (DAILY COLLEGIAN, February 14, 1969), I see no better alternative than to refute his idiocies with fact.

Without question, English majors' grievances are no longer "alleged," as this BRAINLESS FOOL would have people believe. The three hundred students who returned completed survey questionnaires to me made a number of their grievances quite obvious. For example: A majority of English major s surveyed feel that English classes at this university ARE too large; that 8 a.m. English classes SHOULD be abolished; that English majors SHOULD be permitted by the department to take more than ten upper-level English courses for graduation credit; that all in-class English literature examinations SHOULD be abolished and substituted with take-home examinations or written papers. Indeed, questionnaires DO "make things ineffably clearer" - a bit of logic which this EXPONENT OF DULLNESS seems to deny.

At another point, this anonymous critic declares that the English majors surveyed "expressed their tacit approval of the department's distribution system..." This is fallacious. In fact, 144 English majors indicated a desire to see the present system of distribution requirements modified in some way, and 85 felt that the distribution system should be abolished altogether!

From one who so convincingly proves himself a BLOCKHEAD, the more serious affliction - IGNORANCE - does not surprise me. "What is EDUC?" asks this PRIVY-WALL AUTHOR. Indeed, the time wasted scrawling journalistic TRASH - glibly degrading WMUA, English majors, the English Department Undergraduate Council, Professor Paul Sanders, and me, all to NO sensible purpose - might have been better spent by our HACK-HERO in seeking out detailed information about the organization - information which Professor Sanders would, I'm sure, be quite pleased to offer any concerned student.

If this courageous unnamed critic genuinely desires to learn more about the English Department Undergraduate Council (or give it some much-needed help), let him attend the Council's next open meeting: 7 p.m. Thursday, February 27th, in Bartlett Hall, Room 301.

Kenneth R. Mosakowski

Freedom of Choice

To the editor:

We feel that every student has the right to interview with any company he may be interested in working for. If the Ad Hoc Committee for an Open Forum with Dow Chemical feels that working for Dow is morally wrong, then let the committee address its arguments to the students and let everyone choose. If we disagree, then we should still have the right to interview with Dow or any other industry which chooses to recruit on this campus.

The Ad Hoc Committee does not speak for us, nor we feel do they speak for the majority of students. If forty students do not wish to work for Dow, that is their privilege, but we resent their attempt to prevent us from speaking to whomever we wish.

Judge Questions Right of B.U. To Dismiss Student

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Francis J. Good, presiding at the trial between Boston University and a student, Frederick C. Strum, said that colleges and Universities should not be able to suspend or dismiss students "in a cavalier fashion" without making charges against them in accordance with constitutional due process.

Judge Good also said that recent developments in civil rights law raise the question as to whether a "a university can make charges against a sudent and expel him without following due process of law."

Strum charged that he was expelled for "breach of conduct" in a biology examination without a chance for a hearing and the opportunity to confront the professor who made the charges against him.

Strum said he became ill while taking a final examination May 20, 1968, and left the room before finishing the test. He claimed that he left the unfinished paper in the examination room and brought it, later in the day, to a room where Prof. Paul Madison and his assistants were correcting papers.

Madison denied Strum's story and said a teaching assistant in the examination room last may reported that Strum left the room less than an hour after the exam had begun. Madison also said that all desks in the examination room were checked, and Strum's paper was not at his desk at the time.

Later in the day, Strum came to the room where Madison was correcting papers. Madison testified that he talked with Strum at 6 p.m. May 20, and told Strum that his paper was unaccounted for.

Prof. Madison quoted Strum as saying, "I have it here with me." Madison told Strum, "If you think I am going to mark a paper that has been out of the examination room two or three hours, you have another think coming."

Strum claimed that he was at the hospital for treatment of a stomach disorder.

In his suit against Boston University trustees, Strum charged that when he was called before the university student academic conduct committee last June, he was not told the charges against him, and no witnesses were heard in his presence.

Judge Good said there was a question of the right of a university to deal with a student in this fashion. He also said he is in disagreement with court decisions in other cases which allow universities to expel students without proper hearing procedures.

UMass Professor Wins Awards

UMass professor Karl R. Wallace was named the winner of two awards for his book "Francis Bacon on the Nature of Man" at the 54th annual meeting of the Speech Association of America.

The book was one of two to receive the Speech Association of America Golden Anniversary Prize Fund Award for scholarly books written by its members. It also was named recipient of the James A. Winans Memorial Award for Distinguished Scholarship in Rhetoric and Public Address.

In his book, Dr. Wallace probes the conceptual bases of Bacon's system of knowledge and learning that sheds new light on the intellectual climate of the period, with its long tradition of reflection on man's nature and soul.

Dr. Wallace came to the University as a professor of speech last fall from the University of Illinois where he was head of the speech department. He holds undergraduate and Ph. D. degrees from Cornell University. He was a faculty member at Iowa State College and Washington University in St. Louis before becoming chairman of the School of Speech and Drama at the University of Virginia in 1944. He left that post in 1947 to move to the University of Illinois.

Other books he has written or edited are "Francis Bacon on Communication and Rhetoric,' with D. C. Bryant "Fundamentals of Public Speaking" and "Oral Communication," and "A History of Speech Education in America' which he edited for the Speech Association of America. He is the author of over two dozen articles in professional journals.

He was president of the Speech Association of America in 1954, editor of the Quarterly Journal of Speech from 1945 to 1947 and is an advisory editor in speech for Dodd, Meade and Company.

Pentagon Foresees No Danger For ROTC Program in Colleges

WASHINGTON (AP) - ROTC, civilian training ground for future military officers, is under fire at colleges across the country. But at the Pentagon command post the word is: Casualties are light and the enemy can't win.

Nevertheless, officers directing the Reserve Officers Training Corps are uneasy.

What worries them is "Project Volunteer,' a study billed as a first step toward an all-volunteer military service. It's prompted by the Nixon administration's desire to end the draft, and the draft is the best thing ROTC has going for it.

The program seemed to be weathering such demonstrations until first Yale and then four other schools - Harvard, Stanford, Dartmouth, Bowdoin - decided to stop giving academic credit for ROTC courses. Since then several other schools have followed suit.

In the Pentagon, Lt. Col. Morgan Cronin, chief of policy and programs for ROTC, said the action of a few schools doesn't worry him.

Asked what effect abolition of the draft would have on ROTC, Cronin said he's rather not guess. But another Pentagon spokesman said the effect would be devastating.

Cronin said in an interview, that 268 colleges offer military training and he detects no widespread anti-ROTC trend on campuses. It's not even certain what the effect of dropping academic credit will be, he said.

At some universities, a student's field of study can determine whether he gets credit for ROTC. The biological sciences department at one university refuses to grant its majors any credit for ROTC while the physical sciences department accepts 12 ROTC credits toward degree requirements.

For years, the nation's land grant colleges - which include most state universities - thought they were required by federal law to provide military training as a compulsory course for freshmen and sophomores.

In the 1930's the Supreme Court ruled that while land grant colleges were required to offer courses in military science, participation didn't have to be mandatory.

Then, in 1964, Congress rewrote the law and made it clear that ROTC could be voluntary.

Enrollment in ROTC promptly declined, but soon levelled off. Rising college enrollments have enabled ROTC to maintain a show of growth the past few years.

Pucksters Lead Early Then Fall To Agressive Norwich, 7-6

BY WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Failing to hold a three goal lead, the UMass hockey team saw a last minute rally fall one goal short as an inspired Norwich University team nipped the Redmen, 7-6, before a large crowd at Orr rink Saturday night.

Jim Sutherland's goal midway through the final period gave the Cadets a 7-5 lead and seemed to finish the Redmen for the night. However, Bill McMann's slap shot dented the cords to bring the UMass within a goal but the goal came as the final buzzer sounded.

Actually, the Redmen should have won the game easily. In the first period, UMass completely outskated and outplayed Norwich in taking a 4-1 margin after the first twenty minutes.

Jeff Sanborn opened the scoring with an unassisted tally at 7.58 of the first period. Paul Poirier evened the count two minutes later.

Tom Hartnett put UMass on top again with a shot from a scramble in front of the net. Sanborn and Rocky Stone picked up assists on the play.

Tom Babson tallied twice within a three minute span to give the Redmen a three goal lead. His second goal was an unassisted effort in whic h he stole the puck from a Norwich defenseman and slid the puck into the net.

Second period action belonged entirely to Norwich, especially Bill Tail. He came up with a legitimate hat trick by scoring three consecutive goals in a span of seven minutes.

Norwich carried its attack into the third period by scoring twice within fifty seconds. Dave Bent and Jim Grip were the goal scorers for the Cadets giving them a lead that they would never lose.

Hartnett closed the gap to a goal with his tally at 8.32 on the power play. After taking passes from Sanborn and McMann, Hartnett let go a shot that deflected off a Norwich defenseman into the net.

Just 36 seconds later, Sutherland tallied his game winner on a backhander that caught the far post. The Redmen tried to fight back but came up one goal short.

The body-checking during the game was frequent and hard with McMann and Stone taking out their opponents constantly. However, only eight minor penalties were called by the referees.

Jeff Sanborn had a big night in a losing cause with one goal and three assists. He now needs three points in his last two games to become number one on the all-time UMass scoring list. Tom Babson and John Hartnett had two goals for the Redmen.

Sanborn earned an individual achievement last week as he was named to the ECAC Division II team of the week. It was the first time a UMass player has been named to the team.

UMass is now 8-11 overall and 8-9 in Division II while Norwich is 9-7 overall and 8-4 in Division II. UMass plays at Holy Cross tomorrow and will be looking to tie a record for most wins in a season.

Grapplers Roll In Quadrangular Meet

BY BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity wrestling team won seven first places out of 11 classes to easily win a quadrangular meet held Sat. with Amherst, New Hampshire and Tufts at Boyden gymnasium. The tournament was set up with UMass facing UNH in a dual meet and Amherst facing Tufts. The individual winners in each meet qualified for the finals.

In the dual meets, the Redmen romped over UNH by a 39-8 score and Tufts edged Amherst 23-16. Team scores for the entire tournament found UMass way out in front with 103 points. Tufts finished second with 56, followed by UNH with 48 and Amherst with 38.

Ten Redmen wrestlers qualified for the finals in their win over the Wildcats. Bob Freeman, Tom Young, Bob Willman and Tom Callaghan pinned their opponents in the semi-finals, and Freeman and Young pinned their men in the finals.

Willman and Callaghan were decisioned by wrestlers from Tufts. Nick DiDomenico decisioned his first opponent and then won by forfeit in the finals. Bill Goodwin, wrestling at 123 lbs., won his division without wrestling as none of the other schools had a 123 lb. man.

Howie Kaplin continued to look strong in his 12-0 semi-final win and a 5-5 tie with Levin of Amherst, who is regarded as one of the best in New England at 130 lbs. Howie was leading with 20 seconds remaining but suffered a takedown.

Other UMass finalists were Tom Andrewes (167), who won his class with a pin and a forfeit, Phil Davis (137), who won two lopsided decisions and Brian Urquhart (152), who was pinned in the finals. Urquhart was actually wrestling only because Amherst didn't have a 152 lb. wrestler. UMass' regular, Mike Brauner lost in the semi-finals to the same man who pinned Urquhart. Brauner and heavyweight Glen Cummings won third place victories by pinning their adversaries.

Coach Homer Barr was happy with the results and felt the tournament would be a good preparation for the New Englands. He was very happy with the performance of Bob Willman, who was wrestling his first match since injuring his knee. Barr also cited the work of Young, Freeman and Kaplin.

The Redmen are now 7-5 with three meets remaining. Barr is optimistic about the B.C. and W.P.I. meets, but expects trouble when UMass faces M.I.T. If things go well, the Redmen could finish their best season ever and establish them as a definite contender in years to come.

The freshmen also won as they knocked off UNH 50-3 and went on to win the finals in nine of eleven classes. Many of their victories were by forfeits, but double winners were Bob Parent, Clay Jester, Dave Jones, Jim Godkin, Larry Piccioli, Kent Mignocchi, and Sam James.

Navy Shades UMGymnasts

The Redmen gymnastic team was narrowly defeated by a powerful Navy team Saturday night at Annapolis, 152.5 to 148.9. This leaves the Redmen with a 2 and 4 record in the Eastern League and a 3 and 5 record over-all.

Saturday night's stars were Redmen Joe Reed and Norm Vekler. Reed came in first on the long horse with an 8.85. He followed this up with a strong showing on the rings and the parallel bars.

Dick DelGallo, another strong Redmen, placed first on the rings with a 9.0, second in the floor exercises with an 8.9 and third on the parallel bars with an 8.0.

The gymnasts were strongest on the rings, nailing down all three top honors. DelGallo, Reed, and George Seibert were responsible for this showing. The final score here was Redmen 26.2, Navy 24.95. The long horse also added to the UMass lead, the final score being 25.8 to 25.5. The parallel bars were the third Redman asset. This event was taken with the score 25.1 to 25.05. It was on the side horse that UMass took a plunge. They fell four points behind Navy by scoring a weak 21 points.

Wednesday the gymnasts meet Springfield in the season's finale. The team is up for this so it should be an interesting battle. It starts at 7:30 in the Auxillary Gym at Boyden. At 4 p.m. the undefeated freshmen also meet Springfield at Boyden.

Redmen Run Over Bears Look Toward Tourney (?)

BY GLENN BRIERE
Senior Reporter

A devastating fast break early in the second half enabled UMass to coast to a 91-66 victory over Maine before 2800 at the Cage Saturday night, clinching the Yankee Conference championship for Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen.

The Black Bears, a team that depends on its shooting, could manage only a 34 per cent mark from the floor while UMass shot 51 per cent. That, along with the fast break and a fine performance by reserve center Dick Samuelson, told the story.

The win was the eighth in the Conference for the Redmen, who have yet to lose a Conference game. If they can win their last two Conference games against Rhode Island and New Hampshire, they will become only the second team in the history of the Conference to record an unbeaten league mark. The first was UConn in 1964-65. With three games remaining, UMass also has a shot at a school record for wins in one season, 18.

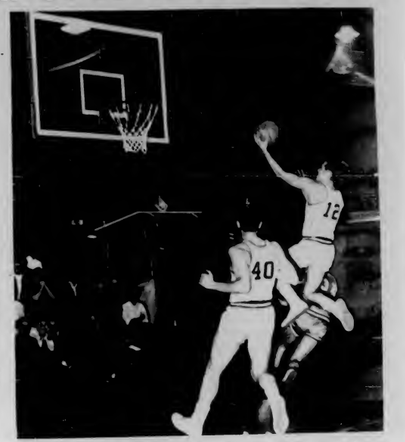
Maine, a high-scoring aggregation which had won six out of its previous seven contests, kept within striking distance throughout the first half, although Coach Gib Philbrick's Black Bears were never ahead after Peter Gayeska put UMass in the lead at 8-7 early in the contest.

Hot shooting by Ray Ellerbrook and Ken Mathias stretched the Redmen lead to as much as 14, 43-29 with four minutes to go in the half. Maine chipped away, however, and trailed by just eight at halftime. A 15-footer by high scorer Jim Stephenson early in the second half brought the visitors even closer, 46-42. But after Mathias and Maine center Hugh Campbell traded baskets, the Redmen began to open up their lead again and that was as close as the Bears got.

The roof finally fell in for Maine with 14 minutes to go as the Redmen ran off a 12-point string. Three straight fast break lay-ups, two by Dennis Chapman and one by Ellerbrook, made the score 70-48 and put things well out of reach for the suddenly cold-shooting Black Bears. The Redmen were able to coast in as Leaman cleared his bench.

Ellerbrook finished high scorer for UMass with 21 points, and Mathias was close behind with 20. But the big story in the second half was Samuelson, who wound up with 16 points and 11 rebounds, by far his best performance of the year. Samuelson, who came in when Gayeska got into a bit of foul trouble, had entered the game with only a 1.6 average.

Guard Bob Dempsey also continued the fine ball handling that he had shown in the Navy game. The Fall River sophomore has apparently found a permanent place in the lineup with Joe DiSarcina out of commission.



The Redmen had a tremendous advantage off the boards, outrebounding the smaller bears 61-43.

A big factor was the cold shooting of Stephenson, who brought a 22.4 average into the game. He did wind up the game's leading scorer with 25 points, but this was on a the strength of 11 free throws. From the floor, Stephenson shot a horrendous seven for 30.

The Redmen, still hoping for a post-season tournament bid, are in action tomorrow at Rhode Island. UMass is 15-6 overall.

Frosh Edge Rockwood in Thriller

BY DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Paced by Julius Erving's 20 point second half the Little Redmen overcame a powerful and previously undefeated Rockwood Academy, 94-86. The win kept UMass undefeated as they brought their record to 14-0.

Rockwood, led by center Henry Wilmore, forward Ron Rutledge and guard Phil Boggia, lived up to their reputation. The first half featured some of the best New York playground moves the Cage crowd ever saw.

It was an extremely close battle as each team kept trading baskets for the first ten minutes. Despite numerous turnovers and generally sloppy play the score was 23-22 at the eight minute mark in favor of Rockwood. Then the roof caved in for UMass. Wilmore, Rutledge and Boggia hit quick jumpers as Rockwood jumped to a 29-23 lead.

The Redmen were unable to set up as Rockwood controlled both boards. Only Rich Vogeley's outside shooting kept UMass in the game in the first half. Vogeley had 27 points, but it was not enough as Rockwood led 49-42 at the half.

The second half looked like a carbon copy of the first as Wilmore displayed some amazing moves. His driving layups were something to behold as he seemed suspended in mid-air.

But at the 16-minute mark UMass exploded. Unable to gain the lead, they kept closing the gap and continued to put on tremendous pressure.

Utilizing a full court press, Bill Kesgen stole the ball twice as the Little Redmen scored five consecutive points to bring them within two markers of Rockwood. Rockwood kept their poise as Rutledge and Boggia kept hitting, but John Bettancourt and Mike Pagliara began to find the range.

Changing tactics to a full-court press, the Little Redmen, led by Pagliara, took the lead at 9:38. Up to this point, Erving's scoring was overshadowed by Vogeley's 27 in the first half. But he exploded in the second half. Holding Wilmore to six points during the first ten minutes, Erving gave an offensive show, hitting fallaways and turn-around jumpers. But Rockwood refused to succumb.

With 6:10 left Erving hit a jumper to tie the score at 73 all. Seconds later he hit a turn-around from the top of the key, putting UMass out ahead for good at 5:33. Pagliara scored as UMass built up a ten point lead with three minutes to go.

Pressing, Rockwood tried valiently to come back, but Vogeley and Erving continued to hit as UMass pulled their first troops with three seconds left, to a standing ovation.

Vogeley finished the game with 36 points, while Erving had 29 and 17 rebounds. Julius hit on 12 of 18 attempts from the floor. Wilmore paced Rockwood with 32 points and 15 rebounds.

Frosh Shade Dartmouth

HANOVER, N. H. - The UMass freshmen basketball team blew a 19 point lead in the last ten minutes, but came back in overtime to edge a stubborn Dartmouth frosh team, 84-79, here Friday night.

It was a game of two totally different halfs. UMass dominated the first 20 minutes, as Dartmouth hit on only 7 of 30 field goals. But the second 20 was another story, as the home town Indians put on a full court press that had the usually poised Little Redmen harassed into 25 turnovers.

UMass, behind the shooting of Mike Pagliara and the all-around excellence of Julius Erving, put together a 12 point run midway in the first half that helped the frosh along to a 35-21 halftime margin.

The Little Redmen further upped the lead in the opening stages of the second half, as John Bettancourt along with Erving led the scoring parade. With only 10:14 remaining, the frosh led 62-43 and seemingly were headed for another lopsided win.

But Dartmouth, behind a scrappy defense and the offensive skill of forward Paul Erland, began to come rushing back. Aided no end by shoddy UMass ballhandling and Erving's fourth foul, the Indians outscored UMass 17-3 in the next nine minutes.

Pagliara got the first UMass field goal in over eight minutes at the 3:15 mark, but Dartmouth still closed within two, at 68-66, with 26 seconds left.

Bettancourt was fouled with 20 seconds left and he canned both ends of a one and one situation. However, Erland after narrowly missing his shot, was fouled and countered with two free throws of his own, as Dartmouth hit 27 of 29 charity throws. UMass now led 70-68.

UMass then lost the ball with 10 seconds showing. Dartmouth set up for a possible tying hoop. Erving made a clutch block with five seconds left, of an Erland shot, but then with the buzzer sounding, Darthmouth's Gary Dicovitsky was fouled. With the game over, the Indian guard made the two fouls to send the game into overtime.

It was time for the frosh to told and take their first loss, especially when their hosts came back from four points down to tie the overtime with 47 seconds left.

However, five clutch, pressure foul shots by Erving, Pagliara and Bettancourt won the game for the gritty frosh who didn't quit in a touch situation.

Erland, in a great performance had 36 points, while Pete Broberg had 11 and Dicovitsky ten for Dartmouth. Erving had 22 points for UMass, along with a like number of rebounds, eight blocked shots and eight assists. Pagliara had 21, Bettancourt 15 and Rich Vogeley had 13 to lead UMass.

University Forum Will Discuss Course Evaluations, Referenda

By JEAN McANDREWS
Staff Reporter

Student evaluation of courses, student referenda, core courses, and location of job interviews are a few of the issues to be discusses at a forum involving students and faculty tonight at 8:00 in the North Dining Commons.

The forum is sponsored by The Committee for a University Forum and its intention is to discuss relevant issues and problems in the University community with members of the administration and faculty. The most prevalent problems will then be put to student referenda, probably in the dining commons.

Members of the panel tonight will include Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Dean William F. Field, Robert N. Brooks, Dr. Hinckley (economics), Dr. Johnson (history), Dr. Shapiro, (botany), and others.

The committee plans to work closely with the administration and faculty to discuss projects under way in more "progressive" schools and to offer some new alternatives to problems on the UMass campus. If successful, the committee will sponsor forums on a regular, maybe a weekly, basis, and plans to combine with other groups with similar goals.

The ultimate goal of the group is to, "humanize the University," says Ron Kosnicki, chairman and organizer of the committee, "to make it more responsive to all groups on campus, not only (for example) the administration."

Some outside groups have indicated support for the committee; these include the King Council and SWAP.

Campus Disorders Continue As Students Seize Buildings

(AP) - Black students seized a classroom building on the Newark, N.J., campus of Rutgers University and 200 Stillman College pupils barricaded themselves in a student union building in Tuscaloosa, Ala., as another week of campus protests got under way.

Elsewhere, student leaders demanded a voice in the selection of a college president, foreshadowing possible new campus demonstrations.

The eight or 10 black students who seized a Rutgers building were members of the Black Organization of Students, which has been protesting university admissions policies and admissions officers, both of which they have called "racist."

Barricading themselves early Monday and forcing classes to be moved to other buildings, the black students threatened to destroy the school's switchboard communications "if the police come."

They said they had enough food inside the building for 10 days to two weeks "if properly rationed."

One black student leader told a rally outside the building Monday that "this university will not function until the demands are met even if it means bringing the 250,000 black people of this town down to this university."

At Tuscaloosa, a confrontation neared after 200 students of predominantly-Negro Stillman College locked themselves in the student union building and defied an order from President Harold Stinson that all students leave the campus.

Student demands for better food and service in the cafeteria, more courtesy from teachers, and dismissal of an acting dean and a maintenance supervisor kept the college in a turmoil last week.

At Rice University in Houston, Tex., the administration stood fast on the board of trustees' appointment of Dr. William H. Masterson, now president of the University of Chattanooga, as the new president of Rice despite student and faculty protest.

A demonstration by 1,200 persons on the campus Saturday was followed by lengthy discussions between Masterson himself and university officials on the one hand, and student and faculty spokesmen on the other.

Meanwhile, school protesters got a boost from the United States Supreme Court, which ruled that school children have the right to hold demonstrations, though not to intrude on school work or other students' rights.

Senator Barrus To Speak Tonite

Massacusetts senator John D. Barrus (Rep.) of Franklin and Hampshire District will be the guest speaker of a Young Republicans Club meeting this Thursday night at 7:00 in the Nantucket Room.

Sen. Barrus will discuss several bills to be put before the state legislature this session. Among them: (1) Lowering the legal voting age from 21 to 18 and (2) Lowering the legal drinking age from 21 to 18. Barrus will afterward entertain questions from his audience.

Today's March Will Protest Olin-Mathieson

Members of the Committee to End Military and Industrial Recruitment will march from the student union building to Whitmore to protest the presence of Olin-Mathieson recruiters on campus today. The demonstration is set to begin at noon.

Spokesmen for the Committee say that Olin Mathieson is " a major profiteer of the war, and manufacture guns, anti-personelle bombs and chemical defoliants" and thus represent a part of the military industrial complex which they oppose.

Labor Relations Director Wins Housing Authority Seat

By MARARET ANDREWS
Staff Reporter

Bernard R. Moreau, director of the Union Pre-Retirement Education Program of the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center, earned a five-year membership on the Amherst Housing Authority by defeating incumbent Frederick G. Ruder in last Tuesday's annual town election. By choosing Moreau 1003-649, Amherst voters supported the winner's conviction that there is a "pressing need" for low cost housing units in the town, and disavowed Ruder's claim that there is no such need.

"The powers of the Housing Authority," Moreau contends, "are to provide housing for the elderly of low income, to provide housing for people of low income generally, and to administer State and Federal funds available for such housing. The authority is allowed either to build new units or to lease private units which it then rents to people in need at reasonable rates."

Two recent surveys show a definite need for low cost multi-unit buildings, Moreau says. One survey was done three years ago by the League of Women Voters and the other survey was completed last year by the Inter-Faith Housing Corporation.

"Although funds are available to investigate the need for low income housing in any locale, the Amherst Housing Authority has shown little interest in our own situation," Moreau charges and he hopes that the authority will conduct its own survey in the near future to pinpoint details about the need for such housing in the Amherst area.

With low cost housing available to elderly persons of low income, retired people in particular, they would be able to remain in Amherst, living comfortably on their pensions. Many of these residents now must move away from Amherst because they can not afford to continue living in more expensive housing on their limited incomes.

Married graduate students who have notoriously low incomes would obviously benefit from the existence of low cost housing in Amherst. With the projected overcrowded on-campus living conditions for next year, many undergraduates will be seeking off-campus housing and they too would benefit from multi-unit inexpensive structures.

Many jobs for non-professional and service workers both in the town and at the university would be filled by the availablity of low cost housing in Amherst, Moreau says. Many non-professional persons are at present unable to take advantage of job opportunities in Amherst because they can not afford to live in the town, and can not afford transportation to the town. Low cost units in the town would eliminate both problems and fill many jobs for those who need them.

In addition to Mr. Moreau who begins his five-year term immediately, the other Housing Authority members are: Walter Jones, chairman, Edward Buck, Ann Whalen - each previously elected to five year terms by the townspeople; and Herbert Hutchings, appointed by the governor.

2nd Northeaster Hits New England

BOSTON (AP) - The second major snowstorm in two weeks swept New England Monday snarling highway, air and rail travel.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Works declared a state of emergency at midafternoon and state police said travel on the Massachusetts Turnpike was "touch and go."

Some areas girded for as much as 15 inches of snow.

A similar northeaster which dumped up to two feet of snow Feb. 9-10 had caught the area by surprise.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

KANSAS CITY (AP) Former President Harry S. Truman remained in Research Hospital here Monday for what was described as routine tests.

Truman entered the hospital Thursday night after an ambulance ride from his home in nearby Independence. The cause of his confinement was listed as intestinal flu and that was cleared up Sunday, according to the hospital.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - Traveling salesman Chris Britz has declared private war on traffic offenders. Stung to action by a wrong-lane driver who forced him off the road, Britz rigged a special camera to his car's fender. When he spots a violation he triggers a device on his steering wheel and sends the resulting photograph to police.

PRAGUE (AP) - An atomic energy museum will be set up at Jachymov in west Czechoslovakia, site of the world's first uranium mine, the news agency CTK reported. It said the exhibit, first of its kind in Europe, will trace the development of the nuclear age.

LIMA, Peru (AP) Some Peruvians say if the government issues any more identification cards they'll have to get new wallets. The four-month-old military regime has added a "coordination card" to the military card, electoral card, tax payment card and social security card that citizens must carry.

KOHIMA, India (AP) - Khazhakenoma, in tiny, mountainous Nagaland State, boasted a 100 per cent turnout in recent general elections. The entire electorate - eight tribesmen and eight women - cast ballots.

University Community Lauds Scanlon For Ability, Dedication, and Judgment

BY JILL WALLACK
Staff Reporter

Promotion this semester of Gerald Scanlon, coordinator of student activities, to the position of assistant dean of students, has been applauded by students, faculty and administration alike.

Modest and quiet-spoken, Scanlon has impressed all by his warmth, openness and genuine interest in people. Both Dean William F. Field and Dean Mark Noffsinger had only the highest praise for his work in his five years with the University. Both stressed, as Dean Field said that "we have grown more and more dependent" on Scanlon for advice in student matters and as a link between the student body and the administration.

Scanlon's "remarkable rise," as Dr. Noffsinger calls it, can be attributed only to his "amazing ability" to get along with the students and his "genuine dedication" to his work. His sound judgment, ability to get things done well, dependability and adaptability to every situation were also cited.

According to Dr. Noffsinger, "nothing seems too much of a challenge for Gerry Scanlon. He seems to stand outside of himself in viewing every situation, exuding an air of honesty and sincerity."

Almost unwilling to discuss himself Scanlon changes the subject, for example, to student responsibility. He believes that the students of today are better educated, more aware of the world they live in. He feels that they are responsible adults who are willing to try to improve their lot; adults who want to learn how to make the decisions now, while they are in college so that they will be better prepared to meet the realities of the non-academic world.

In view of the rapid increase in student activism in recent years, Scanlon believes that changes are needed in many areas. The administration must "learn to cope with a monster that was never there" (meaning student dissatisfaction with the status quo and their active participation in destroying the old to replace it with something better). Yet he believes that the students at times are too impatient - they want immediate change. If this change were instituted with the rapidity that some students want, Scanlon contends, this would shatter the security of many, "like Linus without his blanket." Change must be slow but steady, he said.

Born in 1925, Scanlon served in the Air Corps from 1943-46. After the war he attended UMass graduating in 1950. Prevented from attending law school by family obligations - children were already at hand - he spent the next 13 years working for an insurance company and in managerial positions. Dissatisfied with life in the business world, Scanlon returned to UMass in 1963 as assistant foods manager in the Student Union.

Scanlon spends a great deal of time with his five children, especially since the passing of his wife in the fall. He enjoys all athletics, and participates avidly in any sport that his children enjoy. The family has always been close, working together in all that they do. Indicative of his philosophy, he has remarked: "I want my children to attend 'liberal' institutions where they can learn to accept responsibility." As in everything else that he does, Gerry Scanlon accepted the challenge brought on by personal tragedy. He did not permit it to interrupt his enthusiasm for life, his family and his job.

UMass Concert Association Sponsors Rampal and Veyron-LaCroix Tonight

Tonight at 8:00 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium, the Concert Association is sponsoring another of its concert attractions for the 1968/69 season . . . DUO RAMPAL/VEYRON-LACROIX, flute and harpsichord/piano.

Jean Pierre Rampal, born in Marsailles, did not begin to study the flute in earnest until he was over twenty. Today he is one of the world's leading masters of this instrument. He made his debut tour in 1946. Since then he has performed as soloist and chamber musician all over the world performing music of our time as well as romantic, classical and baroque.

Robert Veyron-LaCroix studie at the Paris Conservatoire, as di Rampal, and became proficient i a number of instruments. H chose the harpsichord first, pian second. While a student he sw a record by winning an unpre cedented number of first prize for piano, harmony, counterpoint, accompaniment and solfeggio.

The Duo Rampal/Veyron-LaCroix is considered pre-eminent in its field and their concerts attract sold-out houses on both sides of the Atlantic. The program for this concert will feature sonatas by Telemann, Mozart, Prokofiev, and Bach as well as short pieces by Robert Schumann.

Jean-Pierre Rampal and Robert Veyron-LaCroix, will be featured in concert tonight in Bowker Auditorium.

Mendoza Gives Fine Recital

BY J. W. WARD
Fine Arts Staff

Works of Bach, Brahms, Ravel, and Chopin were featured last Tuesday evening at Bowker Auditorium by pianist Roberto Mendoza in his Graduate Recital. Mr. Mendoza's recital was one of artistic ability and resourcefulness.

The program opened with Bach's Toccata in E Minor. Mendoza's interpretation combined well-structured dynamics with singing tone throughout, yet did not lose the basic simplicity or direction of the work.

Mr. Mendoza seemed to be a bit more at ease with the four Brahms pieces that followed. His playing was especially warm and sensitive in the second Intermezzo. The familiar Rhapsodie in E Flat Major was given a forceful, exciting treatment.

Beethoven's op. 110 Sonata in A Flat is probably one of his most difficult and demanding piano compositions. Its obvious characteristics run from surging fugues to plaintive, melancholy themes and require extreme control, devilish technique, and most of all, precise unity.

The second half of the program seemed better suited to Mendoza's big, romantic style. Ravel's Ondine was a performance of color imagery and breath. Mr. Mendoza played with amazing dexterity and tone.

Chopin's Barcarolle, op. 60 was given a convincing performance, but unfortunately it suffered too heavily from marred runs and rushed tempos. With the Nocturne in D Flat Major, op. 27, No. 2 though, Mendoza played with heart-felt expression and lyricism. In the Ballade No. 4 in F Minor, the final piece of the evening, Mr. Mendoza probably achieved the greatest success of the recital. His virtuosity was never more in command and he presented a vastly textured work of artistry and genuine beauty.

"Inga" Is Recommended For Immature Audience

BY SCOTT PRIOR
Fine Arts Writer

"Inga", another Swedish production, is interesting in that it mixes permissiveness with the plot and the social implications of a Lone Ranger episode. Where most foreign films excuse their license for promiscuity with intellectuality and interesting photography, "Inga" had no excuse for itself. The film was totally unrealistic; I doubt if such sexual liberty exists even in Sweden.

In the film, an orphaned young innocent is left with her rapidly aging aunt. This evil aunt, driven by a passion for her young boyfriend, financial security and a successful wrinkle creme, manipulates the virtuous but beautiful Inga. An ironic subplot develops, however, and Inga eventually runs off with her aunt's boyfriend.

I believe "Inga" will be taken in the same spirit that it is presented. I would suggest this movie for immature audiences.

Against Higher Tuition

(Ed. Note: This editorial will be presented by Richard Story to the House Committee on Education in Boston, Wednesday.)

The University of Massachusetts' original mandate goes back to the historic Land Grant ("Morrill") Act, signed by President Lincoln in 1862, which reads in part, "To the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college . . . in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life." More recently, the precise mission of the University was spelled out in Chapter 572, Section 31, of Massachusetts Acts of 1965, which reads in part, "The major purpose of the University shall be to provide, without discrimination, education programs, research, extension, and continuing education services in the liberal arts and sciences and in the professions . . ." The words "without discrimination' seem clearly to mean without financial discrimination, as well as without religious or racial discrimination. Serious financial discrimination would seem to be an inevitable result of any action to raise tuition by appreciably more than 100%. These legislative acts seem to make very clear the University's broad responsibilities for undergraduate education, adult education and public service. These absolutely vital functions to the residents of the Commonwealth would seem to us to be seriously endangered and hampered by action placing such a broad spectrum of education further beyond the reach of a greater number of residents.

Conferred upon the University by the Land Grant Act, the Massachusetts Higher Education Act, and other statutes, is the mandate to serve our citizens as a fully comprehensive state university. In the face of present and future demands for college and university education by tens of thousands of Massachusetts' youth, the University, and all the units of the state system of higher education, have an obligatio n to provide opportunities for higher education to as many qualified young people as can be accommodated within University and state resources; furthermore, as a land-grand institution and as the only publicly supported university in the Commonwealth, the University of Massachusetts is committed to the principle of providing quality education at low tuition cost. This absolutely crucial task for the ensuing decades cannot be done compatibly with a serious increase in tuition costs.

We sincerely and respectfully request the House Education Committee and the General Court to give long and careful thought to this measure - to determine for themselves that the task of making a lifetime investment in Massachusetts' principle resource, her youth, not be shortchanged by an ill-advised act placing higher education beyond the reach of so many who so dearly need it, and who would be so benefited by it. The principal trouble with a cheap education is that one never stops paying for it - we need a good education, and our state institutions can do this quite well now, thanks to legislative support over the years. To raise tuition rates at state institutions would be folly, in the face of the amount that has been spent for their development. Higher education is for all the people - it should not be priced out of the reach of all the people.

Outing Club

To the editor:

On the evening of February 26 a bill will go before the Student Senate concerning a financial appropriation to the University of Mass. Outing Club; an appropriation that will be used to purchase equipment which, ultimately is at the disposal of the entire University.

Since its establishment in 1927 the Outing Club has been one of the most active clubs within the University, co-ordinating at least one "outing" per week, while two and occasionally three trips per week have not been uncommon. While the club can speak with some pride of this accomplishment, it must frequently blush at the meager quantity of equipment that it is capable of providing for participating individuals, and at times for the complete lack of equipment that may be desired.

The two hundred or so individuals who joined the club on its introductory trip last September witnessed first hand, the club's lack of sufficient equipment and therefore experienced the all-too-common "waiting-in-line" routine.

In the "be a number' and "waiting in line" existance that we are becoming increasingly molded into, the Outing Club is, for the fifty-five paid members and for those who have infrequently availed themselves of the clubs facilities, a welcome change. If the club's request for financial aid meets with the approval of the Senate it is felt that the club will then be capable of serving well over 100 active members as well as a multitude of individuals or groups of individuals who might like to voyage away from the concrete, bricks and windows on occasion to enjoy some of the natural resources with which New England is so richly endowed. With the added equipment, the club would be capable of providing the necessities required for rockclimbing, rapelling, white and flat water canoeing, general and winter mountaineering, hiking, camping and any variation on or combination of these activities. At this time the club finds itself hard pressed to adequately and safely provide for all but the smallest of groups for all of the above mentioned activities.

Stressing the point that the club's equipment does in truth belong to the entire University, the Outing Club, urges you to seek out your Senator and indicate to him your interest for the passage of an appropriation that would provide materials to meet the needs of a greater number of individuals bringing with them an increased diversity of interests.

Senseless

To the editor:

Senseless....

Is that the word to describe the last attack on the El-Al jet in Zurich? The answer is "yes" if you ask the spokesman of the State Department.

Is the world going to handle this attack as cleverly as the Athens attack last December? Is not the "Climate of Forgiveness" (New York Times, Feb. 19) that encourages the Arab World?

It is not the Popular Front which is encouraged, this is not an organization which is sensitive to world opinion, but their supporters, without whom they could not act, can not afford to disregard it.

Before the Athens attack Lebanon's President gave the support, this time did it Egypt's president when he praised the terrorist organization unreservedly only a few days ago.

If the world would react to such acts as it should, Arab leaders could not support the terrorist movements and Middle East would be less in the news.

"Senseless" is describing the State Department's reaction better than it describes the Zurich attack.

War Objectives

To the editor:

When an objective is to be evaluated three things must be determined.

First, it must be determined whether or not the objective is attainable.

Secondly, it must be determined whether or not the objective is of any value to whomever is attempting to attain it, and of what value it is to him.

Thirdly, it must be determined whether or not the value of the objective is greater than or equal to the cost of attaining it.

If any of the three above things be determined in the negative, the objective ought to be abandoned, if at all possible.

When a means used to attain an objective is to be evaluated, two things must be determined.

First, it must be determined whether or not the means used is actually of any help in attaining the objective.

Secondly, it must be determined whether or not the means used is the least costly and the simplest of all feasible means of attaining the objective.

If any of the above two things be determined in the negative, the means ought to be abondoned, if at all feasible.

Those who are against the Vietnamese war, then, must show why that war and/or the objectives of that war are impractical. In order to accomplish this, they ought to use the criteria for evaluating ends and means that I have above stated.

UMass Goodness

To the editor:

Sometimes one has to have a bit of trouble, or be hurt in some small way to appreciate some of the people around us.

Most people complain here but I believe the campus mostly good. To further prove it, a bit over a week ago I had hurried down to my car to go visit some friends of mine off Campus. As I was about to put the key in my car to unlock it, my feet went out from under me and as I later found out I had broken an ankle bone. Two young men walking by realized I needed help, and assisted me up the steps to the Club. As we got inside we realized I needed a doctor to look at it. One of them said if that is your car we could take you up to the Infirmary, which they did. They were so very nice waiting to be sure my friends would be coming to take me to wherever I had to go.

Do half of the people who will read this, know that many girls and boys go to Belcherlown State School, to Northampton, to Springfield to help underprivileged people less fortunate than themselves?

Every barrel of apples has to have a few poor ones, but I for one would like to hear more about the good things they do.

"Romeo and Juliet" Possesses Excellent Scenery and Acting

BY SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

Franco Zeffirelli's production of "Romeo and Juliet" is a beautiful movie. The timeless story of the two "star-crossed' lovers of Quattrocento Verona, is artistically done and they are portrayed with much sensitivity. Every bit of the film lends itself to the muted tones of the misty Renaissance setting. Scenery is totally believable and does not have a phony "Hollywood - type" fascade. The custuming ranges from rich, elegant, be-jewelled gowns to the villager's scratchy homespun garb, worn in the cobbled streets.

It almost seems as if "West Side Story" had modeled itself from Shakespeare's classic drama of youthful love not sanctioned by society. Zeffirelli says of the film, "In love the young couple found an ideal - one they could die for - and youth today is hungry for ideals."

This film possesses candor and a fresh contemporary relevance all contained within an old-world setting. It has brought Shakespeare's work from the printed page to a vivid, fast-moving result. From the bloody, cabbage-hurling brawl in the market-place to the poignant death scene, "Romeo and Juliet" touches the emotions. Sentimental types are advised to bring handkerchiefs.

Thefts Reported To UMass Police

BY JEAN MCANDREWS
Staff Reporter

A pair of "mag' wheels, a battery, and a radiator were stolen from two cars in the F lot over the weekend. The thefts were reported to the campus police Monday.

Chief of Police Alexander Blasko says that thefts of this kind and vandalism in the parking lots are at about the same level as last year, when 15 incidents were reported.

The thieves often enter through unlocked doors and windows, taking radios and loose items. Blasko strongl y urges all students and faculty using the lots to make sure that their doors are locked and windows are tightly closed.

A large number of the thefts occur in F lot, as surveillance of this lot is hampered by lack of a "stake-out" point. Last year Moore dormitory, which was under construction at that time, was used by campus police as a vantage point for observing the lot, but it is now completed and occupied.

Orchard Hill lot is another bad area for thefts, Blasko says, because of the lack of proper lighting.

Argentinians See Typical UMass Day

Last Tuesday, the University Hispanic Club played host to a group of Argentine students who are visiting the United States under a cultural exchange program. To see what a typical day in an American university is like, the seven students and their chaperone, escorted by members of the Hispanic Club, toured the campus and attended various classes.

The day's program ended with an informal gathering in Emerson House Date Lounge, followed by a dinner at the Spanish Table in Hampshire Commons. Those Hispanic Club members acting as hosts were Mandy Correa, Gail Geiver, Robert Hottin, Jeanne Mele, David Piccus, Pat Sweeney, and Ken Vittum.

Government Borrowing Nears Ceiling of National Debt

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon signaled Congress for help Monday to head off an approaching collision between government borrowing and the legal ceiling on the national debt.

At the same time Nixon asked Capitol Hill approval of new ground rules for designating which government obligations should be subject to the ceiling.

If the present method of figuring the debt is retained, the President said, a boost in the existing $365 billion limitation to $382 billion is needed.

But if the changeover in bookkeeping methods is allowed, he said, the statutory limit can be marked down to $300 billion.

Either way the government needs some $17 billion quick cash to be sure it can meet its bills. Administration sources said the usual flood of revenue from income tax payment s won't arrive in time to cover the cash needs of March and April.

The President's message was sent to Congress by the White House while Nixon was in Europe.

"I must ask the Congress to revise the debt limit before mid-April," Nixon said. There is inadequate leeway in the peaks and valleys of projected revenue and expenditure flows to do otherwise.

Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., of the House Ways and Means Committee said his group will suspend its tax-reform hearings to consider the debt-ceiling request on March 5.

Administration sources said the government might conceivably scrape through without further borrowing. But this would leave nothing to cover unforeseen cash demands - "not a very good way to run a government," one spokesman said.

Nixon noted the likelihood of a debt ceiling pinch was touched on by former President Lyndon B. Johnson in his January budget message when he predicted that an increase in the limit might be necessary within the next few months.

Rev. Malcolm Boyd to Be Guest At Community Festival of Life

The Rev. Malcolm Boyd will be a guest at the Community Festival of Life, to be held at the University Friday and Saturday. Mr. Boyd, an Episcopal priest, an author, and editor of several books, will meet to talk with members of the University community in Curry Hicks Cage at 8 p.m. Friday night.

Malcolm Boyd/s visit will provide a focal point for the two day celebration, which has been designed by the Students for Ecumenical Action (SEA). According to one SEA member, "Malcolm Boyd, like many of us here, is convinced that the traditional university or college week-end is not worth the money it costs, and is, in fact, wasteful and almost obscene in its vast expenditure of money."

"In planning the Festival we had hoped to provide an opportunity for members of this community to celebrate their life together, inexpensively, and not merely by listening to some big name musical group from outside."

With a strong emphasis on communication and interaction, the Festival will include a session of "theatre games" Friday night after Mr. Boyd's talk, designed to exand physically upon some of his themes of community and communication.

Continuing with some of the ideas that will be put forth on Friday night, two members of the Milwaukee 14 will speak in Thompson 106 Saturday at 1 p.m. on "The Polarization of the American Community." This group of fourteen priests was arrested last year for destroying draft files in Milwaukee.

A film festival, centered on the theme "Conscience and Community", will be held in Thompson 106 from 2:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Some of the films that will be shown are "The Detached American", "Very Nice, Very Nice", "Time Piece' , and "Sign Posts on a Merry-go-round'. During the films several members of the University community, and several people from outside who have been involved in the lives of other universities, will be carrying on conversations about some of the issues raised by the Festival itself. This process of inter - personal communication should, according to SEA members, be one of the important aspects of the whole Festival.

Saturday night at 8 p.m. the Festival will move back to Curry Hicks Cage, for a community celebration of art, music, theatre, and mixed-media entertainment. This aspect of the Festival will, tegrate some of the experiences of modern culture into the life of the community. Local musical groups like The Elysian Spring, some short modern plays, participatory theatre, a light show, and several other activities will provide opportunities for the celebrators to involve themselves joyfully in each other's life and work.

Describing this final celebration, and the whole Festival, one SEA member said, "We believe in fun, and in joy; but we also beleive that people cannot have honest fun or be honestly joyful, by ignoring the realities of this world of ours. There are such places as Biafra, and Vietnam, and Watts; and we cannot ignore them. But we can joyfully confront our situation on this earth, and in the University, and we can confront each other with that same joy. For us in SEA this kind of joyful confrontation is a possible key to coping with our life together. We only hope that it can provide a key for the rest of the University community as well.

Northern Education Service Enriches Both Participating Tutor and Student

"A tutor? What's a tutor?" asked a young black mother from the slums of Springfield when she learned that her nine-year-old daughter had signed up for tutoring at the local NES center.

The Northern Education Service, now six years old, is dedicated to underprivileged children who are having trouble with their schoolwork. UMass provides 40% of all the student tutors.

The five NES centers scattered throughout Springfield's slums, range from converted variety stores to a newly built Girls Club. The children are welcome there anytime to sign for tutors, who are primarily college men and women from this area.

Some of the aims of NES are: (1) to find students in Springfield's economically disadvantaged communities whose potential is not recognized and developed (2) to provide a tutoring service which assists in academic subjects (3) to provide a program of cultural enrichment and (4) to permit volunteer college students to assist in this program.

The UMass volunteer tutors, coordinated through the King Social Center, go once a week to the centers by a special NES bus and tutor primarily in reading and arithmetic. While the tutors are helping these children academically, they also try to increase the child's confidence in himself, to establish a meaningful friendship, and to give attention which the child does not get at home.

NES is beneficial not only for these children but also for the tutors themselves. NES introduces a new world to most of the volunteers as they gain insight into themselves as well as the problems of poverty.

NES was founded by Robert Hughes who moved to Springfield in 1963. Because he believed that education is the most important factor for success, he established the first center with the help of the people of the individual neighborhoods. An administrative staff was set up and center coordinators were hired from the members of the neighborhoods.

OEO (Office of Economic Opportunity) provides the bulk of the funds for NES, but it has required a "maintenance of effort" - contribution from the community. Various funds and foundations in the Springfield area have contributed.

GSS Sponsors Movie To Collect Funds, Fight Retardation

Gamma Sigma Sigma, the women's service sorority on campus is again sponsoring a movie to earn funds for their many projects for the mentally retarded. The color film, "How to Steal a Million," starring Audrey Hepburn, Peter O'Toole, Hugh Griffith, Charles Boyer, and Eli Wallach, is a comedy about the theft of a marble Cellini nude from a Paris art museum.

Directed by William Wyler of "Ben Hur" and "The Collector" fame, this film will make an enjoyable evening's entertainment and help toward a good cause. It will be shown on Saturday night, March 1, 1969, at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar.

UMass Travels to Meet Rhody Await Possible Tourney Bid

By PETER F. PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

In quest of a tourney bid, an undefeated Conference season, and a school win record, the Yankee Conference champion UMass basketball team travels to Kingston, R. I. tonight to meet a dangerous Rhode Island Ram team. The unbeaten UMass frosh also travel to meet the U.R.I. frosh.

The game will be televised on channel 10 in Providence necessitating a 7:35 starting time for the varsity game. The freshman clash taps off at 5:30.

The Redmen have shots going into this game for a school win mark of 18 wins in a single season. They can be the second Yankee Conference team to be perfect in the league play. UMass also can keep alive a Conference winning streak that is at 13 with a win tonight.

But possibly uppermost on the minds of the UMass team and its followers is the status the Redmen have concerning a post-season berth. They could finish with an 18-6 slate, a record that at least places the cagers third in New England behind Boston College and Holy Cross.

Invitations to both the National Invitational and the NCAA Championships are begun today, but chances are nothing will be known until later in the week.

All this speculation about records and tournies can all go down the drain however if UMass chances to look past tonight's game. For, Rhode Island is capable of putting a lot of points on the board and is always tough on its home floor.

The Rams have in forward John Fultz the leading Conference scorer and one of the top forwards in the New England area. A junior from Natick, Fultz, whose brother is a UMass frosh member, is averaging around 30 points in Conference play and just under that over all. Though 6'6, Fultz' main strength is a deadly jump shot.

Starting at one guard will be 5'10 Leon Mintschenke from Sommerville, N.J. A senior, Mintschenko is the playmaker for the rams. Also in the backcourt will be junior Ron Tiskevitch, who has had some good scoring games.

Also expected to see some action at the guard spots for Rhody will be seniors Joe Zaranka and Mike Schanne, both of whom on occasion can shoot well from outside.

Up front to bolster Fultz will be in one corner sophomore Al "Bud" Hazard, a 6'7 bull of the boards who can be tough to stop underneath. At center will be 6'8 Earl Louder, who has improved since early in the season to do a capable job.

Rhode Island is second in the Conference with a 5-3 record and a 8 - 13 mark overall. Inconsistency and a slow start has plagued the Rams, but they will be tough tonight. For, the Rams will have the incentive of playing a champion.

The Ram frosh have the same incentive in playing a UMass frosh team that is 14 - 0 that is rolling toward the first frosh hoop perfect season in history.

Runners Clobber UNH Ready for Conf. Meet

By DAVE EVANS
Staff Reporter

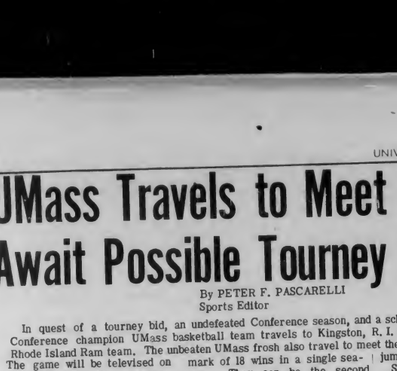
It was UMass' day Saturday at the University of New Hampshire. Coach Ken O'Brien's track team, frustrated after three heartbreaking loses, overwhelmed a good U.N.H. team, 69 - 35.

In a reversal of last year's meet, the Redmen scored heavily in the field events to clinch the win early in the afternoon. In the running events the Redmen once again dominated the opposition, increasing the margin of victory. The win was a particularly important one for Coach O'Brien's athletes, as U.N.H. was rated as a contender in the Yankee Conference Championships being held this weekend at Vermont.

Leading the parade of good field events performances was big Ed Arcaro in the weight department. Arcaro, grabbing second place in the 35 pound weight throw behind UNH's Bill Phillips, came back to defeat Phillips in the shot put. The Redmen high jumpers also had another fine day for themselves as three of them tied at 6'3.

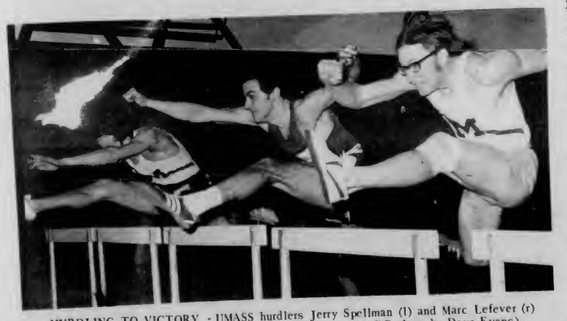
Soph Cal Carpenter and Senior Co-Captain John Arlensen won the varsity competition, while freshman jumper Ed Shaughnessey also went 6'3 in winning the frosh event. In the long jump, Dave Canterbury, another sophomore, came up with a big win over UNH's Gary King in winning at the distance of 21'7".

At this stage in the meet, with a seven point bulge over the Wildcats, the UMass running forces took over and finished the job. Ron Wayne and Co-captain Charlie Lang took the first two places in the mile run, Wayne winning in 4:17.6, followed by Lang in a personal best of 4:18.2. The Redmen sprint forces that have been demolishing everyone in sight lately, made UNH no exception as they swept the event.



Leading the charge was Sophomore Walt Mayo, followed very closely by Ed Heywood and Dave Marble. All three were timed in 6.5.

The domination continued into the middle distances as Senior Bob Hasselbaum won a relatively easy decision in the 600 yard run. Following this event was the 60 yard high hurdles. UMass only had one entry due to the fact that junior record holder Marc Lefever did not compete because of a muscle strain. That one entry was plenty however, as Jerry Spellman won easily in the record time of 7.6 seconds.



In the 1000 yard run, it was UMass again as they took the first two places behind Bill Donaldsen and Diego Gonzalez. This was icing on the cake as the Redmen had clinched the meet by this time.

In the last individual event of the meet, junior Paul Hoss went after the cage record in the two mile run. Behind the first mile pacesetting of Lang, Hoss went on to break the fieldhouse record, winning in the time of 9:15.1. Lang hung on well to establish another personal best of 9:19.8.

The UMass mile relay team also set a new fieldhouse record, winning the event in 3:25.6. Steve Chase ran the fastest leg of 50.7 in leading off for the Redmen. Other runners were Gonzalez, Spellman, and Hasselbaum.

Drakesters Roll

UMass' intramural champion basketball team, the powerful Drakesters, tied at halftime, put on their vaunted zone press to defeat the New Hampshire champs, Kappa Sigma, 48-42, to win the extramural hoop crown.

Leading the Village Inn aggregate, that seemingly, always out of shape kept on winning, was "Broadway" Vic Papadinis with 14. He was followed closely by John Niles with 13 and Kevin Boisjolie with 10.

Thus P.J. Curran's boys capped a great season with a long ride home from Durham.

UMass runner up the Grayson Aces behind Leon Saunder's 22 points rolled over UNH runner up Gibbs House 49 - 36 in the second place duel.

Tennis Anyone?

There will be a meeting of all varsity and frosh tennis candidates on Tuesday, March 4 at 7 p.m. in 251 Boyden. All interested parties should attend.

Dean Hunsberger Announces Resignation

by MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

Dean Hunsberger
(Photo by Ken Emery)

I. Moyer Hunsberger, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences announced his resignation, effective March 1, in a surprise move yesterday. The unexpected decision left faculty and administrators, to quote Provost Oswald Tippo, "thoroughly astounded."

The Executive Committee of the College of Arts and Sciences will meet within a week to name at least a temporary successor.

Hunsberger, who has been Dean of the University's largest academic division since 1961, said personal reasons led him to make the decision to step down. He refused to elaborate.

UMass President John W. Lederle praised the Dean, and told him, "During your years as Dean, the University has grown steadily in excellence, for which the state can be proud. We will miss the dedication and service . . . that you have contributed toward this excellence."

In accepting the resignation, Provost Tippo expressed his surprise this way. "I'm shocked, I had no idea this was coming." He went on to say, "you (Hunsberger) have made a major contribution to the development of the University. I want you to know that I consider your resignation as a great loss to the University and to me personally."

In praising the retiring Dean, Sociology Professor G. Putnam Barber told the DAILY COLLEGIAN, "Of the three serious proposals for curriculum reform, his was the most interesting and by far the most radical." Barber added that Hunsberger was a leader in the effort to improve the Arts and Sciences outlook on education in general.

However not everyone contacted by the MDC had praise for Hunsberger. One faculty member pointed out that Dean Hunsberger "must have had some administrative problem when you consider the fact that approximately one third of the departments in the College of Arts and Science have no heads."

Professor Seymour Shapiro, who had disagreed with Hunsberger in the past, said, "I believe his contribution to the University has been enormous. He was a leader in academic reform, although not always a very well known leader. I believe the faculty and students owe a debt of gratitude to him."

Head of the Government Department William C. Havard said "He did a remarkable job at an assignment which is probably to much for one man to really handle."

Hunsberger, a native of Quakertown, Pa., received B.S., M.S., and Ph.D. degrees from Lehigh University. He taught at Antioch College and Fordham University before coming to UMass in 1960, to head the Chemistry department.

Lederle, Demonstrators Talk

Lederle Agrees With Idea of Debate But Feels It's Not Recruiter's Job

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Over 75 people were present in the Colonial Lounge yesterday to hear President John W. Lederle answer questions.

Many of them had planned to march over to Whitmore Administration Building for a demonstration against Olin-Matheson, but the demonstration was called off at noon when it was learned the Olin-Matheson recruiter had already left campus.

The President, who was the guest at the weekly Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council Coffee Hour, answered some questions about the demonstration Feb. 13 against Dow and about teaching at the University.

Bart Kaplan, one of those arrested in the Dow sit-in, asked the President if he "was a man of integrity or a yes man.' Lederle said he considered himself "a man of integrity.'

In discussing the purpose of the University, Lederle told Kaplan that the "University is what you put into it." Kaplan apologized to the group saying, "I'm sorry my confrontation isn't working.' President Lederle, in referring to a question that the Administration had not made an attempt to talk with the demonstrators said, "I had hoped the Administration and faculty were working for a dialogue.'

When asked if he would allow a company that discriminated against Negroes, the President said he didn't know whether a company did or not.

In answering Mike Minsky's question whether the University was doing anything about a company that discriminated in hiring people or defrauded the public, Lederle said, "That is a good question. Maybe we ought to review things and see if a company does discriminate. But there are federal laws against defrauding the public."

Minsky also asked the President if Westinghouse and General Electric were allowed to recruit, and Lederle said he didn't think they did. Minsky asked him if he were aware of suits against these two companies and Lederle said that he was.

President Lederle reiterated a stand that Dean of Students William F. Field had made earlier that a recruiter should not have to be the one to debate, but "I go along with the idea of a debate."

When queried as to why he did not come down to talk with the people sitting-in against Dow, Lederle said he was "told they weren't talking about the demand, so I didn't come down.'

President Lederle said that he was always willing to talk to a student, and he had never found one who wasn't willing to talk, but "students are alienating themselves from the normal process of discussion."

In talking about education and the University, he said, "education is highly individual thing. Students come for a number of different reasons." He went on to say that ultimately the aim is for student s to "grow and become mature individuals."

Lederle pictured the University as a pluralistic society of students and faculty, with students at the center. The University is "a product of student and faculty interest," he said.

A student asked him what he saw as the difference between Brandeis and UMass, and Lederle said, "The difference was between his judgment (the President of Brandeis) and mine. Another difference was the Brandeis demands were negotiable and yours were not."

When Gil Salk, executive secretary of the King Council asked Lederle to define a military-industrial complex, the President said, "I think I know what it is, but my definition might not suit you so I choose not to."

A student asked Lederle for some of the advantages to supporting recruiting and he said, "It is a complicated world. It is important for a student to get some assistance and facilitation in getting a job.' "Most places do this," he said.

The only disadvantage he could see, and he said he was not sure it was a disadvantage was "an academic institution wasting time and money" to do this. He went on to say at UMass Boston, where there is not enough room for these facilities, the students go downtown.

Minsky said students should be given more power and "give them a chance to participate more meaningfully" in the University. He

Proposal Made to Reduce Physical Ed. Requirement

By RICHARD W. STORY
Education Editor

Associate Dean David Bischoff, of the School of Physical Education, has unveiled a plan to greatly reduce the present physical education requirement. In discussions with an Academic Affairs subcommittee, the Dean presented a plan which his school has now forwarded to the Provost for consideration in that office.

Briefly, the proposal suggests that the present 4-semester requirement be reduced to a 1-semester 2-credit course, to be completed in the freshman year, from which there would be no waivers or exemptions. The Dean felt that the plan could be implemented by September 1969, given favorable action by the University faculty this spring.

The important feature, but not the whole substance, of the proposal is the idea of the 2-credit classroom course, emphasizing a "principles" approach to physical education and skills. Programming within the requirement would be primarily the responsibility of the faculty involved with the General Physical Education program. At this stage it seems reasonable to anticipate that a number of options will be available to students - one of the options could be a course, the primary objective of which would be the understanding of physical education, said Bischoff.

The usual approach to physical education - just raw exposure - does not seem to generate either an understanding of what

A Debate with Dow, one of the unanswered requests of the Committee to End Military and Industrial recruitment, will be sponsored by Sigma Alpha Mu at 8:00 in the Student Union Ballroom on March 6.

Dean Wakefield, Eastern Public Relations Manager of Dow Chemical will debate a student spokesman, to be named later this week by SAM. The entire University community will be invited to attend.

Neal Whitman, spokesman for SAM, explained that Associate Provost Allen's letter in the DAILY COLLEGIAN prompted the fraternity's acting to provide "a direct forum of debate since Dow was willing to participate in the program.

ALFIE, the movie regularly scheduled to be shown in the Ballroom at the time of the debate, will be shown March 5.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

(AP) - A counterrevolution is emerging on some college campuses as students band together in opposition to disruptive demonstrations. One group calls itself SPASM - The Society for Prevention of Asinine Student Movements.

SPASM was born at Wichita State University, where members held a "milk-in" this week, two weeks after a beer drink-in by students favoring the sale of beer on campus.

Members of SPASM, handing out small cartons of milk, said the "milk-in" was a "peaceful, intelligent and legal demonstration" in protest of protests.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Army doctors reported that former President Dwight D. Eisenhower has progressed from his major surgical operation to a point where he "read for a brief period this afternoon."

JERUSALEM (AP) - Explosions rocked a market in the Israeli city of Lydda and the British consulate in East Jerusalem Tuesday, probably setting the stage for more reprisals against Arab nations.

Before the bombs went off, Egypt had announced a state of emergency throughout the country in expectation that Israel would strike in answer to previous Arab terrorist attacks.

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) — The big snowstorm that swept New England Monday and Tuesday left 40 inches of new cover atop New Hampshire's rugged Mt. Washington.

An employe of the weather station on the 6,288 foot mountain said this brings total snow accumulation at the station for the 12-month period beginning July 1, 1968 to a new high of 391.6 inches.

The previous high was 344.1 inches, set during the period between July, 1957 and July, 1958.

NEW YORK (AP) - A brieftechnical rally followed five straight stiff declines, but the advance fizzled, and the stock market took another tumble Tuesday.

There are about 2,500 species of ants, all displaying some form of social organization.

There were 81,299 governmental units in the nation at the end of 1967, according to the Census Bureau.

Czech Student Dies by Fire in Prague Acts in Protest of Soviet Occupation

PRAGUE (AP) - A student splashed gasoline on his clothing Tuesday, set himself afire, dashed into downtown Prague's Wenceslas Square and died.

Reports circulated through the hushed crowd that the victim, Jan Zajic, 19, was the second of five students who swore to die by fire to protest the Soviet occupation. The first was Jan Palach, now a national hero, who burned himself to death in the square in January.

Apparently Zajic soaked his clothing with gasoline in the furnace room of an electrical appliance store. Some said he was seen carrying a small bag, apparently containing the gasoline.

Suddenly Zajic was seen running along a crowded walkway to the square, his clothing afire. A worker from the furnace room chased him.

Flames and smoke were pouring from his body. Shocked bystanders said he was burned black before he collapsed. The crowd tried to beat out the fire on his clothing. So did a policeman, who was overcome by smoke and was taken to a hospital.

Zajic died about 100 yards from the spot where Palach set himself afire Jan. 16. Palach died three days later in a hospital.

Some people in the crowd said Zajic chose Feb. 25 to burn himself because it was the anniversary of the day in 1948 that the Communists came to power in Czechoslovakia.

Czechs were calling Zajic "the second human torch." There has been a whole series of fire suicides and attempts since Palach. Authorities have attributed nearly all of them to family troubles, mental disturbances and other non-political causes.

Witnesses said Zajic left a folder of statements and letters including one reportedly calling on the government to act on Palach's demands for an end to censorship and to the Soviet circulated propaganda sheet Zpravy.

Officials said only that Zajic left behind some letters indicating he had political reasons for setting himself afire.

physical education can do for a person, or a real desire to continue an organized program of activity in later life. Both of these are desirable outcomes of a good program of physical education; and the Dean indicated that he hoped that these would come from the program his faculty are proposing.

The physical education fee would remain, as the plan stands at present. A $10 fee would be charged all undergraduates for the one semester requirement; and the small additional fee presently supporting the costs of maintaining the free play program would also be continued.

Dean Bischoff emphasized the idea of the alternatives which would be available for fulfilling the revised requirement - if a student chose to satisfy his requirement by electing an activity option, he could complete two 1-semester 1-credit activity courses instead of the classroom course.

said he felt the students "should be prepared to do this."

Lederle said he could not personally take a moral stand on the question without identifying the University with it. "I can't do this,' he said, "because the Board of Trustees precludes it."

In a discussion about the Student Senate between Student Senate President Paul Silverman and Kaplan, Kaplan asserted that the senate was not representative of the student body and most of the senators seek office "for the status and power."

Lederle said for greater participation by students in decisions, they would have to start with the departments. Lederle said this was one way of getting their point of view on teaching.

Silverman said the only student senate bills "accepted by the faculty senate were the ones they wanted." He went on saying that he was personally against calling in the state police to break up the Dow demonstration and could not see why they couldn't sit in for two or three days. If there was vandalism and violence, he said, it would be different.

When a student asked the President if he felt he was out of touch with what was going on at the University, he said at first, "I'm told I am, but I hope I'm not." Later he said, "I'm in a half-way house."

Silverman asked that when a faculty member gets tenure, "it is based on his teaching, but if Lederle and Tippo don't go into the classrooms, how do they know."

Lederle called on Seymour Shapiro, head of the Botany Department, to answer the question. In his department, Shapiro said that he had "various sources." "There are critiques available for inspection for everyone in the department," he said. He also said he went into the classes.

Shapiro said if there are any problems in a course, a student can see the department head or the dean of the college.

He said he "was sorry to see CRITIQUE fail, but it was not because of money, but students were not willing to work on it."

Shapiro said when a teacher was hired they knew they were hired because of their "excellence in teaching and ability to make a professional contribution in their field."

Shapiro also said, in answer to a question by Silverman, that a professor had to be up to date in his field and present correct information to the students.

As the coffee hour was breaking up, President Lederle said he "was unhappy for the record that we have not gone far enough to do this systematically." He went on to say he would like "to see the faculty and students come up with a more systematic, overall approach to this. I feel it is important," he said.

Forum Discusses University Requirements
Univ. Power Structure Sparks Controversy

By DONNA WALDRON
Staff Reporter

Students, faculty, and administrators who are interested in making UMass a more meaningful university met last night in North Dining Commons to discuss common problems. The session was sponsored by the Committee for a University Forum.

Core curriculum and University requirements were the problems most widely discussed. The question of the University power structure also sparked much controversy.

It was brought out that even if the University eliminated some of the requrements that the individual departments would make them mandatory anyway. To attain a B.A. or a B. S. students are necessarily held to meeting all the degree requirements. To circumvent the frustration this causes some students, it was suggested that certificates of attendance be issued for every course successfully completed. This method is used at Juilliard and enables the student to decide if he wants knowledge for its aesthetic value or if he finds a degree more personally meaningful and lifts limits placed on individuality.

It was also brought out that an ombudsman who would be able to help students solve their problems quickly, by cutting unnecessary red tape, would make the individual a more important part of the University.

Some students desire a non credit course which would explain the power structure here at U-Mass. It soon became apparent that there is no one person who has enough background to effectively teach an in depth course in this area Dean Field and others expressed a willingness to be a part of a panel consisting of representatives from each of the major areas of power in the University: Trustees, administration, deans, department heads, and the Student Senate.

The President's Stand

In a time of increased student participation in campus protests, its always nice to know where one's President stands. Monday Americans found out Nixon's position. The Whitehouse released the test of a letter sent to Notre Dame's President, Theodore Hesburgh, the newly artisen Hayakawa of the Midwest. Notre Dame students were last week presented with his policy toward students who insist upon substituting "force for rational persuation. Fifteen minutes "of meditation" to stop, followed by suspension. Then, another five minutes and expulsion. Nixon's reaction to this policy was, "I want to applaud the forthright stand you have taken."

Each demonstration must be treated as a separate occurrance; to set forth one policy to cover all demonstrations shows absolutely no forsight. Most demonstrators are sincere individuals fulfilling a moral committment. To enforce a policy such as the above against them would be a travesty.

However, those who feel that dedication is something that should be measured by the amount of damage inflicted upon the physical structure of the university, should be dealth with as criminals. Civil disobediance ends when the rights of others are not respected. It is at a time like this when one can condone a policy like Hesburgh's.

Hopefully, this is the only time that the President can condone it.

(Ed. Note: The following is an editorial reprinted from the Worcester Sunday Telegram of Feb. 2, 1969)

"We've got rights," is the insistent cry of today's youth. Of course you do. Some accrue to you by "right," merely because you were lucky enough to be born into your family, at this point in time, in the United States. But other rights will only come to you as you grow older. The rest you'll have to earn.

Many of today's kids have been led up the garden path by adults who bow down before the "youth cult," and who abandon their authority to make rules. But even that's no excuse for kids who want to substitute their momentary wishes for a system of rules.

It's perfectly true that many rules are outmoded and irrelevant. But until you are educated and able to assume responsibility for your judgments, you'd better adhere to even the rules you do not understand. Having a rumble and disrupting things may seem like fun at the time, but only you will pay the price.

Open Forum

1) A corporation is not merely an economic unit. It is also a political institution which makes decisions affecting all of us.

2) It is legitimate for individuals and groups to investigate the wider consequences of corporate decisions, to raise as public issues the moral and material implications of these decisions.

3) The idea of an "open university" implies not only unrestricted recruiting - a practice, after all, peripheral to the university's fundamental purpose, but an atmosphere especially conducive to public discussion and debate of controversial issues. All agencies which benefit from an open university should be prepared, upon occasion, to contribute to these more fundamental purposes of university life.

We propose, therefore, that the University of Massachusetts establish a policy whereby each agency recruiting here must commit itself, upon the request of a recognized university group, to debate in open forum once during the course of the academic year issues of concern to members of the university.

This is a minimal obligation, we believe, to impose on an agency requesting the use of university facilities. Such a policy would not reduce the freedom of agencies to recruit on campus or of students to meet recruiters; it would expand opportunities for students, faculty, administrators, and recruiting agencies to explore publically issues which touch all of us.

Protest

To the editor:

The snow storm of Sunday Feb. 9 resulted in many letters condemning the snow removal and the unheld non-cancelled classes. The maintenance employees and the instructors could afford to take a paid sick day.

The student-workers were praised in the only commending letter dealing with the snow storm. They showed up for work. Why did they show? They showed up because they do not have sick days and because they could not afford the loss of that meager $1.50/hr. They had to eat and pay academic costs from the hours they were allowed to work. It was not pride of one's work that drove them there, but hard, cold necessity.

These cafeteria workers were the privileged ones, others have to maintain themselves on $1.35/hr. After the deductions of federal and state taxes, etc., and the full price for a meal taken while punched out; this meager $1.35/hr. is more like .90/hr.

Although the minimum wage of $1.60/hr. does not apply to part-time workers, the spirit and the need expressed in that guide line should be enough pressure. Legally the University is not forced to pay the minimum wage, but MUST they hide behind legality.

The state employees of Massachusetts are asking for a 20% raise and they will probably receive a 12% increase. Their contention is that the increase in the price of living demands an increase in the present pay scale. This increase in the price of living also affects those who must put themselves through school. The state employees have an organization to express their grievances. They will probably get what they ask for. The student-workers of UMass need an organization of student-workers to coalesce their views and requests for decency on the powers that be.

This Friday, Feb. 28, in the Nantucket room of the Student Union, at 12:15, a meeting will be held for student-workers and interested persons who wish to try and develop constructive methods of bringing these conditions to the attention of those who might "do something about it".

Obligation

To the editors:

In view of the recent criticism of those students who feel it their moral obligation to speak out against the military system, I thought it would be fitting to pass along to you some of the thoughts I received in a letter from my closest friend, who is now in his fifth week of basic training in the United States Army:

"Dear Ron,

At this time as I prepare to write my thoughts on this stunning stationery, my mind has hit a point of extreme depression unequalled by any other period of my existence. I will attempt to be jovial or at the very least witty, as I recount to you the horrors of this pesthold.

From 5:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. we are rushed, pushed, herded, and forced to wait interminable hours, to the background of such profanity and illiterate misuse of the English language that your mind succumbs to the blessed peace of conscious suspended animation. We march, we run, we do PT in mud, rain, and snow. We are verbally bullied and harrassed in a futile attempt to break our wills and individuality. I say futile, because inside you laugh. You have to laugh or you'll cry that such treatment is basically a crime against a democratic thinking society . . .

We hate the military with a group passion. We are invincible to Army brainwashing (and there is plenty of it) as long as we remember that each person has a name as well as a set of dog tags. As a final word let me just say that as a body, I am bruised and tired, as an intellect, I am rotting and the result is the 'ultimate weapon' - the soldier.

. . .Write when you have the time. Sing to your heart's content. I would love to sit around, smoke, drink coffee, and sing. God, I hate this place.

Uniformly yours..."

My friend never realized the importance of committment nor understood the painful results of apathy. He too was once in the protective womb that we know as UMass.

First Peace Corps Program Scrapped As Tanzania Sends Away Workers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tanzania, the first nation in the world picked for a Peace Corps delegation, is scrapping the program.

Too many teachers, and not enough technicians, caused the African nation to become disenchanted with the volunteers America sent abroad.

From a peak of nearly 400 persons, the Peace Corps has shrunk to 11 in Tanzania.

Tanzania, a Texas-size nation on the east coast of Africa, will be the eighth country to send the Peace Corps home since 1961. But past departures have usually stemmed from foreign policy flareups rather than disappointments with Peace Corps workers.

African pride spurred criticism, of the idea of children being taught in their impressionable years by strangers from a white man's culture. In one steamy African country, the English textbook used by Peace Corps teachers read bewilderingly: 'See John and Mary throwing snow.'

As criticism mounted in Tanzania, the government stopped its requests for the American teachers. The nation now emphasizes Swahili in the schools, not English.

Tanzania has had quiet but deep international differences with the United States. It opposes U.S. policy in Vietnam, it is critical of racial tensions in America, and it welcomes aid from Red China as well as this country.

Tanzania President Julius K. Kyerere - the same man who asked Kennedy for the volunteers when the former British colony was gaining its independence in 1961 - has said nothing about the Peace Corps since criticizing the teachers two years ago.

On Saturday, February 22, the University of Massachusetts Flying Redmen Drill Team, competing in the Canisius College Invitational Drill Meet in Buffalo, New York, won the first place trophy in the trick drill category. This trophy, presented by the Director of Canisius College to the Drill Master Brian Krutka is of great importance to the Redmen as it represents not only their first victory in five years, but also their first victory as an all-University Team. This Friday the Flying Redmen will compete in the Garden State Invitational Drill Meet in New Jersey and are confident that they will bring home another trophy for UMass.

Unbutton Your Overcoat Summer is on Its Way

"What a joke!" you shout as you venture to open your mouth, oblivious of the fact that snow accumulation on the tongue is 25mm per word spoken during blizzards. It's not likely that you can envision a warm sandy beach as you plod along in the tracks of the snow plow that are slowly becoming obliterated by a penetrating shower of crystals.

Still you may yet feel a tinge of optimism, if somehow you get a glimpse of a calendar. It is the end of February, and in three months you may actually feel the warmth of the sun without the necessity of a trip to Ft. Lauderdale.

Now is the time to think about getting a job for the summer.

If you'd like to continue in your major of Social Butterflyism, it might be wise to consider a job as a lifeguard on the Cape. It is true that the salary isn't overwhelming but the fringe benefits certainly make it worthwhile.

So that you will be ready to carry out your dutues, try taking lifeguarding 101 for the last quarter of this semester. The course covers whistle - swinging, necessary facial expressions (such as alertness and concern), suntanning and flexing.

A waitressing job may seem attractive. This season restaurants are planning to have the customers tip first and they will be served according to their generosity and eligibility.

Intellectuals will find it useful to look on the Serious Student Bulletin Board, found on the back door at Mike's, for opportunities to study a broad.

To put you in a summer mood, slap on a Beach Boys album, wear last year's bikini, and lie on your surfboard as you write letters of inquiry concerning summer opportunity. Do it now and avoid the May 29th rush.

Squaw Talk

"Tous le monde Aime Samedi Soir"

It's Saturday night and wouldn't you know it?

Everyone on the corridor has a date except you, and you're busy playing martyr because nobody wants to alleviate his loneliness by requesting your ever so fascinating company on the biggest night of the week.

So you wash your hair and set it before the line starts at the showers and you pull out the cards and begin playing solitaire on the floor, as your roommate rushes between rooms borrowing clothes, and you console yourself by thinking well, I wouldn't be able to go anywhere anyway because all my clothes have been borrowed for the night.

And just as you've decided that you could be perfectly happy not ever having a date ever again for the rest of your life, the girl across the hall drops in, bearing your best outfit, lent to her for her much-awaited date, and says "Well, I guess I won't be needing this," and you extract from her that her date just called and informed her that something came up - nervous chuckle, haha - his girlfriend.

So you deal her in for double solitaire, and you sit there discussing very rationally over your cigarettes how men are just more aggravation than they're worth, and you gaze with pitifully wide eyes at those blind, silly girls who are giggling excitedly over the prospect of being thusly aggravated for the night.

Meanwhile the phone rings and you smirk and pick it up and naturally it's for your roommate, who beams as she answers and then turns an appealing shade of maroon and manages to mutter a strangled "No thanks, I think I'd better stay in and study tonight," and slams down the receiver.

And you listen sympathetically as she tells you, in unadulterated disbelief, how her date needed to fix up a new pledge that the house really wanted and since he needed someone who would give him a really good time, would she go out with him instead?

So you switch to gin rummy, and with every card you deal you spew out the most marvelously apt choice adjectives and phrases having to do with the nature of the male.

Meanwhile, the girl next door strolls in, all shiny and clean, Shalimar from here to there, tastefully attired, and begins watching the game and referring to her watch, and finally she says, "You know what would really be funny - if I got stood up. He was supposed to be here twenty minutes ago."

At that moment, another reject from the other end of the corridor happens by and says to her, 'Well, gee, haven't you kept him waiting long enough, Janie?' And as all members turn to glare at the newcomer she suddenly blanches and grimaces and mumbles, "Well, didn't you hear me call you? I answered your phone and well that was, oh, twenty minutes ago, and well, . . ." as Janie tears down the hall screaming, "Oh, no, he'll hate me, oh, no!"

And you all look at each other and nod and by the time she crawls back up you've dealt her in for double (oh, irony!) honeymoon whist.

And finally, you're all consoled to the fact that you're really staying in, and that guys are just one big worry after another and who needs it and just as you're squelching the "I do" the phone rings and you're all ready to rush at the throat of the person on the other end of the line, but it turns out to be oh wondrous day, the boy of your dreams who tells you to get yourself downstairs because he just can't live without you another second.

And as you scream "GUESS WHO THAT WAS?" and virtually jump into you're best outfit (which luckily had been returned) everyone stares at you and bursts into tears, but somehow you know where you're loyalty lies, and you KNOW it ain't there.

SMOKE NOW PAY LATER

Vanity, thy name is woman! Questioned on whether they worry more about losing their teeth in their twenties and thirties or developing lung cancer in middle age, women smokers admitted to researchers at Roswell Park Memorial Institute that they are more concerned at the prospect of being toothless.

The study pointed out that women smokers are twice as likely as non-smokers to develop advanced mouth disease before 40, and to risk the loss of their teeth.

Of course, it is not really an either/or proposition. Smokers can lose their teeth soon AND develop lung cancer later.

Yale Professor Speaks On Roman Comic Element

Erich Segal, Associate Professor of Classics and Comparative Literature at Yale will speak on "Plautus' Menaechmi: Roman Comedy of Errors" at 8 p.m. in SBA 116 on March 5.

His lecture at UMass will examine the uniquely Roman comic element in Plautus' famous comedy of errors, and will touch upon Shakespeare's equally famous adaptation of the Latin play. The lecture is open to the public.

In addition to a highly successful career teaching classical and modern literature at Yale University, Mr. Segal has established a considerable reputation for himself in American theater and cinema. He has written scripts for several musical comedies, including the Richard Rodgers production YOU CAN'T GET THERE FROM HERE, and he was the designer and co-scenarist of the YELLOW SUBMARINE. He has just published a book titled ROMAN LAUGHTER: THE COMEDY OF PLAUTUS. Presently he is collaborating again with producer Al Brodax in an animated movie edition of Apuleius' second century classic, THE GOLDEN ASS.

Local Artists Perform At OH Concert Series

After a semester relapse, the Orchard Hill Concert Series has once again been revived. All concerts are on Sunday evenings and are held in the main lounge of Grayson dormitory. They usually begin at 7 p.m. They are free and open to the University at large.

The goals of the Series are twofold: first, to augment the cultural atmosphere of the University and second, to give local artists a unique opportunity to expose their works to small intimate audiences.

The first recital in the series was last Sunday night where a respectable turnout witnessed Dr. Stern, composer and faculty fellow to Eugene Field, give an enlightening introduction to the upcoming Faculty Recital to be held in Bowker Auditorium tonight Feb. 25, 1969). Dr. Stern also played an original composition entitled "Fantasy Piece".

Lebow Memorial Concert Benefits Scholarship Fund

The University of Massachusetts music department has announced the program for Music by University Composers, the Howard M. Lebow memorial concert to be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The benefit concert for the Lebow Memorial Scholarship Fund will feature works composed and arranged by members of the UMass music department. Composers Charles Fussell and Robert Stern, both assistant professors of music, and Dr. Philip Bezanson, professor and chairman of the music department, will be represented.

A highlight will be the first performance of Stern's Fantasy Piece (1969) written in memory of Lebow and played by the composer on the piano.

The program will consist of Fussell's Dance Suite (1963), the fourth movement of Fussell's Symphony No. 2 for Soprano and Large Orchestra (1967), reduced for two pianos and percussion, Bezanson's Duo for Cello and Piano (1965), and Prelude and Dance for Brass Sextet.

The scholarship fund was established last year in memory of Howard Lebow, pianist and UMass assistant professor of music, killed in January of 1968. The scholarship will be awarded annually to the undergraduate or graduate music major who "demonstrates the highest standards of artistic achievement."

Redman Sextet Clobbers Holy Cross, 9-1, Ties Mark

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

WORCESTER - One record was broken and another tied as the UMass hockey team skated to a 9-1 victory over Holy Cross last night at Worcester Arena.

The Redmen tied a team record for the most wins in a season as they notched their ninth win tying the '30-'31 and '61-'62 teams. Jeff Sanborn became the top scorer in UMass hockey history with 81 points, as he tallied the hat trick.

UMass broke the game wide open in the second period when they scored seven times after having only a 2 to 1 lead after the first 20 minutes.

Joe DiCicco opened the scoring as he fired the puck in from short range midway through the opening stanza. Frank Hartig scored the equalizer with a 15 footer into the corner of the net.

Sanborn gave UMass the lead at 19:59 of the period taking a pass from Jim O'Brien at the corner of the crease and firing the puck in. Sanborn started the second period barrage with a break away goal after Rocky Stone broke him loose with a long pass from the defensive zone.

Two minutes later Tom Peters knocked in the fourth UMass goal on a rebound. Bill McMann tallied the third UMass goal of the period as he lifted his rebound into the top of the net.

Nine seconds later Bob Madore took a Charlie Hanifan pass and put in a ten footer from directly in front.

Hanifan then tallied the record breaking goal on another break-away lifting the puck over fallen Crusader goalie, Fred McReady.

Hanifan scored his second goal of the game at 15:26 when he knocked in a rebound of a Paul Riley shot. Fifteen seconds later Madore rapped in his second goal of the game after taking a Hanifan pass.

Although there was no scoring in the third period the Redmen applied pressure but only some fine goal tending by Holy Cross' McCready kept them off the scoreboard.

In the last five minutes of the game action grew a little rougher resulting in UMass playing two mer short for the remainder of th game.

UMass now stands 9 and 11 for the season overall with 9-9 record in division two play. Holy Cross is now 10-5-1. The victory was also the 199th in the fifty years of Redman hockey.

Big pointmen for the night were Hanifan and Madore with two goals apiece and two assists. Sanborn chipped in with his hat trick.

A BIG NIGHT - Bill McMann (left) had four points on two goals and two assists while Jeff Sanborn had the hat trick. Sanborn's scores made him the all-time UMass scorer with 81 points. Final game is Thursday at UNH.

Gymnasts Host Springfield Meet of the Year

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

The varsity gymnastics team will host Springfield College tonight in what has been billed as the meet of the year. The undefeated freshmen will also meet with Springfield. Time for the frosh meet is 4:30 p.m. in the Auxilary Gym with the varsity on at 7:30 p.m.

The teams stack up evenly with a slight edge being given to the Redmen on the basis of event scores for the season. Coach Erik Kjeldsen says though, " I don't feel that this will be any sort of an indication of the final outcome."

UMass sustained a very close loss to Army earlier in the season and to Navy just last weekend. Springfield College has beaten both of these teams also by narrow margins.

The outcome of the meet will hang on the team that will stand up the best under pressure. "Just like Army," says Kjeldsen, "the meet will not be determined until the last man in the last event is through competing."

Springfield has a well-balanced team and if any event is singled out as their outstanding one, it is the high bar. Unfortunately, last weekend, it was the Redmen high bar team which broke against Navy. UMass' strength lies in the floor exercises, rings and parralel bars.

The meet will be highlighted by several personal battles between Bay State high school stars. Dave Ellis from the Chiefs was a classmate of Joe Reed and George Seibert at Braintree. Reed was the 1966 High School All Around Champion and he beat Richie Martin for this honor. Martin will be competing as an all-around man for Springfield.

Coach Kjeldsen will be going with the same lineup as he used against Navy with only some minor position shuffles. Co - captains Mike Kasavana and Dick DelGallo will be competing in the floor exercises. These two performers have had outstanding seasons and done consistently fine jobs in each meet.

They will be backed up by Bill McAuley and all-around men Seibert and Reed. Norm Vexler, another fine performer, also competes in this event.

For the side horse event, Ed Jones, Frank Dean, Rich Reilly and Vexler will be handling the chores. Seibert, Reed and DelGallo form the nucleus of a strong ring outfit.

Jones, Vexler, Henry, Reed and Steve Cary will do the honors on the long horse vault. DelGallo Henry, and Reed will also be competing in the parallel bars with Vexler and Cary.

In the final action of the night, McAuley, Reed, Seibert and Vexler will be performing in the high bar event.

For the frosh, Coach Julius Gundersheim calls this "the most important meet of the year." There will also be some personal battles among former high school classmates. "We've only beaten Springfield once before, " he says, "but I'm pretty sure we'll take them."

Outstanding performers during the season for the frosh have been Tony Vacca and Doug Salisbury, all-around competitors.

URI Friday, N.I.T. Bid?

In a day that saw initial post season tourney bids go out, the UMass basketball team was left with nothing to do as the result of a postponement of their contest with Rhode Island scheduled for tonight.

Roads in the Kingston area were too poor for safe travel, so by mutual agreement the Redmen-Ram clash has been rescheduled for Friday, presumably at the same 7:35 starting time. The freshman contest between the two schools will not be played.

The new game date means that UMass will be forced to play two games in two nights. The Redmen meet St. Anselm's in the home finale Thursday.

So far as tourney consideration goes, UMass is out of the NCAA race. Villanova, Duquesne, and St. John's all received and accepted bids to the national tourney, thus occupying all three at-large berths available in the east.

UMass' coaches now lie with a National Invitational bid, a circumstance that is cloudy. The N. I.T. field is 16 and usually is not filled for several days. Therefore, UMass' post season play opportunities could be up in the air for a time.

Number 9 of Washington Faces The Press

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP)- Ted Williams put on a Washington uniform for the first time Tuesday, proved he still had an adoring public and explained he had accepted the job of managing the Senators because of "my real love and guts for baseball and money."

Alternately displaying some brashness, even at age 50, and obvious nervousness, Williams charmed a small audience of players and a large audience of fans and press in his first day on the job.

He turned serious when the talk centered around his decision to take on the job of managing, a job which he had called the loneliest and most thankless in the world in the more than eight years since he last swung a bat on Sept. 28, 1960.

"I didn't think I would ever be ready to think about managing," said Williams as he sat in the dugout midway through the workout. "But a lot of things happen in nine years, and when you've been a baseball player as long as I was, you always have a love for baseball.

"I never did particularly think that I could be a manager, but the circumstances were right, the timing was right to induce me to take the job. I had had eight or nine years of fishing all over the world and it wasn't quite as much fun anymore.

"Call it my real love and guts for baseball and money."

Williams reached the ball park before 9 a.m. and spent 1-1/2 hours with his coaches and the 22 players on hand.

NEW YORK (AP) - Teams for the Eastern College Athletic Conference's eighth annual hockey tournament were announced yesterday.

Seven of the eight teams were definitely picked. The eighth berth will go to either Brown or St. Lawrence, depending upon their records at the season's end.

The seven are top-seeded Cornell, Harvard, Boston College, Boston U., Clarkson, RPI and New Hampshire.

First round games will be played March 4 at sites to be determined by the teams. The semi-finals and final will be played March 7and 8 in the Boston Garden.

Girl Gymnasts Win Two

Girls Gymnastics Team scored two more wins over the weekend. In a close competition, Varsity girls won over Southern Connecticut and East Stroudsburg, with UMass scoring 86.65, Southern Connecticut 83.30 and East Stroudsburg 53.00.

In JV competition, UMass girls won every event, scoring 59.9, Southern Conn. second with 45.3 and East Stroudsburg third with 39.1.

Margie Sims was the most outstanding performer in Varsity Competition and Debbie Carter in the JV meet.

This weekend the UMass girls will be competing in Eastern Regional Champsionship at East Stroudsburg, Penna.

Constitutional Convention Convenes Moves Election of Officers to March

By ANNE GIARDINA
Senate Reporter

The Constitutional Convention composed of the Student Senate and the class officers convened last night. It voted to move the elections of Senate officers up to March and to eliminate the requirement of "good standing" for Senate membership.

Governor's Conference Supports "Get-Tough" University Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) - The executive committee of the National Governors Conference gave support Wednesday to a "get tough" policy to end disruptions on the nation's university campuses.

The committee issued a statement after extended discussion of the effect of campus turmoil. Several governors said the current university atmosphere is making it extremely difficult to persuade the general public of the need for more funds for higher education.

The governors' statement read: "The executive committee of the National Governors Conference extends its full support to the President of the United States relative to the preservation and advancement of higher education which is being jeopardized on many of the nation's campuses.

"Lawless acts by a small segment of the student population must not be allowed to interfere with the vast number of students who are seeking to exercise their educational opportunities.

"We join with others who share a responsible role in pledging actions which will ensure the continuation of these opportunities."

Tuesday President Nixon issued a statement endorsing the policies of the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University.

Hesburgh said that students disrupting classes would be given 15 minutes for meditation and would be expelled if they continued disruptive action.

He said nonstudents would be arrested and prosecuted.

Debate on the date of Senate elections centered around the inexperience of the incoming officers. Vice-president Hartwell opposed the bill on two grounds; first, as a general rule, "when legislation is passed it is made effective at a later date" and second "that officers should preside over one continuous session". The vice-president commented that in the spring many important issues come up and it is important to have experienced people around. President Silverman countered with the fact there was more experienced help around in the spring than in the fall. He also pointed out there was room for learning in the execution of an office. An amendment to the bill introduced by Senator Paul Johnson to make the bill effective in 1970 was defeated. The main bill passed 46-31.

Following the suspension of three senators for academic reasons a bill was introduced to amend the SGA Constitution by striking the words "in good standing and" and substituting the words "who is' . The question raised by Senator Raskin was "should the people in these three dormitories elect the people they want."

Senator Sheehan spoke for the bill as he commented that he felt there should only be two ways to remove a senator, 1) a Senate vote by a two-thirds plurality and 2) a recall by the constituencies of the house. "People should be allowed to elect whomever they want," stated Sheehan.

An amendment, introduced by Senator Perkins, substituting academic probation for good standing was defeated as several senators brought out the fact that academic probation is an administrative ruling and gives them a hold over the Senate. Senator Brad Johnson stated that "discipline probation would put the senate under the hands of various bodies," that is, of his own judiciary.

Senator Madden observed that debating the amendment would "open a door to an outsider" (administration) "to determine Senate membership."

Secretary Olken told the Senate that it was up to the individual to schedule his studies. She said she felt that academic probation was meant to be a warning with action to be decided by the student himself.

Kilmartin, in speaking for the opposition, urged defeat of the bill because of its ambiguity. He supported the defeated amendment to replace good standing with academic probation for, as he put it, "it clearly defines for grounds of expulsion or membership without bringing in the personality factor." Kilmartin stated that by eliminating good standing the Senate was setting up double standards and was ruling itself separate from any other body on campus.

Blanchette reminded the senators that their main reason for being here was to study. He raised the question, "If one is not good a student, how can he be a student leader."

The bill did not pass, on a ruling by President Silverman as a two-thirds majority was needed. Controversy arose over the interpretation of Silverman's ruling. In a surprise move, the Senate reversed its previous decision and voted opposition to the President's decision which passed the bill.

Curfews Abolished For Women Students

By NEAL NOVACK

Curfews for all woman students at the University were officially abolished Tuesday, Feb. 25, in an announcement made by Dean Field to campus area coordinators.

All heads of residence were, in turn, notified of the curfew decision. The elimination of curfews was the result of unanimous recommendations made by the Faculty-Senate-Student Affairs Committee to Dean Field.

No formal legislation was involved, although before any action could be taken, Parent News Letters had to be sent to all freshmen parents to inform them of the policy change concerning curfews. The news letters, which were delayed in publication almost four weeks, were mailed about ten days ago.

Announcement of no-curfews by Dean Field was postponed about a week to allow the news letters sufficient time for delivery. The 1969-70 University Hand Book will include the new no-curfew policy.

Initially, the modification for curfews was restricted only to upper class women students. This limitation allowed for a period of transition and admustment for the students. "Students had to have a feeling for campus social structure and to be given a chance to make independent decisions,' says Dean Field. The independence from curfews for all women students has now been realized.

Anti-Dow Protestor's Case Cont'd to June by Judge Ryan

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

NORTHAMPTON - The cases of 33 protestors arrested and charged with trespassing in the anti-Dow sit-in of February 13 were continued yesterday in Northampton District Court after the case had been argued.

Judge Luke Ryan withheld judgment on the cases until June 6 when "with no further cause to change my mind, I will be receptive to a motion to dismiss the charges."

Ryam made this decision following a conference in his chambers with District Attorney Oscar Grife and defense attorney Isidore Silver. He explained "I am reluctant to give all you young people, particularly those under 20, criminal records."

However, the judge warned the defendants and their "friends and associates" that "any further activity such as this will be dealt with severely . . . there will be no more continuances."

The charges stemmed from the demonstration at the placement office at Whitmore in which thirty-three were removed bodily from the building by the State Police.

Dean of Students William F. Field testified that he had informed the demonstrators that by remaining in the administration building after 5 p.m. they were in violation of University regulations, and if they didn't leave, they would be removed.

He continued that the protestors showed no intention of leaving the building and the State Police were then called.

Dean Field added that the group was given several opportunities to leave before the police arrived.

Defense attorney Silver moved the charges be dismissed on the grounds that Field had not told the group that he was an authorized agent of the building's owner. The motion was denied.

Before he continued the cases Judge Ryan remarked that he had found that a "law had been broken."

And on Sunday there will be a plenary session in the morning followed by a second series of workshops in the afternoon ending at approximately 3 p.m.

The workshops will include the following areas:

(1) Introduction to SDS.

(3) High school organizing.
(4) The SDS ERAP experience - a critical history of community organizing in SDS.
(5) Women's Liberation.
(6) Education for Capitalism.
(7) Critique of Liberalism.
(8) Racism and Black Liberation struggle.

Among the "outside resource people'' to be at the Assembly are Vernon Grizzard (from the "Old Mole", and a New England organizer of SDS), Marty Sklar (Univ. of Rochester SDS) and Steve Hallwell (New York University SDS).

Spring is coming to Amherst and so is the Spring Fashion Special. Why don't you get in on the action too - be the Collegian Model of the year.

Kennedy Proposes Draft Change

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D- MASS.) has introduced a bill that would drastically reform current draft laws. Included was a provision that would end student deferments under war conditions similar to those at present.

The Kennedy proposal would permit students to postpone their exposure to the draft unless casualties "in a shooting war reach 10 per cent of those drafted in a given month. At that time, no more student deferments would be granted.

Further, a student deferment would be merely a postponement, not a permanent exemption. A young man would only be exempt "during the course of bona fide studies" to be defined by law. Currently, individual schools and local draft boards define whether a student is making satisfactory progress toward a degree.

Kennedy feels the lack of a uniform national standard for student deferments is indicative of the whole draft operation. And, he believes, student deferments are a major inequity. "The draft does not operate fairly. It operates unfairly, inequitably, and unevenly," he said on the floor of the Senate Tuesday. "Because it does, it should be changed - changed not in one or two years from now, but changed this year."

He called on President Nixon to issue an executive order to help eliminate some of those injustices before the law could be passed and enacted. He recommended for the President to order that occupational deferments be ended, the youngest be drafted first, standards be made more uniform, and that selective service procedures be modernized.

Kennedy urged similar steps during the Johnson administration in the form of a Senate resolution, but this time he did not make them official. He said he believes Nixor "intends to make a determined effort at draft reform."

The new president has said he favors an all-volunteer army. Defense Secretary Melvin Laird said recently that a lottery system might be tired until the draft can be ended.

Kennedy included a random selection method in his bill, but said he feels an all-volunteer army is not "realistic policy for the immediate future."

The proposed legislation also extends conscientious objector status to atheists and agnostics now protected only by court decisions and prohibits a draft board from punishing a registrant who participates in an anti-war demonstration by drafting him. It provides for right to counsel in appeal proceedings.

The bill also would establish four studies, one of which would consider the desirability of granting amnesty to youths who fled the country to avoid the draft. Kennedy pointed out that there is precedent for such amnesty.

The other studies will consider nonmilitary service alternatives, an all-volunteer army, and rehabilitation programs for volunteers who fall below induction standards.

Kennedy's bill is the second major piece of legislation on the draft to be offered this session. Sen. Mark Hatfield (D-Ore.) introduced a bill aimed at making an all-volunteer army feasible by raising pay and other benefits of military service.

Continuing Snow Cripples East

BOSTON (AP) - Eastern New England's snowstorm situation continued to worsen Wednesday, and Civil Defense officials in Massachusetts said the situation was on the verge of becoming critical.

Except for occasional periods snow has been falling since early Monday, and total accumulations late Wednesday ranged from two to more than five feet.

The U. S. Weather Bureau here said another two to five inches could be expected by Thursday morning.

"The problem now involves the possibility of the storm continuing for another 24 hours and the fatigue of men and equipment," state Civil Defense Director Allen R. Zenowitz said.

Repair crews and service crews and volunteers are beginning to exhaust themselves," Zenowitz said, adding that the snow fall was beginning to take a heavy toll in equipment breakdowns also.

An Associated Press count showed 27 storm-related deaths in the region, most due to heart attacks brought on by over-exertion.

Roof collapses were a growing problem, although none reported by Wednesday evening resulted in serious injury.

The roofs of a department store and supermarket in Lynn, Mass., caved in beneath the weight of the snow early Wednesday. In Quincy, Mass., a shopping center overhang gave way. Part of a high school roof fell in in Foxboro, Mass., and in Attleboro, Mass., nearby, part of a warehouse roof fell in.

Power failures presented another problem of immense proportions. Brisk winds sent snow-laden tree limbs tumbling, and often they severed utility lines as they fell.

Most major highways remained passable, but in many areas sanding and plowing crews were having great difficulty keeping secondary roads open. Officials urged that travel be undertaken only if absolutely necessary.

Rail and bus service was slow or non existent, and several airports - among them Boston's Logan International Airport - remained closed.

Even some ski areas in northern New England were closed because access roads couldn't be kept clear.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

Campus Disorders

CAMPUS DISORDERS ROUNDUP (AP) - Two Negro colleges-Wiley College in Marshall, Tex., and Stillman College in Tuscaloosa, Ala. - were shut down Wednesday in the wake of student demonstrations.

At the University of California, a fire bomb was thrown into Haviland Hall on the Berkeley campus early Wednesday, causing minor damage. Three small fires broke out outside athletic department offices late Tuesday night.

Northwestern University - About 150 students held an all-night sitin or meet-in in Scott Hall of the Evanston, Ill., school. The dean of students, Roland J. Hinz, ordered the building left open. The students left before 7 a.m.

Oregon State University - The Black Student Union at the Corvallis, Ore., school scheduled a boycott of classes and athletics, protesting what it called discriminatory practices. The union said a football coach ordered a black student to shave.

Rutgers University - A brief fight broke out involving a white student and several Negro students on the Newark campus, where a building had been seized by a militant Negro organization.

The part of Hedy LaRue, former Copa cutie who wiggles her way into World Wide Wickets as Mr. Biggley's "friend," will be played by Maria D'Angelo, a sophomore majoring in psychology. She sang and danced in the chorus of "Li'l Abner."

Franny Botelho, a sophomore education major, plays Miss Jones, Mr. Biggley's "frightening' secretary. Last fall she played Mammy Yokum in "Li'l Abner." Bud Frump, Mr. Biggley's nephew, whom Finch outwits on the climb to the top of the executive ladder, will be played by Rob Peters, a junior majoring in wildlife.

He appeared in the choruses of "Once Upon a Mattress' "Li'l Abner" and "Annie Get Your Gun."

The rest of the 30-member cast includes various secretaries, executives, and office employees.

"How to Succeed . . ." will be directed by Mike Walker, a junior theatre major, with musical direction by Roger Samuelson, choreography by Connie Kreemer and technical direction by Barbara Dimock.

Production dates are April 10, 11, and 12, at Amherst Regional High School.

The Apathetic Individual

On the surface, the Dow demonstration, and all of its various repercussions, looks to be simple, cut and dried issue. Most people have formed their opinions of it on the basis of this surface view, without taking time to consider and discuss the deeper, more subtle reasons which led to the demand for an end to military-industrial recruiting.

The major problem faced by those who support this demand, in their attempt to persuade others, is the refusal of the typical student to think about the government.

In a democracy, the government should REFLECT the ideals of the citizens, not CREATE them. Because the government and the other institutions in the country have been manipulating the individual for so long, the individual is now overcome with a feeling of powerlessness. He fails to understand the motives of those who do not have this feeling.

The individual has been conditioned to unthinkingly accept the ideals and opinions of others, and no longer even bothers to evaluate them. Therefore, when he learns that the government is in Viet Nam, although he would not have it that way, he accepts it as he thinks he must.

But there is a very small minority which refuses to accept these beliefs formulated and handed down by the government. This minority is against Dow Chemical, and the military-industrial complex which it represents, recruiting on this campus because of their part in this manipulation of the individual.

This military-industrial complex has surrendered morality for profit, in dollars and cents. They assist in the slaughter in Viet Nam, and overlook the starving millions in our own country.

Dow Chemical has no place recruiting at this University, or any university. The demonstration was directed at Dow because of its proximity at the time, and because of the limited perspective of most people, but the real enemy is the entire system under which we live, and the real goal to change it. Before this can be accomplished, the individual must be reached, and the time to begin is now.

KATHY BIGGANE

A Personal Issue

Two weeks ago the Student Senate voted in favor of continuing the policy of open recruitment, of providing industries with the facilites for on-campus interviews. Most thought that this issue would then be closed; at least for the present. The demonstration the following day, however, proved differently. Confronted with a policy that was obviously favorable to the majority, the dissenters contended that certain issues cannot be justified by mere majority rule. Support of fifty per cent plus one does not determine the morality of an act.

However, a decision has to be made on what is an intangible issue. Morality can be argued and debated; but only to a certain point. It then reaches a state where only the individual can decide what is right or wrong; and only for himself. The determination as to the morality of open recruitment must be a personal one.

A university exists to serve its students. At UMass the vast majority of students are here for one purpose, the acquiring of knowledge and the diploma which will provide them with affluency. Idealists may find nothing but contempt for this philosophy, but where are they given the privilege of forcing their morality upon others? Therefore, the University, in serving the needs of its students, provides placement services giving industrial recruiters the facilities necessary for conducting interviews.

The students who were interviewed by Dow and Olin-Mathieson were not brought there in chains or were they in any manner coerced into making appointments. The decision was completely theirs. Those who were in opposition to recruitment by these representatives, representatives of the military - industrial establishment were allowed to voice this opposition. Action was taken against them only when it became evident that the normal conduct of university business was being interfered with and when the rights of others were being infringed upon.

Open recruitment has to be left up to the students. As long as the majority are clearly in favor of such a policy the University has no alternative. It must meet their mandate.

Real Men

To the editor:

It is reassuring to know that there are still some red-blooded American boys left, like the 40 or so who broke two windows in Kennedy last night (Tues.) with snowballs. We can be thankful that there are still some "normal" kids left, and that not everybody has turned into a long haired drug freak, communist.

Frustration

To the Editor:

I spent a frustrating hour Tuesday in the Colonial Lounge. It was spent listening to President Lederle talking with students. He made very few definitive statements in answer to statements. One exception was his description of the University as tripartide community, whose purpose was discussion within that community. Another exception was his statement that he refrains from giving his personal opinion on univeristy matters. It is frustrating to wonder whose opinions President Lederle does espouse. In a community devoted to tripartide discussion, I would like to know who is talking for the administration. If it isn't President Lederle, who is it? And more important, can the university's other two sections talk directly to that third party?

Staties

To the editor:

I read with dismay and disgust the gross misrepresentation of the facts presented by Richard H. Staples, in your "Campus Comment' section, dated Monday, February 17. Who is he attempting to impress? That same group of "fellow students' he so touchingly refers to in the last paragraph of his letter?

I was in Whitmore, on the night of the demonstration, from approximately 10:06 p.m., until after 12:00. The arrests were made at approximately 12:48, or thereabouts. I was there as a representative of my campus paper, the YELLOW JACKET, and as a representative of both the PALMER JOURNAL-REGISTER, and the WARE RIVER NEWS. True, the State Troopers were outfitted in riot gear, and true, they arrived en masse. But where was Staples when the arrests were made? He claims the "Troopers had to be restrained by their officers. I was within five feet of the arrest scene, and I witnessed no excessive abuse of even one demonstrator, nor any restraint being exercised by any of the officers present, beyond the repeated statement - and it was a statement, not an admonition, "Take it easy, they want to go.' If that constitutes the amount of "restraint' Mr. Staples implies was necessary, I suggest he look the word up in his Funk and Wagnall's.

Fuethermore, if Mr. Staples had taken the time to notice a few other phenomena, he would have seen, as I did, the expressions of uncertainty on the faces of the State Troopers - most of whom were little older than the persons they were ordered to arrest. Those troopers were not experienced combat troops. They were young, inexperienced men exposed to what was in all likelihood their first assignment of this nature. Some of the students were offered rides back to the campus from Northampton, by the same men who had arrested them, but Mr. Staples' distortion of fact allows no room for sidelights of that nature.

Recognition

To the editor:

I would like to know why the DAILY COLLEGIAN did not publicize the winners of the Winter Carnival snow sculpture contest. The only coverage given was a small picture of Alpha Tau Gamma's sculpture. Why should the COLLEGIAN discriminate? There were also winners in the sorority, dorm and combination divisions. I think these groups deserve recognition by their newspaper. After all, the COLLEGIAN is supposed to cover University news.

Audio-Visual Department Serves Campus Despite Lack of Darkroom and Resources

There is no student on this campus who has not used in some way the university's Audio-Visual Department. The A-V Department is now located in Thompson Tower, its fourth home. The service provided by the A-V Department encompasses a wide spectrum of educational aids.

The busiest part of the A-V Department is its graphic arts section. Graphic arts is the transfering of ideas into pictorial form. Other activites concern the producing of slides for overhead projection from any other picture or object. There is also a library of films and other photographic material. Repair services for all equipment used is also one of the departments responsibilities.

The most promising aspect of the Audio-Visual Department is its association with the North Eastern Region for the School of the Deaf. This is a separate organization but works with the A-V Department. The North Eastern Region provides all types of audio-visual aids to teach deaf children to read, write and mainly to speak. It is a federally supported service.

The A-V Department and the N.E.R. may offer a new program to be established next fall. As a sophomore, a student can choose to study the field of audio-visual aids as it is related to teaching deaf children and in three years obtain a Masters Degree. This is in excess to the regular courses given by the A-V Department.

Through all this comes one problem. The Audio-Visual Dept. does not have its own darkroom as such. What little developing of photographic material there is is done in a converted bathroom. A request was made since last September to put up a wall to section off space for an adequate darkroom. However, it is only this week that the wall may be built.

Therefore a majority of photographic developing has been forced on the Photo Center which is the administration's primary source of pictorial news and public relations. They also make movies for UMass.

The Audio-Visual Department's makeshift darkroom shows a lack of equipment for developing complicated films or slides.

Generally both services have been short changed in their lack of required resources. The A-V Dept. has been forced by the lack of a darkroom to rely on the Photo Center. The Photo Center needs some of the facilities of the Audio-Visual Dept., mainly a graphic arts section.

Expansion of these two services is limited by a lack of funds, but the two services are working together to fulfill the great demands of the University.

There are 3,049 counties, 18,048 municipalities, boroughs and cities, 17,105 townships and 21,264 special government districts in the nation.

Smith Confers Honorary Degree Upon Black Mississippi Lawyer

An America of "two societies" -black and white - was warned against by a black woman lawyer here Saturday.

"We've got to get together, or we'll tear each other apart," said Marian Wright Edelman, 29. She is the first and only black woman ever to pass the Mississippi State bar exam.

After receiving an honorary doctor of laws degree from the college in a Washinton's Birthday observance, she told the audience of students and faculty members that "blacks have been a part of the history of this country since Washington's time. The nation's colleges "should have long ago had "black studies" as part of their curriculum and "better admissions policies for black students."

The former NAACP lawyer in Mississippi is a graduate of Spelman College and Yale Law School. Her four years of legal work for the NAACP was handling desegregation suits, equal employment and welfare cases and integration of public facilites. She is presently director of the Clark College Center for Public Policy's Washington Research Project, which aims at establishing a structure for representing the poor before administrative agencies.

Smith's President Thomas C. Mendenhall, in conferring the honorary degree upon Mrs. Edelman, said: "The Western world has chosen truly to emancipate women only in the last century, and our country has been tragically slow to make the promises of the American ideal a reality for our black fellow citizens. To make the differences between us as individuals a source of strength and happiness rather than a blight or a barrier to opportunity for ourselves and our society represents perhaps the greatest challenge of our time. Faced with being black and a woman you have triumphantly overcome these differences...."

Introducing MONTREAL

"In case you haven't heard, the hordes of Americans who saw Expo 67 came home with the news that Montreal is a really swinging town. True to its Gallic traditions, Montreal is a city of delightful restaurants and cafes. Dining well is important to Montrealers (it will be to you, too) and much of the city's social life is carried on in such gourmets' rendezvous as Chez Bardet. The younger crowd gathers in charming little spots like Chez Fanny, where between courses of delicious Provencal food and chansons by strolling troubadours, you can play a lively game of petanque on the central court. Another intime bistro that attracts an interesting crowd is the Club des Moustaches, where the waiters (obviously) all have moustaches and the marble-topped tables are spread with typical Parisian fare. In the front part of this building you'll find a cafe called Loulou les Bacchantes, where the local students, artists, and filmmakers hang out. But between epicurean bouts and cafe sessions, take time to see the rest of this up-to-date city. Montreal has a marvelously modern underground shopping center called the Place Bonaventure, which is crowned with one of the most ingenious hotels you've ever seen. Dozens of smart new boutiques have opened on Ste. Catherine Street, and avant-garde art galleries line rue Sherbrooke. Even their discotheques are new and different. One of the most popular, Mousse Spactheque, calls itself a "space-age" discotheque and bombards dancers with lights, music, and even exotic smells."

The above was reprinted from Glamor magazine.

Delta Chi Receives International Charter

This Saturday night Chequers will be hosting the chartering banquet of Delta Chi. The presentation of the charter to the University of Massachusetts Chapter will be made by Dr. Ralph Prusok, Director of Student Personnel Graduate Studies of Kent State, Ohio, and President of the national fraternity.

Delta Chi was founded locally on April 7, 1966, and is now a brotherhood of thirty-seven. It now joins the greater brotherhood of over seventy Delta Chi chapters internationally.

Project 10 Premiers "Electric Carnival"

At Hampden Commons this Saturday from 7:00 till 1:00 Project 10 will be hosting the "Electric Carnival". The carnival will consist of an extravaganza of lights and music. Entertainment will range from a multi-media presentation by Dr. Ryan Drum to the sweet music of jug bands. Hampden Commons will be divided into several sections, each section devoted to a different aspect of the carnival.

In one section there will be a film happening consisting of some very entertaining "nouveau art" movies. Another section will be a Folk Coffee house setting with jug bands, folk guitarists, and poetry readings. The rock group the Inward Eye will be playing in the Discotheque area. A mind expansion room will contain a twelve foot weather balloon that will be bombarded by flashes of colored lights producing an incredible sensory experience.

Dr. Drum will be giving another one of his multi-media presentations that always prove to be enlightening. A head shop will be set up for people who want to buy pipes, posters, peace emblems, and a wide assortment of other articles. Food will be served at a moderate rate during the carnival. Admission is only 50 cents.

The "Electric Carnival" is the brainchild of the Project 10 activities committee headed by Phil Appeli. This is the same committee that brought the movie Magical Mystical Tour to campus last week. The carnival is unique in that it is the first presentation of this calibre to ever be introduced at UMass. If the carnival is successful plans are under way to expand it to several dining commons next year.

UMass Sponsors Exchange Program

Applications for the 1969-70 Exchange Program with the University of New Mexico, University of South Florida, or Florida State University are now available in the Admissions Office, Whitmore Hall.

Mrs. Marjorie Rogers, co-ordinator of the UMass Exchange Program stated that all applications are due April 1. Candidates will be chosen on recommendations, a personal essay stating why the applicant wishes to participate, and his academic record.

Students may apply for either fall or spring semester at New Mexico, or for the entire academic year at University of South Florida. Plans to revive the program with Florida State University at Tallahassee are pending. For further information, contact William Cheney at the Education Building, or Mrs. Rogers in the Admissions Office.

House Un-American Activities Committee Changes Feathers

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The House Committee on Un-American Activities officially changed its name this week to the House Committee on Internal Security, in doing so, it also changed the scope of the Committee's mandate. Besides investigation into people and organizations who attempt to overthrow the government, it now can look into those who incite or employ "acts of force, violence, terrorism, or any unlawful means to obstruct or oppose the lawful authority of the government "in the execution of any law or policy affecting the security of the United States."

An attempt was made on the House floor to abolish the Committee, or at least to block the name change, Congressman Phillip Burton (D-Calif) brought up a Li'l Abner cartoon in which "the Dogpatch City Council met to change the name of the skunk works to the Ozark Perfume Factory."

Cagers Meet St. Anselm's in Final Home Tilt Tonight

Opponents Last Chance To Spoil Frosh Record

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

UMass basketball fans will have their final look at four seniors and the rest of the Redmen, when UMass meets St. Anselm's College tonight at 8 p.m. at the Cage. WMUA (91.1) FM will broadcast. The Little Redman frosh will go for an unbeaten season when they meet the Hawk yearlings at 6 p.m.

John Shockro, John Dreyer, Co-captain Peter Gayeska and Co-captain Joe DiSarcina all will be concluding their UMass hoop careers this season. The contributions of all have been too numerous to mention. Shockro, whose career was hampered by a lost year due to injury has been a key substitute the past two seasons.

Dreyer, has also been an important bench man for the Redmen.

Gayeska, who came to the school as just another big man, has developed through the years to be one of the fine centers in New England. The 6'10 Somerville native is also a sure choice for Yankee Conference first team.

In his three varsity years, Joe DiSarcina has been the team leader in the truest sense of the word. He is the school assist record holder, besides averaging in the double figures. The 5'11 Somerville product, may be sidelined for his final home game due to a persistent leg injury, but he still warrants the acclamation from the hopefully large farewell crowd.

The UMass opponent, in this last Cage encounter, the Hawks of St. Anselm's are presently in the running for a NCAA college division tourney bid. The Hawks are 13-8, including a win streak midway in the season of 6 games.

The big gun for St. A's is guard Jerry McLean. The 6'3 Roxbury native is averaging this season 21.5 points a game. McLean, a senior, is an excellent shooter from outside and has quick moves.

Up front for the Hawks, the man to watch is 6'7 Pittsfield junior Dave Struma, who averages 16.5 points a game and is the leading rebounder.

Starting in one forward spot is 6'2 Gerry Flynn, a junior from Fitchburg who averages 10.8. The other forward has been Bronx, N.Y. sophomore Mike Mulligan, who has averaged eight points. However, 6'5 Mulligan has been injured and his status for tonight is uncertain.

If Mulligan is unable to start, the other forward will probably be John Lukas, a 6'4 sophomre from Hartford, Conn. who is averaging eight points.

At the other guard spot with McLean will be Tom Gentile. A 6' sophomre, the North Adams native is averaging nine points a game.

The Hawks are a tough physical team who will be very agressive defensively. The Redmen who are shooting for a school win record can't look past them.

The UMass frosh have no worries about looking past St. A's because it is their windup to a great season. The Little Redmen, now, 14-0, can become the first undefeated UMass freshman basketball team in recent memory.

The Hawk freshmen are presently 7-6. Their leading scorer is 5'11 Jim Leonard. The Wallingford, Conn. native is averaging 15 points a game. His backcourt mate is Pete Landers, 5'11 from So. Orange, N.J. who averages 10 points.

In the forecort is 6'0 Gerry Ryle from Charlestown, who averages 11 points, Tim Teague, 6'2 from Pelham, N.H. who averages 11.7 and Mike Low from West Roxbury and Boston Tech.

REDMAN RANTINGS - UMass was shutout from the Weekly ECAC team....In fact, the only New England player to be chosen was Vin Colluchi from Providence who was named sophomore of the week... The only N.I.T. bid to be given as of late last night was to Boston College....Joe DiSarcina practiced yesterday with a heavily bandaged leg....His presence in the senior swan song game is uncertain.

Gymnasts Take Thriller, Over Springfield, 154-153

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

When Coach Erik Kjeldsen said yesterday that the winner of the UMass - Springfield gymnastics meet would not be decided until the last man in the last event, he was absolutely right. It wasn't until Joe Reed, the last man to compete in the last event, the horizontal bars, was UMass sure they had won. The margin was paper thin, 154.125-153.475, but it was a well-deserved win.

Springfield was hurt when their star performer, Rich Martin made several costly mistakes, although he redeemed himself in the high bar competition.

In the horizontal bar event, Scott Stover's 8.70, George Siebert's 8.75 and Reed's 8.80 , sealed the win for the Redmen.

After the floor exercise event, the Redmen trailed by one point, 26.46-25.70. Vexler, co-captain Mike Kasavana, Bill McAuley, Reed and Co-captain Dick DelGallo, all turned in strong performances, DelGallo posted a high in that event with an 8.85.

After the side horse, the Redmen had narrowed the score to 50.50 for them and 50.55 for the Chiefs. Ed Jones , Rick Reily, Frank Dean and Vexler, who was high man with 8.60, did a fine job. Martin lost his balance, and this hurt the Chiefs immeasurably. After this, he never seemed to regain his poise.

By the time the still ring scores were computed, the Redmen pulled into the lead, 76.60-75.75. DelGallo competing in his final competition for the Redmen, outdid his past performances and racked up a 9.40. Reed and Siebert chipped in with an 8.60 and 8.10 respectively.

Stover, Reed, Vexler and Steve Cary increased the Redman lead in the long horse vaulting event. The Redmen hung onto their one point lead, 102.575-101.325.

On the parallel bars, Martin slipped for Springfield, but his teammates kept the Chiefs in the running. Going into the decisive horizontal bar competition, the score was UMass 127.875 and Springfield, 127.075.

With a chance to set the all-time record for wins in a season, the UMass hockey team journeys to the snow country of New Hampshire to take on the Wildcats in a 7 p.m. game tonight.

After the decisive 9-1 decision over Holy Cross Tuesday, which gave the Redmen their ninth win of the season and tied a 38 year old record, UMass will be looking for its fifth victory in six games.

New Hampshire is probably the toughest group of skaters that UMass has faced all season. The Wildcats play in Division I of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) which includes Boston College and Boston University.

The Wildcats have been named as one of the eight teams to play in the ECAC post season tourney along with Cornell, BU, BC, and other Eastern powers.

Coach Charlie Holt's skaters lost only six members of last year's 22-7 team which was the best in UNH history.

Top defenseman are team captain Graham Bruder and Pete Stoutenberg, both natives of Canada. Goalie Rick Metzer returns from a fine season last year.

Among the honors gained by UNH this season, is the Yankee Conference crown which they won by beating Vermont, 9-0.

Six seniors will see their final action in Redmen uniforms tonight. Jeff Sanborn, who holds the UMass record for total points and assists, Charlie Hanifan, Jim O'Brien, Tom Babson, and defenseman Rocky Stone and Joe DiCicco are the skaters playing their final game.

POLITICAL HIGHLIGHTS

By JAMES G. COLBERT

U Mass Demonstrators Don't Deserve Aid From Taxpayers

It's about time to face up to the facts and to report that the great majority of college demonstrators are a lot of ill-mannered, unkempt slobs who don't display enough intelligence to warrant their presence in a university classroom.

Never was this more clearly evident that in the recent attempted student sit-in at the University of Massachusetts.

Perhaps fearing stern reaction from Beacon Hill if they did not act swiftly, university officials had 33 students, including seven girls, and a number of others who looked like girls, arrested and hauled off to jail by state troopers.

This is precisely what should have been done except that it should have been done more quickly.

In a Northampton courtroom a number of the demonstrators and their companions displayed the manner in which they are benefiting from the higher education they are receiving, largely at public expense.

Some of the male students - if we can use the term - kept their hats on in the courtroom. Others smoked in the court. Three girl students showed up in dungarees.

The court clerk told them they were guests of the court and had to conduct themselves "like ladies and gentlemen." That of course, was absurd and asking the impossible. He apparently is some kind of a nut.

Subsequently, the clerk ordered police to remove any students who refused to take off their hats or stop smoking. Eventually, he had to open all the windows on a chilly morning to "fumigate" the place so badly had the students smelled up the joint.

Students who undertook to show off in court were warned by the judge that they would be held in contempt and placed in jail if they persisted. He should have thrown a couple of them in the clink right then and there.

Seven girls were cautioned by the jurist that the next time they appeared before him they were to wear dresses. Imagine it being necessary to impart that information to a college student!

This writer can sit back and await the outcome of a demonstration at privately endowed universities such as Columbia and Brandeis.

But when it comes to a state-operated university here in Massachusetts, which is being subsidized by my taxes and where fortunate students are getting an education at bargain basement prices, that's something else again.

One reason taxes are so high in Massachusetts is that we are subsidizing a lot of universities, colleges and junior colleges.

We're willing to continue paying our quota as long as it is being put to good use in helping to provide education for deserving students.

But if slovenly college students, girls in dirty dungarees and boys who look like girls want to demonstrate and stage sit-ins, they can do it at their own expense, not at ours.

Speaking of taxpayer revolts, we'd like to organize an association of prospective picketts who would be ready to get out their signs and march around the administrative office of any publicly financed university where students are permitted to demonstrate, hold a sit-in or otherwise disrupt things for the boys and girls who do appreciate the opportunity to get an education they might not otherwise be able to afford.

Whatever punishment is handed out in court to the 33 students, the university officials should expel them, and members of the Legislature should insist that they do.

The university chaplain who was arrested at his own request so he could accompany the students for booking also merits the heave-ho. He could have done whatever he had to do at the police station without getting himself arrested. He probably has a soft touch at the university. Let him find one off the college campus.

The tax dollars which run those state colleges and universities just don't come that easily.

If we're going to have taxpayer revolts, let's prepare a real good rebellion for those students who do not appreciate the educational opportunities the hardpressed taxpayers of Massachusetts are providing for them.

Rogers Maintains Doubts Over State Police Break-in of Sit-in

By RICHARD W. STORY
State House Bureau

BOSTON - Rep. George Rogers (D-New Bedford), a critic of President Lederle's handling of the recent Whitmore sit-in, told the DAILY COLLEGIAN, in an interview on Wednesday, that he understood why the President acted as he did, although his own doubts as to the necessity for the use of police remained.

Rep. Rogers is House Chairman of the joint legislative Committee on Education.

In a long telephone conversation with Lederle on the Monday following the sit-in, Rogers said that the President had explained his case, and the events as he saw them. Lederle felt convinced that the building had to be secured for the night, and it appeared to him (Lederle) that the only way to achieve this was to have the demonstrators physically removed. Rogers reported that he was unfamiliar with the campus police force; and could not say with any certainty that they could have handled the removal, given its affirmed necessity.

In the several days following the sit-in and arrest of 34 demonstrators, Lederle has been criticized for implying that, once police were summoned, they were in complete charge of the situation. When asked about this matter, Rogers said that, as he saw the present rules and regulations, the president of any state institution retains full command of his campus at all times. Any situations contrary to this were the results of particular agreements, Rogers said, and were not a function of state law. If, as President Lederle has said, the state police were in charge of the Whitmore situation once they had arrived, this was due to prior particular arrangements, said Rogers.

"It makes sense, in terms of a chain of command, to have the police commander in complete control," Rogers said.

When asked about the public relations aspects of the situation, Rogers indicated that his own mail was running quite in favor of Lederle's action; "but perhaps they could have been removed by faculty members, for example." Rogers said that what he had read and heard to date did not dispel all of his reservations about the use of police against a peaceful demonstration.

The question of on-campus recruiting, particularly by companies of the so-called "military-industrial complex," was responsible for triggering the demonstration in the first place. Asked what he thought of the idea of having an appropriate state agency (the Division of Employment Security, for example) assume the burden of operating recruiting at an off-campus location, Rogers indicated that the idea was well worth looking into. Student support for on-campus recruiting is admittedly high, he said, and that might justify keeping the operation on campus in the end; although having the Div. of Employment Security manage recruiting "might be an interesting area to explore."

By CHRIS MCGAHAN
Senior Reporter

In a busy meeting in the Student Union last nite, the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board elected new officers, voted two new policies on a temporary experimental basis, explained other policies, and took preliminary action that could delay the opening of part of the new Campus Center by up to five months.

It was voted by the Board to extend Hatch hours until 2:00 a.m. on an experimental basis for thirty academic days beginning March on a date to be announced. It was also decided to have check-cashing facilities and other services of the lobby counter area open until one hour before the closing of the building, but never later than midnite.

In a unanimous vote, the Board granted permission for the Class of 1969 to operate two bars in the Union on the night of Friday, May 30, in conjunction with Senior Day activities. One bar is to be located in the Commonwealth Room area, the other in the Colonial Lounge. This exception to standard SUG Board policy is subject to final approval by the Administration of a variance to University regulations regarding on-campus consumption of alcoholic beverages. It was stressed at the meeting that, although the exception was for one night only, the decisions of both authorities could have far-reaching effects in terms of precedent.

The SUG Board also took preliminary steps to alter the floor plan for the bottom floor of the Murray Lincoln Campus Center - that portion of the building designed primarily for student activities use - that could delay the opening of this area for as much as five months, at a cost of from $8 - 12 thousand. Assistant Dean of Students Gerald Scanlon defended the changes on the grounds that the increased visibility of student activities would encourage greater student participation in these activities, especially among underclassmen.

There ensued a general discussion of space allotment in the student activities area. There was some feeling that the entire area should be re-examined, particularly the space allotment for the DAILY COLLEGIAN. Editor-in-chief Donald A. Epstein and Student Government Editor Chris McGahan argued that the DAILY COLLEGIAN would be able to function more effectively if it were allotted space in the new Center in close proximity to "the mainstream of campus activity." It was decided that a final decision would be delayed until a later date.

Chairman Susan Brady presided at her last meeting last night. Sander Ross defeated John Hutchison for the office of Chairman, in two other uncontested elections, Roger Gamache was elected Vice Chairman and Bob Twiss, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. William Hogan of the S.U. Business Office explained the necessity for the $ .10 check cashing charge. He noted that the charge had probably eliminated the possibility of the Union operating in the red this year, and that it had also made possible the hiring of additional help to improve the service. He said the cost of the check cashing service was in excess of $10,000 annually. The charge covered personnel salaries, as well as an annual loss of roughly $400 due to bad checks.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

SAIGON (AP) - The enemy's offensive slacked off on its fifth day Thursday but allied forces expected a second and more violent wave of attacks. The opening phase has proved almost as bloody as the big drive a year ago.

Allied sources said 5,300 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong soldiers have been killed in the offensive kicked off Sunday and 321 more have surrendered or defected. The sources reported at least 300 Americans have been killed.

PARIS (AP) - Charles de Gaulle regards President Nixon as representing the United States' last chance to repair its relations with Gaullist France, high-ranking French officials said Thursday.

For this reason the French leader and his advisers are attaching unusual importance to the President's three-day Paris visit starting today.

But French officials, as well as Americans preparing for the presidential visit, see little hope for a dramatic reconciliation of positions. The catalogue of differences is too long and the issues separating the two nations too fundamental to permit quick accommodation, diplomats on both sides agree.

PARIS (AP) - North Vietnam and the Viet Cong teamed in a bitter attack on President Nixon on the eve of his visit to France, and the sixth weekly session of the Paris peace talks ended Thursday without any visible sign of progress.

Tran Bun Kiem of the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front accused Nixon of "camouflaging under beautiful words of peace. . .his black and vile intentions."

MOSCOW (AP) - The official news agency Tass Thursday condemned plans for March 14-8 military exercises in Norway and said the presence of U. S. warplanes would be provocative.

Tass said plans for 12 U. S. Phantom jet fighter-bombers to maneuver with Norwegian troops "testifies to the incessant attempts by the Pentagon to artificially heat up things in various regions of the world, particularly in Europe."

LIMA, Peru (AP) - Long years of Peruvian - American friendship are going by the boards, and there is growing tension, distrust and an increasing possibility of violence.

"Yankee go home" signs are appearing on walls around the city and leftist elements have already held two "anti-imperialist" public demonstrations.

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Close to 800 students at American University in Washington vacated a classroom building early Thursday morning under threat of a court injunction. The building occupation was in response to the administration's refusal to let Dick Gregory use school facilities in connection with his swearing in as president-in-exile of the United States. Although Gregory had already scheduled his inaugural gala elsewhere, students broadened the demands into a reappraisal and restructuring of the university's decision making process.

NEW JERSEY (CPS) Settlements were reached Thursday at three campuses of Rutgers University, The New Jersey State College system.

At the main campus in New Brunswick, Dean of the college, Arnold Grobman met with blacks and agreed to call off classes for Friday, Monday and Tuesday to ease tension and discuss black proposals. He had originally suggested some dates next week, but was "convinced" by the students to start the class-halt Friday.

In Newark, black students vacated Conklin Hall Thursday morning, as University President Mason Gross signed an agreement which substantially granted the Black Organization of Students (BOS) demands.

At Camden Wednesday, President Gross and the University's Dean of Student Affairs Earl Clifford met with black students and agreed to 16 of their 24 demands. Gross also said that as top administrator he would not tolerate racism by any professor or administrator. He added that he himself would initiate preceedings against any university employee guilty of racism.

BERKELEY (CPS) - Despite a driving rain, student strikers and police confronted each other at the University of California at Berkeley for the first time since last week's full scale battles. The strikers marched through campus buildings and surrounding city streets, breaking at least 59 windows.

There were almost as many police on the campus as demonstrators - about 200. The police made 12 arrests and beat at least two persons. One arrested strike leader, Ysidro Macias, was beaten unconscious and hospitalized with severe head injuries. The police broke up several attempts by strikers to block the main campus entrances, driving the demonstrators into the street.

Chancellor Roger Heyns said the strike "has turned into a street war of violence and destruction" and that he would not meet again with leaders of the Third World Liberation Front "until conditions are altered." Heyns was to have met with the strike leaders at 2 p.m. but called off the meeting when chunks of concrete were thrown through two windows in his office.

San Francisco (CPS) -Striking faculty members at San Francisco State College have decided to delay until Sunday a decision on whetner they will return to work. A spokesman for the American Federation of Teachers said they want "to clear up some misunderstandings" in the resolutions passed Wednesday by the State College Board of Trustees. The Trustees voted to establish a new faculty grievance procedure, the AFT'2 key demand, but also declared that there had not been and would not be negotiations with the teachers.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Clay L. Shaw took the witness stand Thursday and in four short words denied that he plotted to assassinate President John F. Kennedy.

"No, I did not," was Shaw's calm denial, in the final defense move before resting its case.

THE CREW OF APOLLO 9, grounded by colds, go for a Monday take off. They are: James McDivitt, David Scott, and Russell Schweikart.

Apollo Flight Postponed to Monday As Astronauts Grounded by Colds

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - The common cold and exhaustion Thursday grounded America's $340-million Apollo 9 earth orbital flight at least three days-from Friday until Monday.

It was the first time after 18 U.S. man-in-space flights that a launching had been delayed by astronauts illness, rather than technical problems, and was "a difficult decision to make," said Dr. Charles A. Berry, chief astronaut physician.

Stuffy noses and sore throats plaguing Apollo 9 astronauts James A. McDivitt, David R. Scott and Russell L. Schweickart, "are improved," he said, "but no one can absolutely guarantee that we will be ready to go Monday."

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said the postponemeat will cost an estimated $500,000, including weekend overtime pay for hundreds of launch crew members.

Berry disclosed in an after - noon news conference that signs of infection were first discovered last Monday in laboratory tests after Air Force Cols. McDivitt and Scott and civilian Scheickart were given a thorough medical examination. NASA did not publicly report the colds until Wednesday.

There was also some concern Thursday that an engine pump in a second-stage engine aboard Apollo 9's huge Saturn 5 booster might cause vibrations during the launch, but officials said a careful data analysis laid these fears to rest.

Ironically it was the human machine that failed - rather than any part of Apollo 9 hardware, the most complex vehicle ever assembled for an American manned space flight.

In recommending a delay, the physician said he took into account a busy schedule during the first five days of Apollo 9's mission-a flight NASA terms "the most ambitious manned space flight to date, including the Apollo 8 lunar orbit mission."

"Apollo 9 is a very ambitious mission and will demand the most from the crew, especially in the first five days," mission director George H. Hage said in agreeing to Berry's recommendation for a delay.

At $340 million, the flight costs almost $30 million more than was required to send the Apollo 8 trio around the moon. The difference, NASA said, is the lunar module, LEM, which did not fly on Apollo 8.

In America's first attempt to transfer astronauts from one space ship to another, McDivitt, Scott and Schweickart are to make the initial manned flight test of a LEM, the spidery craft designed to ferry astronauts from an Apollo command ship in moon orbit to the lunar surface.

During the 10 days circling earth, they are to conduct rendezvous and linkup exercises between the LEM and Apollo 9 command ship and Schweickart plans a two-hour space walk.

NASA said no consideration was being given to fly Apollo 9's back-up astronaut crew-Navy Cmdrs. Charles Conrad Jr. and Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Lt. Cmdr. Alan L. Bean-because they are not far enough along in training to step in on short notice.

President to use his good offices to request that the charge against the arrested students be dropped in court. This was not done; but when asked if he would have liked to see the President request this, Rogers replied that, "Sure, it would have been appropriate." Rogers reported his satisfaction with the outcome of the trial - that sentencing was being delayed until after the end of the school year, and that there was a possibility that there would be no sentence at that time.

In other State House business Wednesday, the joint Education Committee's hearing on House #2690 - a bill proposing a fixed $500 tuition for state institutions of higher education - was delayed by extended testimony on a Senate bill regarding state teacher certification. The latter measure - Senate #632 - brought many hours of testimony from proponents, organized by the Massachusetts Teachers' Association. Sponsored by Sen. Kevin Harrington, the Massachusetts Advisory Council on Education, and others, the bill proposed legislation to establish a commission for teacher certification and preparation.

Affirming that present certification requirements and standards are allowing a great many unqualified teachers into Massachusetts classrooms, the well-organized proponents mounted what approached a filibuster in the hearing room. Beginning well before noon, the advocates of the measure were still on the floor by late afternoon.

The majority of the Education Committee's other business of the day was side-tracked by the certification hearing.

In addition to H2690, another measure, filed by Rep. Rogers - House #1388 - proposed student representation on the boards of trustees of all institutions of higher education under the jurisdiction of the state's Board of Higher Education.

Proposals to provide for tuition-free public higher education, and for the repeal of the law granting fiscal autonomy to the University of Massachusetts and to the state and community colleges were also on Wednesday's agenda.

Keenan Aims for True Image In UMass PR Program

The University Relations Office communicates to the public, through a variety of media, news about what is going on here at UMass.

This is the main objective of the organization, as stated by Charles Keenan, staff administrator and head of its radio and television department.

University Relations attempts to build a "true image" of UMass within the state by giving a balanced picture of what is happening here, he explained in an interview.

"The reason for building an image is that in order for the university to exist successfully it needs and must gain public support," he said.

"If you don't tell people your story, they'll make up stories about you, and usually they'll be bad. The story is here to be told," he added, and University Relations exists to tell it.

The "story' reaches various "publics" of the state in many ways. Large audiences are reached by tapes for radio and television and news releases sent to newspapers. Smaller audiences, such as a group of eight hundred legislators, educators and other opinion-makers, or parents of students, are reached more directly by a newsletter containing information of specific interest and importance to them.

Keenan gave his own "philosophy" on how to inform the public: "The state is my only public" and it is important to "let the public know about the university by showing them its people rather than its building."

Last fall this was accomplished through a series of fifteen weekly educational programs broadcast over WHDH-TV in Boston by the School of Engineering.

"You are bringing information to the public at the same time you let them know you have a top-notch school and a top-notch faculty," Keenan stated, commenting on the success of the series.

Student volunteers, enrolled here in a television production-direction course, were involved in making of the series. The final program of the series was produced entirely by students without assistance from Keenan.

He would like to involve more students in these programs but he is limited by available funds. At present, he is planning a production in which the initial stages will involve students commenting on what is happening on campus.

Future plans of his department include publicizing the Music Department, a syndicated series for radio, as well as some one minute "informative commercials' for television.

Campus Communications Center Seen Immediate Campus Need

By DREW STERGIS Education Staff

Experts in communications are communicating with each other about the set-up of communications courses and services on this campus.

Courses involving various aspects of communications are being offered by the departments of English (Journalism), Speech, Education, and Art with no coordination.

There is no more than casual correlation between the various communications services including ETV, The News Bureau, Five-College Radio, audio-visual aids, campus publications, films, and photography services.

Provost Oswald Tippo has set up a University Committee on the future development of 'Communications - Related Disciplines'"to study these concerns. The committee will submit its report in June but, the chairman reports, the study is now only in its preliminary stages.

The chairman, Professor John Mitchell of the English Department, emphasizes the wide scope of the committee's study which involves the entire campus.

Mitchell told the DAILY COLLEGIAN that the immediate concerns of the committee are the various "housekeeping and administrative functions" involved. He also hopes to end quickly the overlapping of several journalism, speech, and education courses.

Also on the committee is Alvin F. Oikle, Managing Editor of the GREENFIELD RECORDER and campus tutor in journalism. Oickle is especially concerned with the possibilities of establishing a "mass communications center" for the centralization of all of the services and departments involved with communications.

Such a center would be concerned not only with the major departments and services, but also with other areas such as business, economics, government, law, math, and communications research.

Jack Dean, former editor of the MDC, is also on the committee. He views a communications center as a "basically administrative 'resource' center geared to advance technology in communications."

Dean explained that such a center would probably not offer courses of its own; rather it would exist for the intergangement of ideas and for the centralization of resources.

Dean feels that the University publications would benefit from counseling and guidance offered by a communications center.

Also on the committee is a visiting professor from the University of Oregon, John Shephard, who is serving as the provost's consultant on broadcast media. The University of Oregon has recently set up a communications center for broadcast media.

Other members of the communications committee are Jeremiah Allen, associate provost; David Coffing of the Division of Media of the School of Education; Walker Gibson, director of theFreshman English composition courses; Daniel Melley, Editor of the University News Bureau; Stanley Moss of the Psychology Department; Ronald Reid, head of the Speech Department; and Jack S. Wolf, chairman of the Marketing Department of the School of Business.

The Managing Editor of the GREENFIELD RECORDER and MDC technical advisor, Alvin F. Oikle, said a communications center is necessary for effective campus communications.

Nation's Governors Balk at Plan To Investigate Campus Disorders

WASHINGTON (CPS) - California's Ronald Reagan Thursday called for a federal investigation into campus disorders, but other state governors here for their national conference declined to back him.

Regan's resolution, announced at a morning press conference, called for the governors to urge the president and the justice department to investigate the possibility of a conspiracy in disruptive campus protests.

But arguments of states rights and academic freedom - and unfamiliarity with the resolution, the issues, and the implications - kept Reagan's proposal from being accepted.

Instead the group passed a statement adopted earlier by the conference's executive committee that "extends its full support to the President...relative to the preservation and advancement of higher education, which is being jeopardized on many ....campuses."

In a closed session, Gov. Calvin L. Rampton of Utah moved to substitute the committee statement for Reagan's proposal. His motion finally passed unanimously, but only after a proposal to keep Reagan's language in a watered-down form failed. Mississippi's John Bell Williams wanted the governors to "support" a federal probe, not "urge" it as Reaganhad wanted.

Williams said later that the Reagan resolution was "dropped" like a "hot potato."

The California Governor's move did cause some scrambling among governors who insist that educators should have control over their affairs. Michigan's William G. Milliken and Massachusett's Francis W. Sargent appeared at Reagan's press conference, tempering the atmosphere charged by Reagan's reactionary resolution.

Both declined to give unqualified support to Reagan, and stressed that legitimate dissent should not be discouraged. Milliken hesitated to endorse a federal probe. I asked him about the legislature's investigation of his state universities. "I have said to the legislators that they must proceed very cautiously," he replied. " We already have duly - constituted boards with primary responsibility of handling (schools) internal affairs."

Regan then added that he wanted "to associate himself with these remarks about not curbing legitimate dissent." Asked if the presence of federal investigators might not precipitate more trouble on the campus, he spoke of student - provoked violence - fire bombings, even students being beaten by other, radical students.

"We have no evidence of police going out and doing anything of that kind," he said, inspiring guffaws from even the establishment reporters. "But we have evidence to the contrary." Students surrounding individual policemen reminded him of a "lynch mob," he said. "what does a policeman do in self-defense?"

Undergrads to Help Select Next Arts and Sciences Dean

Senate President Paul J. Silverman Wednesday night appointed six undergraduates to an ad-hoc committee to assist in the selection of an Acting Dean for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Appointed were: Richard W. Story, Susan Tracey, Mary Ann DePietro, Cynthia Olken, Charlotte Curci and John DuBois. These students - three non-Senators and three Senators, all from Arts and Sciences, will begin meetings immediately with the Provost and the College's Executive Committee to name an acting successor to I. Moyer Hunsberger, who resigned as Dean on Tuesday.

The naming of an Acting Dean is expected by early next week at the latest, according to President Silverman.

Theatre to Present Plays

The University Theater will celebrate St. Patrick's Day on campus with the presentation of Sean O'Casey's "The Plough and the Stars," March 12, 13, 14, and 15, in Bartlett Auditorium. The curtain will rise each night at 8:30.

Directed by Harry Mahnken, the play deals with the 1916 Easter Rebellion of the IRA in Dublin against the British, and its effect on the Irish who are fighting and those on the sidelines.

Tickets are now on sale at the box office.

On Campus Parking Spaced Out

By KARON THOMPSON
Staff Reporter

In six years the UMass campus will have an estimated 25,000 students, and the number of vehicles parking here each day will be close to 20,000. In view of the presently inadequate student parking facilities and the increasing student enrollment, the Graduate Student Senate created a Parking Committee to examine the situation and attempt to improve it.

Three years ago no problem existed. The former S-lot was large enough to accommodate all cars. However, construction has steadily eliminated about three-quarters of the lot and it is now obvious that commuting student parking needs have been neglected. This remains the central problem, and no new provisions have been made.

Robert P. Ferriter, Parking Co-ordinator, said that today, approximately 7,060 vehicles are legitimately registered. This figure includes faculty, staff, and students. Another 2,000 also park daily on the campus. Yet, to accommodate these 9,000 vehicles are only 6,025 available lots. In June '69 1,000 more will be ready, plus an additional 1,000 with the completion of the underground garage. But this is still insufficient.

Ferriter said, "We are now a small city, with all the ills of a city. And in any city parking is a problem".

Many problems stem from non-registred vehicles violating parking provileges. However, Allan Hartwell, Chairman of the Parking Committee, said that, "The University reneged on it's end of the offer. There is not enough parking space for those with legal rights. I very strongly feel that if there were adequate facilities then students would go along with rules and regulations."
